THE GOSPEL MESSENGER

"SET FOR THE DEFENSE OF THE GOSPEL."—Phil. 1: 17.

Vol. 50. (Old Series Vol. 69.) Elgin, Ill., January 7, 1911. No. 1.

AROUND THE WORLD

The Folly of Portugal.

The Portuguese republic might really have some assurance of permanency if it were to spend, for popular education, the funds which it is now proposing to lay out for dreadnoughts and cruisers. The small republic needs no battleships, for no country with which it could cope successfully, will attack it. It needs no cruisers to protect its colonies or its commerce, for there are no enemies to molest them. What Portugal does need, however, is an intelligent conception of its real need,—that degree of righteousness which will make the country a power for good. "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord."

American Wastefulness.

If stories involving millions and billions are able to make any impression at all, they should convince us of the fact that we, as a nation, are notoriously wasteful. Only recently the Governor of a great agricultural State informed us that American farmers waste at least $500,000,000 a year through deficient farming. Medical men deplore the waste caused by the ravages of preventable diseases, amounting to an actual loss of untold millions. Humanitarians say that our great industries exact a needless and costly toll of human lives. Fire insurance experts say that the $230,000,000 worth of property, yielded to the flames last year, was an unnecessary waste. Experts assure us that, by a greater degree of care, we should have money enough for every beneficent purpose that the kindly heart of man could devise. We could almost abolish poverty, causing "the widow's heart to sing for joy."

Our Debt to the Immigrant.

While opinions have differed as to the desirability of immigration, and much has been said pro and con, some light has been thrown on the situation by the National Immigration Commission. In their recent investigations they found that among some 619,000 industrial workers more than 60 per cent were foreign born. It is to alien labor, then, that our industries owe their magnitude. In fact, many of these enterprises could not be carried on without such help. The Commission says that assimilation of the vast alien mass is necessarily slow with adults, but that the children are becoming Americanized rapidly. The greatest question confronting us, however, is America's debt to the immigrant, religiously speaking. The call comes to us, as members of the Church of the Brethren, "Go ye and teach." It is a debt we owe and, like all others, it must be paid.

A Startling Revelation.

Prof. Franklin who, before his conversion, was a teacher of dancing, recently made some astonishing statements on the evils of the modern dance. One private dancing school of which he knew sent six girls to houses of illfame in three months. In personal rescue work he talked to 200 girls, and found that 165 fell as the result of attending dances, 20 by drink, 10 by choice, and 7 from poverty. Statistics, compiled from figures of the late census, show that there are 500,000 public prostitutes in the United States, and that 375,000 of the number are such because of influences connected with dancing. It would seem to be high time to "cry aloud and spare not" on this question,—to arouse people from their indifference. The dance is one of the worst of the unfruitful works of darkness." There can be no toleration of it whatever by those who have "put away the old man with his evil deeds."

Floods in Europe.

Most distressing conditions are reported from the larger part of Europe. England is so thoroughly overflowed with water that it is thought the soaked condition of the soil will seriously affect the next harvest. In France most of the rivers have been in a chronic swollen state for weeks. In Spain all the principal rivers have overflowed their banks. Italy has suffered from excessive rains, causing washouts and landslides. Switzerland is similarly affected, and a number of destructive avalanches have already occurred. Camille Flammarion, the Paris astronomer, ascribes the excessive humidity, now prevailing in Europe, to changes in the sun, and, in a measure, to atmospheric disturbances of an unusual nature. While these things may be alarming to many, the child of God rests securely upon the Lord's promise as to seedtime and harvest, knowing that "all things work together for good to them that love God."

Relief for China's Famine Sufferers.

Last week we referred to the famine sufferers of the Anhui Province of China. It now appears that the outlook is even worse than anticipated, and that fully 3,000,-000 people are affected by the insufficient food supply. Acting Secretary of State, Huntington Wilson, has already cabled $5,000 to United States Minister Calhoun, at Peking, as the initial contribution of the American National Red Cross Society. The question of further contributions will depend upon the developments of the situation which, at present, is extremely serious, and demands the immediate attention of all who consider themselves the Lord's stewards.

Another Appeal for Peace.

Six churches on the South Side of Chicago have forwarded a memorial to Washington, solemnly protesting against the proposed fortification of the Panama Canal and the present clamor for an increase of army and navy as a necessary means of national defense. It is encouraging, indeed, to learn that others besides the Brethren are realizing the importance of furthering the interests of peace. We are impressed with the thought that our members could do far more in this good work than they are now doing, if, in their respective communities, they were to labor more earnestly to mould sentiment in favor of the peaceful adjustment of all international differences. The special blessing, promised by Christ to those who thus labor, will surely be theirs.

A Year of Munificent Gifts.

In the annals of history 1910 will be noted because of the liberal gifts to philanthropic purposes. Besides Carnegie's $10,000,000 peace fund, and other donations, already noted, there is Rockefeller's final gift of $10,000,000 to the University of Chicago, and, Dec. 31, Andrew Carnegie's $1,250,000 as a "Carnegie Foundation for Life Savers" in Germany. It will be remembered that the same donor has already given $5,000,000 to a similar fund in the United States, $1,250,000 for one in Great Britain, and $1,000,000 for one in France, a total of $8,500,000 to reward the heroes of civilization who have saved or served their fellows. It is a pleasing thought that our men of wealth,—captains of industry,—are cognizant of their stewardship and ready to add to the welfare of humanity as they have opportunity.

No Reason for Discouragement.

While the past year has been a most memorable one by its revelations of corruption in political life as well as the business world, there is no reason to become discouraged. Deplorable as it may be, to read of the wholesale purchase of the votes of the farmers in Adams County, Ohio,—a practice that had been going on for some years,—there is encouragement in the fact that the public conscience has become awakened sufficiently to bring evil practices to light, and visit swift punishment upon the offenders. It is well to look at things from the optimistic standpoint, rejoicing that while things are bad, they are gradually getting better, and that law and order will eventually win the day. It is best to get into the habit of habitually looking on the bright side of everything,—to "think about things that are lovely and of good report."

The Value of Organized Effort.

When it comes to a perfect and well-working organization, the liquor element stands, perhaps, unrivaled, and in its thoroughness is a lesson for even its opposers. At present Cincinnati is the headquarters not only for Ohio but the entire country,—so far as an active propaganda in favor of liquor is concerned. Here there is a publicity bureau whose chief aim it is to impress upon the people of the United States the value (?) of drinking beer and whiskey. From here literature is sent all over the country, especially into sections where the liquor business is having a life-and-death struggle. There are booklets and pamphlets and leaflets, numbering hundreds of thousands, filled with arguments specious and deceptive,—all of them savoring of the pit,—sugar-coated though they be. We quote one instance: Learning that in some sections of the battle area there is a conscientious opposition to voting, on the part of some, the liquor men were not slow to get out a special pamphlet, which urged would-be temperance voters to refrain from casting their ballot, by pressing upon them the plea that they would thus "avoid contamination with the world." Verily, it behooves the "children of light" to wake up, and "press toward the mark" of greater efficiency against the hosts of sin.

Compulsory Arbitration in France.

Whatever criticism we may bestow upon the French,—they reason logically and think clearly on questions pertaining to the public welfare of the country. The bill now before the Legislative Assembly specifically provides for the ready adjustment of general strikes by equitable and fair propositions to all concerned, and particularly so in the case of public service corporations, such as railways, telegraph, telephone, water and lighting companies. The French authorities do not consider it right that the general public should be made to suffer because of any differences that may exist between employer and employed. They deem that arbitration is the only satisfactory way of settlement, and that, to be effective, it must be made compulsory. The advance ground, thus taken by France, is worthy of emulation elsewhere. Arbitration is nothing, more or less, than a practical application of the "Golden Rule" to everyday business life. That principle, —broad and comprehensive,—is sufficient to settle the most perplexing questions of the business world.

Gospel Progress in Burmah.

Sagaing, Burmah, has for years immemorial been headquarters for the manufacture of idols, and there they have been made,—big and little,—to supply the demands of the Orientals, until the business has attained dimensions very similar to those of which Demetrius and his craftsmen boasted at Ephesus. Of late, however, to the great joy of the missionaries, the business is showing a decided fallingoff. Christianity has progressed so swiftly, in that part of the world, that the demand for idols is rapidly decreasing, and it does not require a prophet to foretell the approaching end of a once flourishing industry. The onward march of Christianity is bound to make itself felt, and what it is doing in far-off Burmah, it should do even more fully in the homeland. And while America's idolatry may not manifest itself in a bowing down to idols "made with man's hands," there are abundant evidences that thousands are abjectly worshiping at the shrine of mammon, fashion, etc., who should be taught "the better way" as thoroughly as the benighted millions of the Orient.

Japan Threatened by Anarchism.

We have referred, at times, to the intensely patriotic spirit of the Japanese, which has always served as a leading factor in the nation's union and prosperity. Now, however, by the sinister manipulations of a secret order,—started by the Japanese of San Francisco, Cal., and later on transplanted to Japan,—the seeds of anarchy are being sown. Under the leadership of Denjiro Kowtoku and twenty-five kindred spirits, the pernicious teachings of anarchy have spread throughout the country, until a most deplorable spirit of insurrection is gaining ground. The authorities do not seem to have gained an insight into the secret workings of the anarchists, until much of the hidden plotting had done its fatal work, but now they are most energetically endeavoring to call a halt, and it is likely that the ringleader, with his twenty-five followers, will pay the death penalty imposed by the Japanese code. Eternal watchfulness is required in the affairs of state, and equally so in the church of God, lest the enemy of righteousness succeed in gaining a foothold. "What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch."

Monuments and Sphinx Crumbling.

Man has pointed to the mighty architectural monuments of Egypt as examples of endurance amid the multiple scenes of time and decay elsewhere, but according to recent reports of Egyptian scientists, the great structures that have defied the ravages of sixty centuries, will eventually vanish at the breath of modern civilization. The great irrigation works that are being introduced of late years have changed the exceedingly dry climate which made the permanency of Egyptian monuments possible. Now there are fifteen to eighteen days of heavy rainfall during the year, whereas formerly there was only an hour's rain a day for a week. The increased humidity, together with an occasional mild frost at night, during the winter, is having its effect, and it is feared that soon the head of the stone Sphinx will fall. While modern science has, by its irrigation system, added to the agricultural resources of the land, it, undoubtedly, will also bring about the gradual destruction of the great waymarks that cast their shadows upon the land of the Nile when the Children of Israel journeyed from the "House of Bondage" to the Promised Land. And yet the very decay of these structures directs the Christian to that more enduring "building not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

ESSAYS

Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth

A New Year's Invitation.

If there be something higher, something better,
Than aught that gave us cheer in vale and rift,
Ah, from this hour, let not a bond or fetter
Withhold the nobler gift!

Too long, too long, from one dawn to another,
The trivial and mean have led the way,
At length has Self proven the weaker brother,
With feet of common clay.

Come, let us find if there be not some reason
For life and being grander than we've known.
Hath not God given us, for a little season,
Aught of his very own?

We surely trespass not, as we draw nigher
To larger motive and a holier way,
God wills that every day be broader, higher,
Unto his perfect day.

The Inspiration of the Bible.

BY NETTIE C. WEYBRIGHT.

I. Evidences of its Inspiration.

THE question of the inspiration of the Bible is no new, transitory thought, simply one of the hour, for it has already been thoroughly discussed throughout the Christian world. How are we to regard the Bible? Is it true? Is it God's or man's book? Many claim that it is a good book, but that there are others just as good. Is this true? No other book can claim, as does the Bible, such phrases as "Thus saith the Lord," or, "The words of the Lord."

Most men concede that Jesus was good. If he was good, he told the truth. He says he came from the Father and went back to him, and he also teaches that this message came from God. If it is not from God, it must be an untrue story,—a lie. If we accept anything as truth that Jesus says, we must accept it all. How can we, otherwise, determine which is true and which is false? Surely, the Bible is not like other books.

Many attempts have been made to destroy the Bible and its influence, but every attempt has been futile. Long ago Voltaire thought he had succeeded in completely destroying it, but the century has passed away, Voltaire has passed into history, but the Word of God "liveth and abideth forever." It outlives all its foes.

We believe the Bible to be divinely inspired. "Inspiration is that inbreathing of God into men by which they were qualified infallibly to utter his truth. It is God's breath through men's mouths."

The inspiration of the Bible is evident because:

1. It has a life-giving power. In it is a spirit that speaks to our spirit,—a life that touches our life. The civilization and happiness of the world today are due to its influence. The wisest and best men of all ages have witnessed to its saving power. The depths of its beauties are especially revealed to the spiritually-minded, which fact is true of no other book.

2. The Bible has, in all respects, the seal of the Almighty—truly and entirely from God. Note the heavenliness of its character and scope, and the completeness of its design. View the efficacy of its sublime doctrines, the purity of its moral precepts, the fulfillment of its prophecies!

3. The predictions of the Hebrew prophets concerning the Messiah, the fates of cities and kingdoms contiguous to the Israelites, and the Hebrew people themselves, are without a parallel in history. It all exhibits Divine Omniscience. Prophecy came not by the will of man, but "holy men of God spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

4. The sixty-six books of the Bible, written, as they were, by kings, poets, sages, fishermen, and others,—educated in the science of Babylon, learned in the wisdom of Egypt, trained at the feet of the rabbis in Jerusalem, could not have been given accurately and in such perfect harmony without the same superhuman power guiding all alike. Not one book can be blotted out. The whole was built to stay together. Although the writing of these books extended over a period of 1,500 years, not one book is "out of date." "God spoke with resurrection power."

5. The very fact that God wrote the bad as well as the good side of men's lives is an evidence of the Divinity of the Bible. Ordinarily, men are very careful to write only the good side of rich men's lives, and paint in darkest colors the mistakes and failures of men of low degree. God revealed the degradation of King David's life, but withheld the name of the dying thief on the cross.

6. The simplicity and majesty of its style, the agreement of its different parts, the discovery made of man's fallen state, how salvation was made possible through a Redeemer, with the accompanying witness of the Spirit in those who believe it, amply testify to its sublime character. There is a difference in the style of writing,—a very abrupt transition, even between the apostles and apostolic fathers,—therefore a special agency of the divine Spirit, a new creative element. The Spirit of God dwells in the Word because it is his proper medium, but not in Homer or Shakespeare, because he has no affinity with these writings.

7. All the early Church Fathers insisted on the practical importance of the Scriptures,— their richness of Divine wisdom, clothed in unadorned simplicity, and their fitness to add to the edification of believers.

8. It does so much for us that no other book can do!

(a) We are begotten by it. James 1:18, "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth."

(b) By it faith is received. Rom. 10:17, "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God."

(c) New birth is effected by it. 1 Peter 1:23, "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever."

(d) It is a means of growth. Acts 20:32, "And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified."

(e) We are sanctified by it. John 17:17, "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth."

(f) It discerns the thoughts and intents of the heart. Heb. 4:12, "For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any twoedged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

(g) It is a remedy against sin. Psa. 119:11, "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee."

9. Another evidence is the effect it produces upon man. Neither philosophy nor science can make an outcast happy, or bring blessings to a desolate home. The Word entering the heart causes hope to dawn upon the vision. The Book has wrought the change. Those who seriously adopt it, acknowledge the Divine origin of Scripture, have a reverence for its teachings, and a practical regard for its requirements, like what appeared in Christ and his apostles. The Sword of the Spirit proves its own power,—tells its own story.

The Decadence of Doctrinal Preaching.

BY JAMES A. SELL.

THAT there is a decadence of doctrinal preaching in the Church of the Brethren, needs no argument. It is admitted. The question of results is confronting us. We may not openly sanction the federation of churches on a compromise of fundamentals, but if we join the ministerial associations, hold joint conventions in Sunday-school, temperance and mission work, and even unite in holding evangelistic meetings, keeping silent on points of doctrine at times when a difference of opinion obtains, we are yielding to a force that will result in something. What will it be? Will it bring others nearer to the whole truth or will we be drawn away? Are others made better or are we worsted by it?

If there is no vital difference between us and other churches, then the sooner our differences are relegated to the lumber rooms, the better. If the difference in points of doctrine exists for no other purpose than to dispute about, it is time for us to know it and we had better begin to inform the people that their salvation is depending on just what they prefer to believe, and advise them to find a church that suits their belief.

It is understood, and has been taught all along, that the Church of the Brethren came into existence in order to give the world a religious home where they might have the privilege of obeying the form of doctrine given to the church by its Founder. The upholding of these principles brought upon their advocates the fierce opposition of the religious world, that broke loose in severe persecution. Their only safety was in flight. The lapse of time, the advance of civilization, and the protection of a milder government has mellowed down, or entirely removed, the fierceness of the opposition, but has not changed the sentiment. Truths delivered in the most direct and positive language, and supported by the authority of Heaven, are spoken of as nonessentials.

The founders of the Church of the Brethren could establish a church because they believed intensely. Their souls were in their belief. They loved the cause that they espoused so well that they sacrificed their homes and the land of their fathers, and exposed themselves to many perils on a voyage, not knowing what the future would bring. They took upon themselves the hardships and privations of pioneers in a new and unsettled country.

They were, doubtlessly, looked upon by others as unpleasant associates in religious circles, because of their exclusiveness. But they were men of conviction, courage, and positive decision. They believed in the doctrines of the Gospel of Christ, and concluded that compromise, silence and flattery would never make a convert to their faith. So they went everywhere, proclaiming their faith, and made converts who were rooted and grounded in the truth. When the spirit that animated them is lost, the cause, that they sacrificed so much to establish, will mingle and drift about with the "according to your faith" doctrine.

Cherishing the most intense convictions and preaching the most pointed doctrines, and insisting on the most literal obedience, need not make one bigoted or narrow-minded. Fired up in the cause that truth inspires should give dignity and an elevated tone to the preaching. The controversial spirit need not enter, but "speaking the truth in love," backed up and supported by the conviction that it is the "power of God unto salvation," will commend it to the conscience of the sin-burdened, truth-loving soul.

We can and should be friendly, intimate and sociable with people from whom we differ on religious subjects, but when we allow such friendships to interfere with a fearless presentation and defense of Bible teachings, we have the first symptoms of decadence. Friendship should never be permitted to endanger the fundamental truths upon which the church is founded.

The First Conference.

BY W. B. STOVER.

MOST of us have come to look upon the meeting of the church in Jerusalem, whose "Conference Report" is labeled "Acts 15," as the first Conference. Thus it becomes to us a pattern and a guide. To say the least, it affords us several interesting points for study.

There was a question of greatest importance, over which the church was much exercised. There were two parties,—one more strict, the other more liberal; one insisting on the law, the other, seeing the need of the lost world, while not wholly disregarding the law, insisted that, to be a missionary church, they must be less rigid in application of the law to new converts. The question came before the whole church, and in open conference they waxed warm, both sides evidently ready to gain the floor, and to press their claims. Then it was "referred back to the Standing Committee for an answer."

In Standing Committee it was not settled in a minute, either. Those who brought the question were given a chance to state their position. And, to be fair, the opposing argument must be heard too, The "free-from-the-law" members and the "stick-to-the-law" members had a chance to thresh the question out properly, for they were at it several days.

Meanwhile, he who had been chief among the apostles was listening and taking notes. Every one who had prepared a speech, had delivered it, and was feeling keenly interested. After there had been a good deal of disputing, the old apostle rose up and told a bit of his own experience and gave his conclusion therefrom: "A good while ago God sent me to preach to the heathen, and he showed me plainly, too, that the Gospel was for them as well as for us. Yes, he gave them the Holy Spirit, even as he gave him to us. There was no difference at all. Moreover, both we and our fathers signally failed in the attempt to keep the law properly, so, why should we demand it of them? Besides, even as we are saved by the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, so are they. We all believe alike."

Then everybody wanted to hear again the experience of Barnabas and Paul, for any change in practice is generally the outgrowth of a wider experience. The church among the Jews at Jerusalem could see no need for a change. They continued to circumcise their baby boys in childhood, and then, at a more mature age, received them into the church by baptism. But with the church at Antioch it was a different story. Barnabas and Paul recounted how they had made a missionary journey to the Isle of Cyprus, where God worked with them. They told how they established a church in Pisidian Antioch, where the Jews finally drove them out of town. They recounted how they preached in Iconium, but were obliged to leave to escape being stoned; how that in Lystra the Lord had healed a man who had never been able to walk, and that the people could scarcely be restrained from worshiping them. They described how these same people, being deceived, later on stoned Paul and thrust him out of the city into a rubbish heap for dead. They told how he rose up and that the next day they went to Derbe and made converts there. They stated how finally they returned and, on their homeward trip, strengthened the churches and established village elders in all of them. These and other experiences did Barnabas and Paul relate before them all. And as they began to realize the exceedingly great importance of the question, they hadn't so much to say.

Then the moderator of the meeting, who was also the elder of the church, spoke as he was led by the Spirit. He said in substance: "My brethren, you have heard from the lips of our dear brother, Peter, who spoke a little while ago, how that God, at the first, showed him that the church must be a missionary church,—its message is for all people,—and this is in complete harmony with the Scriptures. So I propose that we do not require too much of these new converts, but that we write them four things: (1) That they abstain from pollutions of idols; (2) from fornication; (3) from things strangled; (4) from blood. I would propose only this much, for other lines of teaching they will learn as they hear from time to time."

This pleased the whole company of God's children, and they embodied the proposition in a well-gotten-up letter, and sent it to the churches, by the hands of men who had hazarded something for the church. If we insist on the question, it must, it seems to me, be admitted that the answer agreed on was not a direct answer to the question. No one can doubt the wisdom of the answer, for "it seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us," forever settles that. The wisdom of it is especially apparent in two important results: (1) It avoided a division in the church; (2) it settled once for all the universality of the Christian church, instead of making it a local Jewish sect. Suppose the question is answered by an apparent avoiding of the issue, as this was, and the result is that we continue in the bonds of unity, I feel there is wisdom in the answer. I did not always so think, but I think so now. There is no question so momentous, but that, if given sufficient time for consideration, and a sufficient enlarged experience, we would all get on the same side, and all see alike. And what can not be done unanimously and peaceably this year, had a great deal better be postponed from year to year till a desirable settlement can be made, than to force the issue and cause disruption. I say not a word against Lincoln, whose name is dear to all, but the future years will surely confirm the thought that some plan to free the slaves and avoid the war would have been infinitely better, even if slavery had continued for another decade. Sin of slavery, or sin of war, —which? Force the issue and fight? Rather avoid the issue for the time, and settle the question without a fight.

How far-seeing, indeed, was that church decision! Well was it said, "The Holy Spirit and us." There was no local entanglement allowed. It was not limited, in its application, to the city of Jerusalem, but it had the whole world in view, and was made with a long lease on time. So all church decisions ought to be,—not too binding, not too strict, not of local application only, but adapted to the highest good of all, made with a long look into the future, inspired by the Holy Spirit and the people whom he indwells, and every Conference decision, when read before the churches, ought to cause them to rejoice for the consolation. This means a religion up-to-date, and, at the same time, it is what we all want. It is the "old-time religion."

The Majesty of the Church.

BY B. E. KESLER.

By the majesty of the church is meant her power or ability to face issues, or to meet crises when they arise or when the proper time comes for them to be faced or met.

No question has ever been settled to stay, when the heat of agitation or controversy ran high, and men were crazed by the heat of excitement, or biased by selfish interests, or actuated solely by private opinions, or held tenaciously to preconceived notions or ideas.

True, agitation and controversy help us to arrive at a common mean between extremes, upon which all candid thinkers may unite, but to settle a question men must settle down to calm and sober thinking, laying aside private opinions, preconceived notions and all selfish interests.

And while grave questions have confronted us in the past, and yet may confront us in the future, yet, in every instance, so far, the church has proven herself equal to the occasion, and when the proper time came, has settled every question to the general satisfaction of all, and we may be consoled with the thought that, as in the past, so in the future, she will be able to adjust every difference in principle or method that she may be called upon to meet. Take, for instance, the method of feet-washing and see how nicely she met the issue, and may we not say that the method of it is settled forever?

Then, too, the church name, after we had tried various names, suited to private opinions and preconceived notions, and had agitated the question from one end of the Brotherhood to the other, and had at last settled down to a point where the Spirit could lead us, the name question was settled, and settled forever.

Again; in the method of observing the communion, after a long practice, in harmony with preconceived ideas and early training, the church was brought face to face with an established practice which, every one knows, is hard to undo, but which the church, not being hidebound nor creed-bound, was at liberty, any day, to change, when it was seen that in so doing we might come nearer the written Word of God in our practice. Thus the method of communion in "granting the sisters the same privilege that the brethren enjoy in breaking the bread and passing the cup" is settled, and settled for all time to come.

Furthermore, the dress question, now in the hands of a committee, to report to next Conference, will, when the proper time comes, be settled to the general satisfaction of all, and in harmony with Bible teaching on the subject. So it is with every other question that may confront us.

It is a fact that through all the ages past the church has been practically a unit on the great principles of the Gospel, and this accounts, in a large degree, for the fact that it is easy to settle points of difference in methods. So long as no gospel principle is ignored, it will ever be an easy matter when we let the Spirit lead, to settle questions of method, and it is most gratifying to note that there never was a time when the church was more united on methods than she is just now. A glance at the Minutes of our Conference, it is believed, will demonstrate this.

So, then, let us pray earnestly, hope fervently and labor diligently, that the unity and peace of the church may continue, and that in all questions that may confront us, we may be led by the Holy Spirit, that God's name may be glorified, his truth maintained, and the majesty of the church be upheld.

"Therefore, my beloved brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions which you have been taught, whether by word, or our epistle" (2 Thess. 2:15) and methods will take care of themselves.

From the Educational Board.

[The Educational Board held their annual meeting at North Manchester, Dec. 16, with the following members present: H. C. Early, W. B. Yount, Daniel Hays, Edwin Bright and A. G. Crosswhite. Every phase of their work was taken up and considered to their best ability, and detailed plans were laid for the speedy accomplishment of the one great end in view, namely, the hearty cooperation of school and church, and the general spiritual uplift of both. Arrangements were made to visit the several schools as early as possible, notice to be given to the proper authorities as soon as dates can be definitely fixed. Although a little out of date, the following paper which was read at the Educational Meeting at North Manchester, Ind., Oct. 15, 1910, by the Acting Secretary of the General Board may be interesting to many of the Messenger readers.]

IF will be remembered that the Educational Board did not make any formal report at our late Conference, but an eye has been constantly open to the general policy pursued, and results have been most gratifying.

Not until the school question has been carefully and prayerfully studied at close range, and from personal contact with educators who have the work in hand, can we form a just estimate of what is being done. Many misleading comments have been offered, which have had a tendency to turn our children toward other institutions of learning, which offered nothing better in a literary way, while, on the other hand, it cost more money to glean the wheat from among the "tares," and he is fortunate, indeed, who can distinguish between them and leave the tares in their native soil.

The tendency is to push out the children from the high school or academy to the State Normals, or to pursue the short business courses and expect them to teach successfully when, in fact, the foundation for an education has only been laid.

The practice that has prevailed in the United States, as regards the trades and professions is finding its counterpart in the way we operate in civics, the fine arts, and religious circles. We fail to recognize the fact that the success of Moses, in the Old Dispensation, and of Paul under the New, was due to years of experience and training under powerful masters. Many of our children are determined to obtain an education at any sacrifice and need direction in this wise resolution. It is too late to point them toward our own schools, when we have always praised the work being done in other schools, and especially after we discover the drift of the mind from our own church and her schools.

Many a parent has unwittingly placed a club in his child's hand to fight the Brethren church, and many tears of remorse have come unbidden after the die was cast, and before their eyes were constantly the words, "Too late! Too late!" Father, mother, are you prepared to meet the judgment record?

You have money that you are distributing among your children to assist them in violating God's Word, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon the earth," etc., or hoarding it away for a final distribution, when observation has taught you that wealth of that kind has been a curse to many a child. Far better give them a good education which can never be lost, nor is it subject to litigation.

But suppose you have no children, have you no sympathy for others? Is it the spirit of Christ to be selfish? The perpetuity of the church depends upon our ability to hold our own children and their radiating influence, and our cause must suffer unless their minds and souls are developed so that we can successfully meet the demands of the age. Our schools must be liberally endowed if they are to maintain a respectable rank among other institutions of learning; and to secure and hold the best grade of teachers we must pay them well. We do not hesitate to pay the charges of skilled workmen in other lines, why should we falter when the former deal only with temporal things while our teachers have to do with the soul, which is to exist throughout eternity?

A recent report from our colleges is based upon seven points of information, and they were given in a frank, prompt and brotherly manner. The questions submitted were the following:

1. How did your school open this fall?
2. Will you be able to meet all demands from tuition, board, etc?
3. Are State requirements cramping you?
4. Is endowment increasing?
5. What per cent of Brethren's children attend your school?
6. What is your hardest problem?
7. Is your school fully accredited in your State? Outside?

Here is a summary of the answers:

1. All the schools report an increase in attendance, while Hebron Seminary shows an increase of fifty per cent, and Daleville twenty-five or thirty per cent over last year's enrollment.

2. The answer of McPherson is selected because of its matter-of-fact phrase, "Yes; have to," and it serves for several of the others. Some of the schools have a small endowment. This, with an occasional donation, added to regular operating fund, keeps them going, but there is no well-qualified teacher in any of our schools who is not teaching at a financial sacrifice.

3. Some of our eastern schools, especially, are cramped by the liberal terms of tuition offered by the State Normals, which are supported by State appropriations; also by a few of them falling below a certain valuation which prohibits them from conferring certain degrees. Juniata has special distinction in being a member of the College and University Council of Pennsylvania. This college and McPherson have the advantage of Carnegie libraries.

4. Most of the older institutions have some endowment, and this is increasing slowly. There will be a greater effort made along this line during the coming year than ever before. It is a pleasure to note that Mt. Morris is out of debt. This was made possible by the recent donation of Eld. D. L. Miller ($3,000) on annuity bond and other smaller donations.

5. Those reporting definitely show these figures: Daleville, 75 per cent; McPherson, 66 per cent; Blue Ridge College, 66⅔ per cent; Bridgewater, 75 per cent; Mt. Morris, 60 per cent; Juniata, 60-70 per per cent; Elizabethtown College, 55 per cent; Hebron Seminary, 70 per cent; Manchester, 70-80 per cent.

6. Money, coöperation, teachers, equipment.

7. Those answering affirmatively are Manchester, Mt. Morris, Juniata and McPherson. The other schools are all fully accredited at home and abroad as far as they go. Some of them do not as yet give the regular four-year College Course, but upon examination the students entering our best Colleges and Universities have joined the class which represented a similar grade in our best known institutions.

It would be interesting reading to give reports as full as we received them, but space forbids. Arrangements are being made by which more information will be given the Brotherhood through our publications, and in the meantime it is to be hoped that prayers will go up in behalf of all our schools and the management, and that the means will be amply provided for the perpetuity and further advancement.

The problems that are especially committed to the Educational Board are being handled considerately, and through God's help and the united prayers of the Brotherhood we are hoping for victory in Jesus' name.

Joy Cometh in the Morning.

BY OTTO FEILER.

"Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning" (Psalms 30: 5).

Every dark night only helps us to appreciate the golden rays of the sun when it rises to begin a new day. As the sky grows dark and overshadowed by clouds, the lightning flashes, the thunder peals, and the wind tosses trees and growing foliage to and fro for a time; only to leave them watered and refreshed when the torrents are over. So some of the cloudy days in our life many times are the real means to increase our faith and trust in God, so that, when the veil is removed, we see the loving face of our Father smiling upon his faithful children.

How willing we should be to give ourselves into the hands of the Refiner who can blend our wills into his! Listen to the words of a young minister of our city. After he had dismissed prayer meeting, one evening, he stepped out on the porch to go home. Right then he was sandbagged and lay bleeding and helpless for some two hours. While upon his bed of pain that was almost unbearable, he said to me, "I am praying that God will give me grace not to complain."

"There are hearts that never falter,
In the battle for the right;
There are ranks that never alter,
Watching through the darkest night;
And the agony of sharing
In the fiercest of the strife,
Only gives a nobler daring,
Only makes a grander life."

Dear ones, God's army is winning a victory, many times, that we do not see. Look at the shattered hopes of the disciples as they go from the heart-rending scene of the Cross with sad countenance and broken hearts, because Jesus, who had been their admiration and their joy, had been shamefully maltreated and crucified. But while the soldiers from the Tower of Antonia were left to guard the mausoleum, a world-astounding event took place, which decided forever the question of the resurrection. Swords of lightning against swords of steel! Angels of God against Roman guards! The King of Terrors disappearing before the King of Grace. "The Lord is risen." God be praised! Let us, with Mary of old, fall at his feet!

The Foundation of the Church.

BY D. E. CRIPE.

In presenting to us the church established upon earth, both Christ and the apostles use the figure of a building,—a house or a temple,—to give a clear idea of its nature and character. No other figure could give us so good an idea as to the stability and durability of the church, and the personal responsibility of each member built into that structure.

Paul says, "Ye (who were strangers and foreigners but are now in the church) are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple of the Lord" (Eph. 2: 20, 21). The foundation is the apostles and prophets, but Jesus Christ is the most important of all, for he is the chief corner stone.

What is meant by "chief corner stone" has puzzled many Christians. The simplest form of a building has four corners, and why should one of these corners be more "chief" or important than the others? The explanation that Christ is one of the corners and some of the apostles are the other corner stones, can not be accepted, for the good reason that this would place those apostles not on Christ, but off to one side, based on something else beside Christ, make each of three of them equal with Christ, and only one-fourth of the church would be founded on Christ.

Solomon's temple was built on Mt. Moriah, and it had great stones for its foundation. But these stones were resting on something beneath them, upon the great rock of the mountain itself. This rock was larger than the temple and was larger than the structure itself.

Jesus Christ is the chief corner stone of the church. He is chief because he is the one stone that is larger than the church, because he underlies every corner of the foundation, because the entire structure of the church rests upon him.

As the stones of the temple were laid on the rock of Moriah, so the apostles and prophets, as lively stones, are all based upon Christ, the true foundation. To carry this figure farther, it may be said that the apostles form the outer layer of stones, including the corners, while the prophets—less conspicuous in the Christian dispensation—fill up the interior. In a building we can see one corner clearly while one is hid from view, and the other two are only partly seen. Peter, as leader and spokesman, would well represent the nearest and most prominent corner stone of this building. James, so prominent in the Lord's company, but whose early death cut off his ministry so soon, would represent the invisible corner. John, the beloved apostle, well represents one of the half-seen corners, and Paul, the apostle to the Gentiles, later chosen and richly instructed by the Lord, represents the other corner.

This, in a measure, explains the language of Christ: "Thou art Peter, and on this rock will I build my church." As Peter was the spokesman of the other apostles, the most prominent and conspicuous part of the foundation, so, when the church is built on Peter, it is built both on himself and on the other apostles whom he represents. It is not built on Peter as a man, a man who is not based on Christ, but on Peter as the most prominent of the apostles, their leader and spokesman, and thus, in a measure, is built upon them all. As the most conspicuous corner stone resting on Christ, what is built on Peter is also built on the other apostles.

The church, then, being built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, and they all being built on Christ, who underlies all, the church rests on Christ as much as the apostles do. The temple of Solomon was built on Mt. Moriah, just as much as if it was not resting on the large foundation stones laid on that mount.

Leaving this figure of the foundation of the church, and coming to the spiritual part of it, we know that every apostle was rooted and grounded upon the faith of Christ. They did not base their faith or their teaching on anything else. They never preached themselves; they never tried to make converts for themselves. They never tried to build one-fourth of the church on Christ and three-fourths on themselves. Christ was their foundation, and they predicated their faith, their hope, their all on him.

It was the same with the early church—the early Christians. They looked upon the apostles as faithful teachers,—leaders,—but all their faith and hope was founded on Christ. There is no evidence that they followed the apostles any farther than they followed Christ.

So even now, if we are built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, we are built on Christ, just as much as if the apostles were not between us and Christ. We have Christ as our great, our all-sufficient, our everlasting foundation. We are not based on any apostle that does not rest on Christ.

But if we expect to be built up as "lively stones" in a building which is to "grow unto an holy temple unto the Lord," it is essential that each one be a "lively" stone, not a dead one, and be well dressed—squared up—to fit well into the wall; and that it be lasting, enduring material, so as to be an ornament, not a disfigurement, on that spiritual structure.

The Day of Grace.

BY EDGAR M. HOFFER.

How lovely and beautiful is the day of grace! It is intended that we should labor in the Master's vineyard during this time. How many golden opportunities the child of God has in this life! We must use them, for lost opportunities may not return. The Bible says: "Prepare to meet thy God." We must prepare ourselves in the day of grace for death, eternity, and the judgment.

It is no small matter to live aright in this life. Sooner or later death will come to us, and we must go. Then we must give a strict account of all we have done. Death will not change us.

How careful we should live! We should use only kind words. When we appear before the Judge of all the earth, will excuses be accepted? They will not avail. Every day, therefore, we should live uprightly. We should feel as if we stood on the brink of eternity.

We should also be concerned about sinners. We should plead with them, and pray for them. How sad that so many are unconcerned, and careless about their soul's salvation! Unconcerned they spend the day of grace. Satan tells them to wait till tomorrow, and that then there is time yet to serve God. How sad that so many obey the evil one!

Recently the writer spoke to a dear young friend about his soul. He said, "I want to serve the Lord, but not now." That is a dangerous situation. Every day many are called away. With them the day of grace has closed.

Did you ever stand at the bed-side of a dying sinner? What did you think? Often they say, "I don't want to die," or "It looks so dark and lonely." How dark the grave must be for those who neglect the day of grace! They go to a Christless tomb, and a dark eternity is awaiting them. Every minute the day of grace closes for many people. Would we be ready if we should die tonight?

Let us, as brethren and sisters, be more zealous in the service of the Master. "Today, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your heart." Tomorrow will never come. Now is the time.

During the day of grace the Holy Spirit pleads with the unsaved, and the Savior calls them tenderly. Prayers are offered, sermons are delivered, kind words are given, and invitations are extended. All this and more, during a day of grace. How lovely, how kind! But we know not how soon these precious days are ended. There is no work done in the lonely grave, whither we haste. All is quiet and still there. We shall not pass this way again.

How glad the Christian feels that he is prepared to go when the sun sinks beyond the hills of time. Death is on our track, and we know not when or where he will overtake us. Often we see great changes in one day. Even young people are not sure how long they may live. Sometimes they are well in the morning, with sparkling eyes, rosy cheeks,—a very picture of health,—and in the evening they are enclosed in the cold arms of death. Let us ask the Savior to help us to be faithful, for the sinner has no hope beyond the grave.

"When the harvest is past and the summer is gone
And sermons and prayers shall be o'er;
When the beams cease to break of the blest Sabbath morn,
And Jesus invites thee no more."

Ministering Spirits.

BY W. R. DEETER.

In speaking of angels, Paul says, "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation" (Heb. 1: 14)? The inference clearly is that they are ministering spirits. Some of these angels may have been saints on the earth at some time. When the angel showed John the holy city and some of the things in that great city, John says, "I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which showed me these things. Then saith he unto me, See thou do it not: for I am thy fellowservant, and of thy brethren the prophets, . . . worship God" (Rev. 22: 8, 9). In Rev. 19: 10 we have about the same language. If these angels, who had, at some time, been saints on the earth, are now used as ministering spirits, to show John these things, may not other saints be used the same way?

The term "ministering," as used in Heb. 1: 14, means "to convey intelligence," "to protect," or "liberate." After the three Hebrew children had been cast into the fiery furnace, the king was startled when, looking into the fire, and expecting to see them writhing in agony and in death, he saw them walking in the midst of the flames. Instead of three he saw four. He said, "I see four men loose, and one is like the Son of God." When he commanded them to come out, there was not so much as the smell of fire on their garments. Nebuchadnezzar said, "God sent his angel to deliver his servants." (See Dan. 3: 19 to end of chapter.)

In this case God used an angel as a ministering spirit to protect his servants. When Daniel was cast into the den of lions, because of his loyalty to his God, the king came to the den in the morning, after spending a sleepless night, in his great anxiety for his faithful servant. He had a faint hope that God, in some way, might have preserved him from the jaws of the ravenous beasts. Early in the morning he made his way to the den of lions, hoping against hope. He cried in a lamentable voice and said, "O Daniel, servant of the living God, is thy God, whom thou servest continually, able to deliver thee from the lions? Then said Daniel unto the king, O king, live forever. My God hath sent his angel, and hath shut the lions' mouths, that they have not hurt me" (Dan. 6: 20-22). Here, again, God used an angel as a ministering spirit to protect a faithful servant.

When Jesus was born, an angel carried the message to the pious shepherds, as they were watching their flocks by night on the Judean hills, saying, "For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." (Luke 2: 11).

An angel came to Joseph, after the Wise Men had departed and told him to "take the child Jesus and his mother and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word." At the death of Herod, the angel visited Joseph again and told him he might return again to the land of Israel.

After Christ's long fast and temptation, angels came and ministered unto him (Matt. 4: 11).

To please the people, after killing James, Herod arrested Peter and imprisoned him, intending after Easter to bring him forth to the people, that they might kill him also, but while Peter was in prison, —safely as they thought,—a prayer meeting was going on at the house of Mary. Of course, in their prayers they did not forget their brother Peter. The result was, God sent an angel as a ministering spirit and delivered him from prison and from death (Acts 12: 1-12).

Many more citations might be given, but they would only prove the same thing.

We learn many other things about these holy intelligences. One is they are not to be worshiped. When John fell at the feet of the angel to worship him, he said, "See thou do it not." We also learn that angels are much more powerful than we are. In the days of Hezekiah an angel slew one hundred and eighty-five thousand men in one night (2 Kings 19: 35). Jesus said, "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth" (Luke 15: 10). This shows they have knowledge of what we do and are in sympathy with us.

When Jesus comes again, the great harvest will take place. Then the angels will separate the wicked from the just and will cast them into a furnace of fire. (See the parable of the tares.)

Perhaps at no time was the interest of the angels in the welfare of the human family more specially manifest than when the sixth seal was opened, as recorded in Rev. 7. After the 144,000 were sealed, John says, "After this I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands. And cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb." After this great multitude ascribe their salvation to God and the Lamb, the angels take up the strain, saying, "Amen: blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power, and might, be unto our God forever and ever. Amen."

The honoring of this great multitude who had come out of great tribulation and washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, caused the great expressions of joy by the angels.

An Interesting Experience at Washington's Monument.

BY J. T. MYERS.

Some years ago we stood at the base of Washington's monument. We shall never forget the interesting experience. It was on a cloudy and misty day. We stood near the base of the monument and looked up to see whether we could see the top of the beautiful memorial structure. In vain we peered and looked to get a view of its summit, for the clouds and mists were too heavy and thick for us to penetrate. The more we tried to get a view of the pinnacle of the majestic shaft of beauty, so world-renowned, the thicker and darker the clouds and mists seemed to become. At last we entered the elevator and went up and up until we reached a height of over five hundred feet, when we had reached the viewpoint for observation. Stepping from the elevator car to the landing or balcony of the monument, we were surprised to see that the clouds and mists had all seemingly disappeared. But not so. It was only a change in our viewpoint of the situation. We were now looking down instead of up, looking away from the sun instead of towards the sun, and so the clouds and mists had seemingly disappeared,—not in reality.

We often think that looking toward the sun helps us to see, but it is just the reverse. When the sun is back of us we see really farther and clearer than when we look towards the sun. When you look towards the sun you only see ninety-three million miles,—the distance from the earth to the sun, so astronomers tell us, —but when the sun is out of sight, and you look away from the sun, you see the stars, twenty billions of miles away, millions of miles farther than looking towards the sun. The viewpoint, from which we look at things, makes all the difference in the world.

So it was in our experience at Washington's monument. At its base, down on the ground, we looked against the sun and could not see through the mists and clouds, as it seemed, but looking from the top down, and away from the sun, the whole scene became changed. What was dark and unseeable, a short while before, now became clear and distinct to our vision. The streets of our Capital City, and its scenes of beauty, no longer were obscured and in the dark, but all seemed bright and clear. The mists and clouds had passed away,—from our viewpoint only. How true to life all this is, and what lessons of hope and comfort it teaches us!

Life, my friends, is but a monument we are every day building, reaching into the other world, while the trials, sorrows, troubles and disappointments of life are the clouds and mists and storms that hang around these monuments of ours, so that we cannot look to the top, as was our experience while standing at the base of Washington's monument. How often many of us have looked up to life's monument, reaching out of sight to see and know and understand God's wisdom and love and purpose with regard to our lot in life, only to hear the silent whispers of the Master in our hearts, "What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter." Significant words! Comforting truth!

How often some of us have stood by the grave of some loved and dear one, and with broken heart and weeping eyes have said, "Good-bye, good-bye, loved and dear one," without a ray of light as to the significance of the providence. Perhaps some great trouble or disappointment overtook us, shattered our hopes and beclouded our lives, and the more we tried to understand and know God's providence in it all, the more misty and dark and inexplainable it all became to us. But some time we will reach the top of life's monument and then we will be looking down instead of up, and

THE ROUND TABLE

Watching Jesus.

BY FLORA E. TEAGUE.

"And sitting down they watched him there" (Matt. 27: 36).

THE above sentence applies to the soldiers who attended to the carrying out of the crucifixion. Having several hours before them, in which they would have but little labor to perform, they conclude to make themselves comfortable by sitting down. Doubtless much had been told them of the supposedly doubtful claims of their victim, as well as other interesting incidents connected with his life, hence they were probably anxiously looking forward to more or less interesting developments. The impressions made upon their lives by what they did see and hear, we know not. It would not be at all strange if, through these impressions, they, later on, became Gentile converts. Stranger things than that have happened to those who have been willing to sit down awhile and watch the Master.

Of one of these watchers we do know the result. Mark tells us, in his graphic account of the crucifixion, that the centurion "which stood over against him" said, "Truly this man was the Son of God." That was a strong statement for a heathen to make.

There is never anything so bad but more or less good comes out of it. The crucifixion was an awful thing, but grateful may we truly be that One was found willing to endure the cross to ransom us from sin. It is probably impossible to estimate all of the good things this sad event brought to men. Let us hope it brought salvation to these wicked watchers.

Watching Jesus is the one difficult thing to get the sinner to do today. When one who is away from Christ is willing to take time to sit down and watch Jesus, he will soon see enough to be so fully convinced in his heart as was the centurion. It would be a comparatively easy matter, probably, to secure followers, could we but get the careless, the sinful, the indifferent to stop and ponder awhile. And sometimes I wonder if Christians would not walk a little nearer the Master if they would oftener sit down and watch him awhile!

The Ignorance of the Apostles.

BY JAMES A. SELL.

IT may seem strange that our Savior, in setting up his kingdom, should select the "ignorant and unlearned fishermen" to be his representatives. However, a careful consideration of the whole situation shows the consummate wisdom of his choice, and leaves to his friends, through all time, the comforting assurance of the Divine authority of his doctrines.

The system of religion which Christ introduced was new, unpopular and untried. It must succeed or fail on its own merits. If it succeeds it is because of its intrinsic value, and its adaptation to meet the unsatisfied longings of the soul. Had it been committed to the rich and learned, they could have presented it in a way that the illiterate would have been attracted to it by enticing words, and leave us today in doubt as to what gave it its prestige.

But when the unlearned fishermen, who lately left their nets along the shores of Galilee, began to preach, it can hardly be presumed that the people who heard them were charmed by the magic of their eloquence. It was the indescribable and inherent power of the truth that touched a chord in the responsive soul.

Wreckages by Divorce.

BY M. M. ESHELMAN.

THE histories of decayed nations do not seem to make much impression on modern people. What does it profit to study the adulteries and vileness of Assyria, Babylon, and Rome,—the wicked practices which sent those nations to ruin, strangers to virtue and noble-mindedness? Americans spend millions of dollars, and tissue of brain energies to uplift youth into nobler citizenship, and at the very doors of these schools run divorce courts day by day, grinding exceedingly great grists of separation of husbands and wives, entailing more woe, more misery and disgrace upon the welfare of the Republic. Is education a farce? Is the cramming of unusable stuff into the minds of youth the cause of the continuous grists from the divorce courts? From Jan. 1, of this year, to Nov. 15,—nine and one-half months,—the courts of Los Angeles granted 833 divorces, twenty annulments and 797 interlocutory decrees,—1,620 cases. At the same rate there could be 342 cases for the other two and one-half months. Thus there were nearly 4,000 persons affected in this city, in one year, by the divorce business.

In 1870 the population was 15,000. In that year seven decrees were granted. The population in 1910 is 319,198. The population has increased twenty-fold in forty years, while divorces have increased one hundred and twenty-five fold, not counting the interlocutory decrees. In view of this appalling progress of immorality it behooves our Brethren to be more and more persevering in advocating the purity of the marriage relation, and to cry aloud, more and more, against this degenerating process. Are we faithfully contending for the practices of the primitive church,—the golden principles of heaven's best? We ought to be.

Like Other People.

BY IDA M. HELM.

ISRAEL wanted to be like the surrounding nations and have a king. Many of the kings were takers rather than givers, and Samuel told the people that if they had a king, he would take the best they had. Having given the power into his hands, he would take what he pleased. They rejected the Lord, the Giver of every good gift,—one who does not oppress his people. He simply accepts what his children lovingly give to him as a tender father.

Israel rejected the Lord because they wanted to be like the worldly nations around them, and have a king. No wonder that Israel went to destruction! Any church of today that rejects the Word and patterns after the world, will sink as a vessel wrecked upon the rocky coast of the sea. The world takes everything, but has nothing to give but eternal death and destruction. Jesus Christ, the Word, will give eternal life and happiness at God's right hand, if we but accept it.

Breaking Up a Rowdies' Nest.

BY ED. B. HERNDON.

HAVE you a rowdies' nest in your church? They are generally found in the back row of seats, and are a great nuisance to both speaker and those who want to hear.

To break up a rowdies' nest, get your best young members together and arm them with song books and Bibles. Then have them come early and take up the back seats, so that the rowdies will have to take the second row. As they come in, hand song books to them, and when the minister reads the scripture lesson, find the place and hand Bibles to them. Give them a royal welcome, and I will guarantee that three applications will break up the nest.

The Two Books.

BY A. HUTCHISON.

"OUR SATURDAY NIGHT," by Elder J. H. Moore, and "Onesimus, the Runaway Slave," by Eld. H. B. Brumbaugh, are two of the most inspiring books I have read for a great while. They hold the reader in such close touch with the Book of books that it makes one feel as if he were on a much higher plane, in the scale of Christian life, than the ordinary. I felt, while reading, that both the writers were at their very best. I would say to everybody, get them and read them carefully.

PRAYER MEETING

Hindrances to Effectual Prayer.

James 4: 3; Isa. 59: 1-4.

For Week Beginning Jan. 15, 1911.

1. The Christian's Prayer-life is a Test of Soul-stature.—We have, in Philpp. 4: 19, a blessed promise—one that may well be termed "Heaven's Bank Note." The Banker is "My God." The promise to pay, "Shall supply." The amount, "All your need." The capital of the bank, "According to his riches." The location of the bank, "In glory." The all-essential Cashier, "Jesus Christ." Absolute assurance to all (2 Tim. 1: 12).

2. The Hindrance of Willful Disobedience.—"And whatsoever we ask we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight." Our obedience must parallel our profession if we would gain audience with the King (1 John 3: 22).

3. The Hindrance of Secret Sin.—"If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me" (Psa. 66: 18). There are those who think their sins are hid,—that they can deceive God as they have deceived men, but this emphatic passage declares the impossibility (Gal. 6: 7).

4. The Hindrance of Attempting to Serve Two Masters.—"These men have set up idols in their heart" (Ezek. 14: 3). God will not put up with a second place in any life. We can not serve God and Mammon, or God and self, or God and worldly pleasure, or any other idol (Matt. 6: 24; Luke 16: 13).

5. The Hindrance of Selfishness.—God can not accept the prayer of him who lacks sympathy and even oppresses the poor (Prov. 21: 13). The prayer of the hard-hearted, close-fisted man never reaches the throne of God. The liberal soul, only, gains God's favor (Luke 6: 38).

6. The Hindrance of an Unforgiving Spirit.—A willingness to forgive and forget past offenses is absolutely essential to a prayerful attitude (Mark 11: 25).

HOME AND FAMILY

True Helpfulness.

BY JOSEPH AND MARY BARNHART.

At the beautiful gate of the temple,
A poor, lame beggar lay;
Who was brought by his friends each morning,
And left throughout the day.

He was not only a helpless cripple,
But he was far away from God;
He had never a thought of heaven,
Or the pathway that Jesus trod.

He only thought of the pennies,
His scanty means of bread,
That he asked of each one passing
The poor paralytic's bed.

I can see him now, as he lies there,
So helpless and poor, all alone;
He had no dear wife nor babies,
Nor aught he could call his own.

But while he lay there begging,
Of all who came that way;
Two of the Lord's disciples,
Beheld where the cripple lay.

And as he asked alms of them,
Then Peter answering said;
"I have no gold nor silver,
But I give what I have, instead.

"In the name of Jesus of Nazareth,
I say unto thee, Arise;
And walk in the path he shows thee:
It leadeth to Paradise."

At once, then, the lowly beggar,
Who had lain there helpless so long;
Arose in the strength of the Master,
And pressing through all the throng,

That crowded the temple portals,
He walked and he leaped and he ran;
Shouting praise to the Father in heaven,
Who giveth good gifts unto man.

Oh, ye, who oft read the story,
Of this helpless mortal's woe;
There are many more hopeless and helpless,
Still living on earth below.

And how are you seeking to help them?
Are you wishing for silver and gold,
Forgetting the truest of blessings,
Are not what the hands can hold?

If you're seeking with large gifts to help them,
You never will help them at all.
'Tis only by little and little,
That the greatest of blessings fall.

Then unto the helpless and needy,
Such things as you have impart,
For God from his storehouse increases
The gifts of a willing heart.

And he who may ask for but little,
Of earth's treasures only, from thee,
Will then for rich, heavenly bounties,
Rejoice through eternity.

The Maiden Aunt.

BY ELIZABETH D. ROSENBERGER.

"It's too bad that none of the family want to have Miss Dalton; she's pretty nigh helpless and needs a good home, and it does seem as if John's wife ought to take her in."

Barbara looked scornful at the mere suggestion. "John's wife never will, and more than that, I'd pity Martha Dalton if she had to make her home with John's wife. Now I know you think I'm harsh and unkind, but there is no use to try to gloss over the facts. When a hard-hearted, hard-fisted woman like John's wife has gotten out of Martha Dalton all the hard work and nursing the girl had in her noble heart to give,—then she is through with her and today Martha Dalton would have to go to the poorhouse if all her relatives had treated her like John's wife."

"Why, how you talk!" said the other deprecatingly. "I am sure John's wife said she would be so glad to keep Martha if only their house was so arranged that she could; but as it was, she couldn't do her duty by her family and crowd them out for Martha."

A contemptuous sniff from Barbara showed how much impression this speech made on her. "I know just how sorry she looked when she said that. If there is a hypocrite on our church it is that same John's wife. But I must not say any more. Only let me assure you that Martha Dalton will be cared for by her own sister, who is not well off, but she has some gratitude for all the favors Martha Dalton showered upon her in the days when she went from one to another of her six brothers and sisters and helped them with sewing, or nursed them through measles or scarlet fever. She never refused them; she never spared herself; and many times her brothers said to me, 'My children think Martha is a maiden aunt worth having.' And they paid her for her work, so that now Martha has enough to live on. John's wife is the only one who never paid her a cent and who can do nothing for her now."

"If I were an old maid I don't believe that I'd be a servant for the others. Seems as if it wouldn't pay."

"Martha never thought of that," replied Barbara. "She was too sweet and good to reckon and calculate; she just gave herself without stint, and most of them love her and appreciate her."

And so do many other maiden aunts all over this broad world of ours. They are large-hearted and generous, and do not stop to calculate and count up the gain or loss. We know there are exceptions to the rule, but our observation has been that, as a rule, the old maid is the most loved and most dependable person in a family. Many of them have deliberately sacrificed their own prospects for the sake of an afflicted father or mother. Multitudes of cases might be mentioned where young women have been persuaded by a solicitous family to keep house for some widower, and mother the children. They have given the best years of their life to this task, only to find that after while they are old, and the door is closed against them, and they hardly know where to go.

We have pitied the maiden aunt who refused to marry the man she loved because her mother demanded her care and her attention; such a colorless life as she led! We wondered whether there was no way by which the mother could be cared for, excepting this one, of assimilating the very life of her own daughter.

Do we respect our daughter's right to her own life, and to the sunshine and joy and happiness to which every young girl is entitled? If we do, there will be fewer maiden aunts to face the world alone. Sometimes home duties tie a girl down to the extent that she misses the opportunities other girls have. There is something about the first gray hair or the first slighting remark about her advancing age that makes most unmarried women take themselves seriously in hand to know why they are unmarried. And in many cases they find that some cause over which they had no control marked out their destiny.

They come into our homes like ministering saints and we bless God for their help. Think of all the holidays that would have been dreary without their insistent cheer! They are the life of the house, and diffuse about them an atmosphere of content and kindness. In one home, where the mother took life hard and worried over many things, the presence of a maiden aunt was like a clear, white ray of sunlight. This mother was an unhappy woman. In the morning, at breakfast, her face often looked as if she had been crying. On those occasions the husband hurried off to his office, and even the children had no appetite. The mother went sighing around her household duties; everything was such a care. There might have been some excuse for her in the presence of a great trial or sorrow; but in the absence of these, she had only little worries and cares. As the years went on and the children grew older, is it any wonder that, instead of going to their own mother, they went to Aunt Eunice for advice and help? Aunt Eunice, who was there only a few months in a year, had their sympathy and confidence, and she was loved and most tenderly cared for by her grateful nieces in later years.

So much depends on how you meet life; if you take every difficulty, every trial as a grievance, to be mourned over and complained about, you will be unhappy and discontented. Whatever be your lot, married or single, you will be an unenvied woman. Some girls are discontented because they must help with housework; another hates the family sewing; another has poor health and frets on that account; another longs for larger opportunities. So it goes. But the girl who can look away from her troubles and work diligently to improve her lot, instead of complaining about it, has found the province of the sunny heart. In spite of misery, of injustice, and of suffering; in spite of fiery ordeal, of heartache and vexation of spirit; in spite of the very worst, to realize that there is still joy in life,—this is a victory indeed. And many a girl has endured all this and then spent her life in service for her family of brothers and sisters,—their guardian angel through changing years.

Believe it, life is sweet, and God is near, and it does pay to go out of self and take in others. Sometimes, during the year that is ended, you have felt as if things were all wrong. But as you look back you find that you cannot recall many of the annoyances and disappointments which counted for so much when they happened. The wounds which kept you awake all night and hurt for a long time afterward, have healed without a scar. Life will be richer if we learn to thank God for every experience, for the car we miss as well as the one we get; for the pain as well as the joy. Paul says, "I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content." As wives or maids we do not accidentally stumble upon, that sweet grace, —content. It is a lesson to be learned, as Paul learned it. We master a part of it today and then learn more tomorrow, and so we shall find strength for the burdens to be borne and grace for the duties to be taken up.

Covington, Ohio.

In this world we have the battlefield; over there the triumphant procession. This is the land of the sword and spear; that of the wreath and diadem. When Julius Cæsar had crossed the Rubicon and was marching on Rome, he was informed that the Senators had deserted the city. "What," cried the Emperor, "if men will not fight for Rome, what will they fight for?" As regards heaven, ask yourself the same question, and let it lead to noble achievements!

SISTERS' AID SOCIETIES

ENGLAND, N. DAK.—Our Sisters' Aid Society has been very busy. We did some piecing, made two comforters and quite a number of garments. We gathered up a lot of second-hand clothing. We sent five bags of clothing to the Kansas City Mission, and three to St. Joseph.—Ida Myerhoff, Englund, N. Dak., Dec. 13.

PINE CREEK, IND.—Our Sisters' Aid Society is still doing some work in the way of quilting, and making comforts and clothing for the needy. Our society has an enrolment of twenty-six members. We held eleven meetings during the year with an average attendance of eleven. During the year we completed 36 new garments, and quilted 12 quilts and comforts. We received with amount of cash on hand from last year $38.81; paid out for material and donations, $25.93; balance on hand, $12.91.—Ida M. Engler, Acting Secretary, Uniontown, Md., Dec. 14.

BROOKVILLE, OHIO.—During the year, ending Dec. 15, our Sisters' Aid Society held thirty-four meetings, with an average attendance of thirteen. The work consisted mostly of making garments, prayer-coverings, bonnets, comforts and quilting quilts. We made eighty-five garments, thirty-five prayer-coverings, thirty bonnets, five comforts and quilted eleven quilts. We also mended and made over some clothing ready to wear. A collection was taken at each meeting to help cover the cost. We donated a box of clothing to the Ogden Mission, in Chicago, consisting of sixty-three pieces. Money received during the year amounted to $87.66; money expended, during the year, $69.75; balance in the treasury, $18.13. Officers for the coming year are: Sister Ada May, president; Sister Dona Zumbrum, secretary; Sister Dora Hay, treasurer.—Dona Zumbrum, Brookville, Ohio, Dec. 16.

PITTSBURG, KANS.—Sept. 11 the Sisters' Aid Society of this congregation elected as president and treasurer Sisters J. L. Murshman and M. H. Forney, respectively, who have since served very faithfully and continue in office to serve this practical organization in its unlimited field. Balance in the treasury, Jan. 1, 1910, is $9.31. During the year 1910 thirty-seven meetings were held with an average attendance of ten. Offerings amounted to $6.21; donations to the society, $23.80; received for work, $66.59; expenses for material used, $25.51; donations to other causes, $10; church expenses, $2.40; balance in treasury, $36. Because of living at too great a distance from the place where regular meetings are held, some do work for the society in their homes. We are glad to report the addition of the faithful, and helpful, unitedefforts, to interest others.—Mrs. M. J. Weaver, 1120 Greenhill Ave., Pittsburg, Kans., Dec. 26.

DIXON, ILL.—Sisters' Aid Society met in regular session Dec. 8 for work and election of officers for the next six months. Our officers are: President, Sister Ella Mentzer (re-elected); vice-president, Sister Hattie Holts; secretary and treasurer, Sister Ida Strickler. Our time for holding meetings is every two weeks from 2 to 4 P. M. Our meetings are favored by those reading and praying. Sometimes we meet at 10 A. M. Occasionally we have special meetings to sew for ourselves. We remember by force which we were paid for the work done, unless they can not afford to pay. In such cases the work is donated. Since our last report we held eight meetings with an average attendance of seven members. Three new members enrolled at our last meeting. Largest number present any day, 12. Visitors are welcome. June 30 we had in treasury, $8.50; received by monthly collections, $5.35; received for sewing and making bedding, $9.35; donated to Dixon church treasury, $8.50; expense account for material, $2.37; received by donation, 45 cents on Dec. 8. This leaves a total of $7.41 in the treasury. May our work prosper, is our sincere wish for the Sisters' Aid Societies!—Bessie C. Dickey, Secretary and Treasurer, Dixon, Ill., Dec. 20.

☞All business and communications intended for the paper should be addressed to the BRETHREN PUBLISHING HOUSE, ELGIN, ILL. and not to any individual connected with it.

THIS week, and from now on, the Table of Contents will be found on the last page.

ON page 3, this issue, will be found a communication from the General Educational Board.

As the fruits of a series of meetings held at Oakland, Ohio, by Bro. James L. Hazlett, ten were added to the church.

BRO. J. A. GARBER devoted one week to evangelistic work at Union Bridge, Md., and five were induced to put on Christ in baptism.

BRO. O. P. HOOVER, who is spending the winter at the Chicago University, spent last Sunday in Elgin, and attended the morning services.

WE believe that all of our patrons will be pleased with the first page this week. As the weeks go by, the character of the matter may be still further improved.

OUR correspondent at White Oak, Pa., reports a good series of meetings by Bro. I. W. Taylor, with eight applicants for membership and one to be reclaimed.

A REVIVAL at Danville, Ohio, conducted by Bro. J. A. Dove, then continued by Bro. G. S. Strausbaugh, resulted in eight persons accepting Christ and receiving baptism.

A FEW of our members have located near Perez, in Mexico, about 124 miles south of Vera Cruz, and among them a minister, Bro. A. J. Detrick, formerly of Oklahoma.

THE trustees of the Old Folks' Home, at San-Mar, Md., are in need of a superintendent for the Home. For further information write Bro. Caleb Long, Boonsboro, Md.

No place has yet been offered for the District Meeting of Northern Indiana for 1911. Any church desiring to take the meeting can write Bro. J. W. Kitson, Fort Wayne, Ind.

BRO. OTHO WINGER, of North Manchester, Ind., spent a few days in Elgin last week, searching the House files for data regarding the District Meetings of Middle Indiana.

A NUMBER of Bethany students called on us last week. It was their vacation week, and they found it convenient to visit Elgin and take a look over the Publishing House.

WE have the Minutes of the District Meeting of Southern Indiana, and notice one paper for the Annual Meeting. This, with the rest of the papers for Conference, will appear in the MESSENGER in due time. We await other Minutes containing queries.

ON page 13 Bro. James M. Neff has a letter that his many friends will read with unusual concern. In the interest of his failing health Bro. Neff has had a hard fight, but through it all has shown a persistency and bravery that must be admired. Let us all pray that our brother may be restored to health.

As the result of some work at Harlan, Mich., by Bro. William Bixler, five were added to the church by confession and baptism, and several others seem to be near the kingdom.

LET all those who have the Brethren Almanac for 1911 turn to page 31, and insert the name of L. H. Eby, in place of S. F. Brower, as elder in charge of the Payette church, Idaho.

A PROTRACTED meeting at New Haven, Mich., closed with ten making the good confession and uniting with the church. One was also restored to fellowship. The preaching was done by Bro. S. Z. Smith.

DURING a series of meetings in the White Rock church, Kans., Bro. B. E. Kesler did some good preaching, principally along doctrinal lines, and six were added to the little band of believers.

THOSE having a copy of the first edition of "Our Saturday Night" will please turn to page 50, and in the first line write 1887, in the place of 1878. The mistake has been corrected in the second edition.

BRO. J. W. NORRIS did some very effectual evangelistic work at Marion, Ind., where the Brethern have a mission point. As the fruits of his work twenty-seven were baptized, five more were reclaimed and three are to be restored to fellowship.

THE Minutes of our fall District Meetings are very slow about reaching our desk. We have not yet received the Minutes of some of the meetings held in October, and, of course, can not say at this date how much matter is on the way to Conference.

BRO. C. M. WENGER, of South Bend, Ind., Treasurer of the Annual Meeting, gave the House a short call. He finds it no easy matter to collect sufficient funds to pay the bills as they come to him. Most of the District Treasurers are slow about remitting, and this is what makes his work difficult.

THE series of meetings at Denver, Colo., resulted in several starting for the kingdom,—three baptized, two awaiting the rite, and one reclaimed. Two are said to be hindered by their parents. It is unfortunate that those who desire to make a start in the religious life should be hindered by their father or mother.

BRO. J. G. ROYER was with us over last Sunday, and delivered two addresses,—one in the morning as introductory to the installation of our Sunday-school officers and teachers; the second, in the evening, suited to the graduating exercises of the teacher-training class. Both addresses were listened to with interest.

A DEVOUT minister tells us that he is paying for nine copies of the MESSENGER this year. He sends a copy to each of his grown-up children, and there are others he wishes to reach with the paper. He says he knows of no better way to keep people in touch with the church and her work than to have them read the MESSENGER from week to week. He is a wise preacher and father, and is certain to see some of the fruits of his well-directed labors.

ONE of the congregations in the West took up a collection to raise money to have the MESSENGER sent to the poor members, of whom there are nearly one dozen. The old minister of the congregation says he likes to preach to members who read their church paper. He feels more at home with them. Occasionally he wishes to refer to something he has read in the MESSENGER and this he can do to the edification of his people, when he knows that they may have read the same thing.

SOMETIME ago a young brother thoughtlessly went to school on Monday morning, with his Sunday-school card still held in place by his hat band. When the teacher pleasantly reminded him of the sign he was displaying, he offered no apology whatever, but simply said that he was one of our people, and said it in such a way as to indicate to his teacher that he rejoiced in being known as such. The true principles of religion had been planted in his heart, and he was willing to be regarded as one of the boys in Christ Jesus.

BRO. VIRGIL C. FINNELL and family left Elgin for Pennsylvania last week, where they will remain a few months, and then probably settle down to pastoral work. We exceedingly regret to have them leave us. We found them devoted and earnest members, whose sole purpose is to serve the Lord to the best of their ability.

No place has yet been offered for the District Meeting of Eastern Pennsylvania, to be held May 3 and 4, 1911. Any congregation desiring to take the meeting will please communicate with Bro. I. W. Taylor, Neffsville, Pa. Bro. Taylor was moderator of the meeting last spring, and the above notice is published by his request.

A NUMBER of people are writing Bro. F. M. White about the country and climate at Fruitdale, Ala., but forget to enclose a stamp for a reply. It is a costly business when one has to answer so many letters at his own expense. Those seeking information from members, regarding any country, will do well to enclose even more than one stamp.

BRO. S. A. HONBERGER writes us from Santee, San Diego Co., Cal., where five members reside at this time. Taking it all in all, he thinks that part of California about as good a place as can be found on the Pacific Slope, and would be pleased to correspond with members seeking a home where their services are greatly needed. He is looking forward to the time when there will be a strong congregation at Santee.

WE have a copy of the Minutes of the District Meeting of Southeastern Kansas, and observe that considerable space is occupied with the financial reports. Some attention was given to papers from the churches, but no paper was sent to the Annual Meeting. It was decided, hereafter, to elect the members of the Standing Committee by the majority of the votes cast, the written ballot plan being employed. The officers of the meeting will be chosen by a plurality vote, with written ballots.

THE Mission Board of Michigan has the right idea about mission work. They have ordered the MESSENGER sent into over a score of families at one of their mission points. In this way they hope to interest nearly forty people and instruct them along right lines. There is no better way of reaching so many people with a small amount of money. It would pay any District Board well to employ $25 or $50 in this way. Get the people in any community, where we hold regular services, to reading our literature, and splendid results are certain to follow.

THE Minutes of the District Meeting of Northern California fill about twenty-seven pages, and show that while the District, as an organization, is young and composed of only nine congregations, it is fully alive in the Master's work. Mission fields have been opened, an Old Folks' Home is to be maintained, and plans were laid for special Bible work and the developing of the educational integest. The District calls for the Conference of 1912, and sends two papers to the Annual Meeting. One of them strongly protests against any of our ministers being permitted to engage in the real estate business. The meeting decided that the members of the Standing Committee must be chosen from the elders who have resided in the District at least two years.

DR. S. C. DICKEY, who gave our people such a cordial greeting at Winona Lake, Ind., writes us a letter in which, among other things, he says: "Many of you attended the Conference of the Church of the Brethren, held at Winona Lake last June. Your Conference outnumbered any ever held on our grounds. We thought our inter-denominational Bible Conference crowd taxed our utmost capacity, but your committee taught us that it was possible for us to entertain many thousands more than at the Bible Conference." He writes concerning the success and growing interest at Winona,—the schools, the summer assemblies, Bible Conferences, the problems to be solved and the purpose to secure additional means for sustaining and enlarging the work of the assembly.

UNDER date of Dec. 14 Bro. W. R. Miller writes us from Jerusalem, and tells us briefly about his party being robbed south of the Dead Sea. The situation at the time was more serious than reported in the newspapers. The party consisted of W. R. Miller and wife, A. C. Wieand and wife, Hettie Stauffer, C. W. Eisenbise, J. F. Souders, Ralph Miller and a Miss Healy, with Mr. A. Forder as guide. In attempting to escape from Kerak, where three hundred people had been massacred, the entire party was captured by a band of savage Bedouins, who not only robbed them, but planned to kill them. Later they were recaptured by a friendly tribe, and under a strong, well-armed guard started in the direction of Hebron, which point they finally reached, after riding all night and the next day. Another ride of twenty miles brought them to Jerusalem. We are told that the whole party faced the great danger with commendable bravery, and now give God the glory for their deliverance. This is an unusual experience for any of our people in the Bible Lands, and Bro. Miller promises our readers a good write-up of the thrilling incident. Bro. David Hollinger and wife, Bro. T. A. Eisenbise and Sister Hettie Stauffer have left Palestine for home, while the rest of the company remain in Jerusalem, awaiting further developments regarding the uprising of the Bedouins in Eastern Turkey.

Introduction to Volume Fifty.

WITH this issue the MESSENGER begins the work of 1911. We begin with faith in Jesus as the Christ, having an earnest desire to do the will of God, and trusting to the guidance of the Holy Spirit. The Great Father, who knows it all, can see the end from the beginning. Not so with finite creatures. We see the beginning only, and trust God for the future.

We are not in the habit of making many promises. We plan, that is true, and do our utmost to work up to our plans, but here, again, we must trust the Lord for strength, wisdom and further guidance. Still, generally speaking, we may say, that we have some good things in store for our people. We are expecting to give them some splendid reading. Some of it is in our office, and some of it is in course of preparation. Unless we overestimate the value of this matter, the present volume is going to be one of unusual interest.

We also think some improvements will be discovered. More work than heretofore is to be put on the first page. The spirit of the page is to be moved up a little higher, and the scope of the matter to be broadened. It is intended to contain the cream of rare information, and he who reads the page carefully, will know a good deal about what is going on in various parts of the world. It is a careful blending of certain phases of the religious, historical, missionary, scientific and general news of the day, the purpose being to educate the intellect, broaden the mind, and give a healthy, moral tone to the understanding.

The missionary page will probably contain more news than formerly. It would be replete with reports from our District Mission Boards, if we could get the news from them. Our foreign missionaries have kindly supplied us with news from their respective fields, and the most of their reports have appeared on this page, but the page is to be filled with the most interesting church news, of the correspondence class, that happens to be at our disposal when it is made up. In the other pages there will be few changes, save that it is our constant aim to reach a higher standard as the years come and go.

As regards the real purpose of the MESSENGER, it is understood that the paper stands for the New Testament order of worship and service. We plead for the whole Gospel, and nothing but the Gospel as the Christian's rule of faith and practice. The standard of living, set by Jesus, and transmitted to us by the sacred writers, should be our standard. For this we plead most earnestly.

The religion we teach does not blend with the teachings of the popular Christian bodies. We have always protested against their departure from the New Testament order of service. We have protested against the general neglect that has characterized those who persist in the departures that must be apparent to every earnest Bible student.

Our mission is not to fall in with these departures, nor to affiliate with those who countenance and encourage such departures, but to restore and perpetuate the order of service and worship for which the New Testament stands. We are not supposed to be influenced by the persuasions that refuse to teach the "all things" set forth in the Word of God. Our mission is to help them to return to the old gospel paths, to accept the form of doctrine delivered unto us by the inspired writers, and to walk in the commandments of the Lord.

The MESSENGER does not seek to have the Brethren church become like other churches. The reformatory movement, with which we are identified, was not started for that purpose. Those first in this movement came out from other persuasions, in order that they might reëstablish the apostolic practices. Having done this, it becomes our high privilege, as well as our imperative duty, to remain a separate people,—to remain a called-out people,—and urge upon all others the acceptance of the whole Gospel. Ours should be a moulding influence,—an influence that affects others for good. If we can not do this, and do not propose to even attempt it, then we have little excuse for an existence, as a separate religious body.

Our plea is for the one Lord, Creator of all things, the one faith in Jesus as the Christ, the one baptism set forth in the New Testament, the one body, the church of Jesus Christ, and the one Spirit to lead, direct and guide us into all truth. This means not only perfect faith in Jesus as the Son of God, but it means the keeping of the ordinances as set forth in the New Testament, as well as living the simple, pure, holy and useful life.

It means more. It means that we will put forth every effort, in teaching, preaching and writing, to bring other religious bodies to this standard, for what the Master meant for one to do, in the particulars named, he meant for others. It is not sufficient for us to confine our efforts to our own ranks, to our own children and a few others. We must reach out and endeavor, by our teaching, living and influence, to help others. The world is our field, and as trusted servants of God, tried and found to be true to the "thus saith the Lord," we should not stop short of the fullest extent of our ability. The standard set by Jesus and his apostles is our standard, and we shall not have discharged our duty until we have done what we can to help others to recognize this same standard.

But we are not to stop here. The Gospel is to be preached to all nations,—even to all creatures,—and it is our duty to carry the full Gospel into the heathen lands, as well as into other lands. This duty is second to none. It is as important as keeping the ordinances, and living the simple and holy life. It is a duty that we must not, shirk, however much it may cost in money and lives.

For all of these, and even more, the MESSENGER has stood in the past, and as much as possible we shall emphasize the importance of continuing steadfastly in the same policy. Not only so, but we shall further emphasize the urgent necessity of special harmony among ourselves, regarding the better methods of maintaining the Gospel principles for which we contend. In order that our efforts may be crowned with success, we look upon this harmony as imperative. If we would move any considerable part of the world, we ourselves must first learn to move together. Let us bear in mind that, while influencing others for good, we, too, have some things to learn, only let the progress we make lead us to the Gospel and not away from it.

Solomon's Temple.

In Two Parts.—Part Two.

SOLOMON'S temple is regarded, by common consent, as a type of the spiritual temple,—the church. The manner in which God directed the building of the first temple, gives many practical hints as to the building of the present temple. Look at some of them for a moment!

The temple was built after the pattern of a definite plan. David was not given the honor of building the temple, but the Lord communicated to him its plan (1 Chron. 28: 19), and he gave it to Solomon (1 Chron. 28: 11-13), with the instruction that he should carry it out to the letter. The plan was complete, comprehending the building in every detail, which enabled Solomon to see it clearly in his mind's eye before even a stone was laid in the foundation.

A good plan is one of the essential things in matters of building. It was of so much importance to the temple, God's dwelling place, that he would not entrust it to men. Solomon, if left to himself, would probably have employed the best architect of his day. But the Lord constituted himself the architect of his own house. So now. The church is to be built after a definite plan, and it must be carried out to the letter. As Moses was commanded to build the Tabernacle after the pattern shown him in the mount, and Solomon built the temple after the pattern handed down to him by his father, so Jesus is building under a plan as definite today; and we, as coworkers with him, must recognize the plan of building and labor accordingly, so that the building, "fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord, . . . for an habitation of God through the Spirit."

The Lord chose a wise leader to build the temple under the specified plan. Not only a building of stated specifications, but a wise leader was needed. So now. It is probably the greatest need of the hour.

In the very beginning of Solomon's reign the Lord threw open to him the storehouse of heaven, and said, "Ask what I shall give thee." The young king said, "I am but a little child; I know not how to go out or come in." Thus realizing the weight of his charge, he asked for an understanding heart to discern judgment. He chose wisdom. He did not ask for long life and wealth and honor, and the blood of his enemies, as almost any young, ambitious king would do, and, besides, he was yet a young man, without the schooling of experience. But he chose wisdom. What a valuable choice! And, too, how important a right choice in a young man! It was this young man whom the Lord chose.

The Lord has planned his church to be world-wide; he has the universal church idea fully settled. Then the gravity of the undertaking,—the scope of the building. Literally, the house of prayer for all nations. Then the hindrances to overcome. Then the diversified means and agencies and activities necessary in this crusade, to be wisely directed. Is not the need of wise leaders clear? It is no wonder that the mark for the bishop is set high.

The temple was built of material carefully prepared before it was brought to the place of building, "so that there was neither hammer nor ax nor any tool of iron heard, while it was in building." The whole building, in every detail, was thoroughly comprehended in mind and measurement, and the material provided and prepared accordingly, so that when it was brought together the building went up without any tinkering at fits. It fitted completely throughout. This was no less than wonderful. The like has not been known since, I should judge.

There was, however, one stone that perplexed the builders. They rejected it, and decided it could not be used. It was among the collection for the temple, and prepared for it, but the builders could find no place where it fitted. They tried it over and again, and then rejected it as having no place in the building. But when the wall was finished, lacking one stone, behold, the rejected stone just fitted the place and completed the wall, so that "the stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner." It became such literally. Surely, the Lord's doings are marvelous in our eyes.

The two important points suggested in this are previous preparation, or regeneration, as it is called in the language of the spiritual temple, and organization. The plan of the present temple provides that, as a preparation to be built into it, we must be born again. It also provides that each one, as a lively stone, should be placed in the building where he fits. This is organization. But regeneration is the greatest practical lesson to us, to be gleaned from the building of the temple. As essential as proper organization is to the church, it is not to be compared to regeneration in importance. The Lord accepts no excuse or substitute for an unregenerated church membership.

The temple was built in time of peace: David could not build it, because of the wars on every hand, but Solomon declares that God had given him rest on every side, "so that there is neither adversary nor evil occurrent." The spiritual temple is built only in time of peace. "The old man," with the carnal mind, must be put off, the enemy crucified, and all rebellion grounded, before one can become a citizen of the household of faith.

A great variety of material was used in building the temple. Gold, silver, brass, iron, and wood of several varieties, were used in large quantities. Nothing was too precious and nothing unfit, when properly prepared. So now. If the white race is to be regarded as the gold, let it be known that of one blood hath God made all nations (Acts 17: 26), and that "in every nation he that feareth God, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him" (Acts 10: 35).

Much time and many men were used in building the temple. It seems remarkable to us that it took 183,600 men seven and one-half years to build the temple. But it is really so. God takes time to do things. We should learn patience. God will work out the ends of his kingdom in the right time; only we should be on the alert to do our utmost to bring about the conditions that he can hasten the coming of the kingdom. This we are instructed to do, and this is our part, and God will do the rest.

When the 22,000 oxen and the 120,000 sheep had been offered in sacrifice, the Ark of the Covenant placed beneath the cherubim, the mercy-seat established, the prayer of dedication offered up and the house declared dedicated to the services of the Almighty, his presence and glory filled the temple. So when the new-born child of God offers himself a living sacrifice and declares his life dedicated to the one true God, his soul is filled with his glory, and he cries, "Abba, Father," the Spirit bearing witness with his spirit that he is the child of God. As much as spirit is above matter, so much is the spiritual temple above Solomon's, and so much more glorious is the dedication of a soul to God than was the dedication of the temple. H. C. E.

Our Church and School in Huntingdon.

From the beginning of our work here we formed the habit, when speaking of the church and school, to use the possessive pronoun "our," because, through the Providence of God, we were instrumental in giving them birth. And being born about the same time, we regard them as twins, having, for their life and purpose, one and the same thing. They were planted together, they took root in the same soil, they were nurtured by the same rain and sunshine, surrounded by the same atmosphere and climate, so that even to this day we are not able to determine which depended, or depends, on the other. Therefore it has always been our pleasure to feel that they are equal in the same thing and dependent upon each other.

Dec. 23, 1873, myself and wife, our brother, J. B. Brumbaugh, and several other members, connected with the Pilgrim office, removed from James Creek to Huntingdon, where we found Dr. A. B. Brumbaugh, his wife, and two other members, making, in all, nine members of the Brethren church. As we had no place where we could hold public services, we held prayer meetings in our homes. But this was not satisfactory, as we wanted a wider field, and to this end we fixed up a room in our house, had it comfortably seated, a neat pulpit made, and carpeted the aisle. When through with it, we had a very cosy, comfortable and quite attractive churchhouse, seating over one hundred people. This church home was dedicated June 20, 1875, the dedicatory sermon being preached by Eld. Peter S. Myers, now deceased. In the evening Eld. Archy VanDyke preached. Though this beginning was small and humble, it was very comforting, because it gave us a church home where we could meet together for public worship, hold our prayer meetings and open a Sunday-school.

Though our room was small, we commenced with a full program,—two preaching services, a Bible class and Sunday-school each Lord's Day, and a midweek prayer meeting. Our attendance at first was small, but gradually grew until we became crowded for room.

April 17, 1876, Bro. J. M. Zuck opened, what we now call Juniata College, with three students, in two small rooms, directly over the church room, using the latter for the religious part of the work, always opening the morning sessions with Bible reading and prayer. The school was advertised as "a church and school." And so it was, and so it continues to be. Both were planted and rooted together, and they have been growing together ever since. The fruitage of the one is the fruitage of the other, and the purpose of both is to reveal God to the people by opening the Book and teaching men and women to live their lives in harmony with its teachings.

Oct. 30, 1876, the working forces of both the church and the school were greatly strengthened by the moving into our midst of Elders James Quinter and J. W. Beer, and their families, which was very much appreciated by all, and gave a new impetus to the work that was so near to our hearts. Later on Bro. W. J. Swigart was added to our ministerial force, and was a great help in enlarging our field of labor.

Sept. 28, 1878, our church here was organized and made a separate congregation, having, at this time, a membership of thirty-six, and Eld. Quinter was placed in charge. About this time he was made President of the College, thus strengthening the relation between the church and the College. April 13, 1879, our place of worship was moved from the small room on Fourteenth and Washington Streets up to the new College building, just completed, on Seventeenth and Moore Streets, and the dedicatory sermon was preached by Eld. James Quinter.

We now had a very pleasant and suitable place for worship, and glorious seasons of praise and worship did we have in this, our College home. Not only was it a Bethel of praise and visions, but to many it proved to be a Bethel of consecration, and the opening gate to heaven. And while to many of us it became a place of sacredness because of the sweet memories that clustered in and around the place, yet it was a house of mixed services. It was not, consecratedly, "the house of God," and therefore a large number of our people had an anxious yearning and a longing desire to have erected a house or temple that could be wholly set apart and dedicated to the Lord's service.

Accordingly, some four or five years ago, our people, with willing hearts, began laying by means, by which this house could be built, so that over a year ago the corner stone of the present structure was solemnly laid. And then, day by day, it began growing into a house for the Lord's service, so that Dec. 11 was named as the day for its completion and consecration. To this day we looked forward with prayerful interest. During the day and evening of Saturday a number of us were busily engaged setting things in order for the appointed time.

During the night a fresh snow had fallen, so that the Lord ushered in the dedicatory morning with snow whiteness and brightness. And though it was cold and wintry, there were so many glad, warm hearts that the snow coldness was forgotten, and at the appointed hour our friends, brethren, sisters and little ones from town, surrounding country and from abroad commenced gathering in until our new temple was filled. The morning sermon was given by our brother, Dr. M. G. Brumbaugh; the 3 P. M. service by Bro. C. C. Ellis, and the evening service by Bro. Wm. M. Howe,—all graduates of our College. Their sermons were correspondingly appropriate, edifying and uplifting.

At these services offerings were taken to meet the indebtedness still remaining, and the response made was liberal, open-hearted and beyond our expectations, so that, when all the pledges made are met, we feel that our indebtedness will be covered, for which we thank God. Our home members, the friends of our town and the student body did nobly; as also did many of our friends, brethren and sisters and former students from abroad. Of course we most highly appreciate this very liberal giving on the part of our members and friends throughout the Brotherhood. And while their liberal offerings have been a great blessing to us, we pray it may be a great blessing to them, especially to those who were born into the kingdom of God while here.

Since our organization here, there have been about 750 baptized, some thirty called to the ministry while here, and fifty or more have been called in their home churches after leaving here. Some have gone to foreign fields, and quite a large number are doing home mission work in our towns and cities. Pray for the Huntingdon church that it may continue to grow and do good work for the Master. H. B. B.

Christmas and Conversions.

It is remarkable how the number of conversions, reported by our correspondents, will drop off as we approach the Holiday season. It would seem that the nearer we get to the anniversary of the birth of our Savior, the more disposed people should be to turn to the Lord. But such is not the case. As the masses approach Christmas, they think more about the festivity of the occasion, and the giving of gifts to one another, than they do about what the day stands for. The great display, manifested on every hand, crowds out every other consideration. As a rule, all revivals must close a few days before Christmas, so as to give the people a chance to enjoy themselves and secure a little rest. The rest is proper, and so may be the season of enjoyment, but it is strange that we give so little attention to leading sinners to the Christ whose birth we celebrate. Then, on the other hand, the unconverted are so fully occupied with the incidents pertaining to Christmas that they become unconcerned about the future. They may think about Christmas, talk about the occasion, but they do not think and talk about Christ, for whose religion the day stands. New Year's Day is a good time to begin the new life, but the trouble is to get people to think about the regenerated life when there is so much otherwise to attract their attention.

Billy Sunday and Money.

While Billy Sunday is doing a great deal of good in his popular revivals, he also shows a knack for making money out of his evangelistic work. During the last few years he is said to have made $150,000. At his meetings the donations for his personal services have ranged from $3,496 to $17,500. This last amount was received for the meeting held at Jacksonville, Ill. For the late meeting, held at Waterloo, Iowa, he received $8,400. It would seem that he has no disposition to waste his money, but is investing it where it will be safe, and will bring a good income. It is well for a man to have an ample support for old age, but this thing of preachers, pastors, evangelists, and others engaged in the Lord's work, making great fortunes, is having a terrible effect on the laboring class in all civilized lands. It is one of the questions that is being discussed more in private circles than in the newspaper columns. Those in well-to-do circumstances may not think it a matter of much importance, but it is, nevertheless.

A New Law.

The Pope offers no excuse for making laws to govern his people. When he feels the need of a law, he promulgates it and then demands that it be put into force by his bishops and archbishops. Some of his requirements may be wise and proper, while others are decidedly faulty. Nine reasons for the removal of a priest were recently announced. They are at least worth studying: Perpetual insanity; such unfitness or ignorance as renders him incapable of performing his duties; permanent physical or mental infirmities; the animosity of the people when it renders his work useless and is likely to continue; loss of reputation; a hidden crime; bad administration; gross neglect continued after warnings; and disobedience to the bishop, if continued after one or two warnings.

FROM MEYERSDALE, PA.

We are glad to report that our Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Meeting have been reinforced with a band of very efficient workers. Bro. B. B. Dickey has been reëlected superintendent of the Sunday-school, and Bro. Charles Griffith, secretary. Following are the officers of the Christian Workers' Meeting: Ellen M. Fike, president; Orpha Barndt, secretary. A large crowd came to hear the children recite on Christmas evening. Upon that occasion a donation of $61.61 was offered and pledged. This offering is to support a school of forty children in India. On Thanksgiving Day an offering of $22 was taken for World-wide Missions. Our first council in the new year will be held Jan. 2. MINOT MISSION, N. DAK.

Bro. George Hilton most earnestly presented the China work to us Dec. 16-18. In the four talks he made impressions that are much needed to make the Lord's people more active in reaching out to points where the Lord intends his name to be carried and planted.

There are many poor that attend the services and we are able to assist them through the kindness of some of the sisters' aid societies who have sent in clothing to be distributed. Others have sent word that they will also send articles a little later. Grocery, sent by one church, has bought flour and potatoes in homes that had none.

Our services are conducted in the courthouse court room each Sunday morning and evening. Teachers' meetings are carried in the homes of the teachers. All the services are attended with good interest, and new attendants are brought into the work each Sunday. Any one knowing of members living in town that we have not found, or any one who has friends who should attend our services, will please write us giving their street address if possible. Remember the work and workers at this place, that all may be done by each one in his name to his glory. D. Warren Shock.

FROM THE NEWTON MISSION, KANS.

Nov. 20 our churchhouse was dedicated. Bro. N. E. Baker, of Arkansas City, delivered the dedicatory discourse.

Since that time our Mission Board has secured the service of Bro. Baker for this place, and he, with his estimable family, is now located here. Our work is progressing nicely, with increasing interest and attendance. Our Sunday-school attendance has doubled during the last month.

On Christmas Eve we rendered a Christmas program to a full house. Not since the beginning of the Newton Mission have prospects looked so hopeful as now, for the building up of the cause of Christ.

The disadvantage of having to hold services in a rented hall have now been overcome, and we are enjoying the opportunities afforded by a suitable house of worship. In our reorganization Bro. A. L. Snowberger was elected president of the Christian Workers' Band, and Bro. Victor Orpin superintendent of the Sunday-school, with Cordelia Winslow as secretary.

As the new year is ushered in, I trust that each one of us, as "children of the King," may feel our individual responsibility for the spread and growth of the kingdom of Christ in the hearts of the children of men, and that with this object in view, our lives may go on in humble, loving service, "seeking the lost ones, bringing them in."

MISSION WORK IN MEXICO.

After a delightful sea voyage from New York, and one day ashore at the historical and tropical city, Havana, Cuba, we landed at Vera Cruz, Mexico, the oldest seaport on the North American Continent. We found it a beautiful tropical city, full of business. In a few minutes we caught a train and made our way southward, 124 miles to Perez, over a beautiful rolling prairie and groves of timber, covered with fat cattle. Here everything is tropical.

On arriving, our party was invited to meet Eld. A. J. Detrick, of Ripley, Okla., who has bought land about four miles from the railroad, in the colony. This was the first Sabbath meeting of the Brethren in the tropics of Mexico.

No rattle of trolley cars, jingle of sleigh bells, or toot of autos were heard. The natives all stared at minister Henshaw's team and spring wagon, as we met him in the road. Our old saddle-horses, now in their teens, took fright, as they had never seen the like before. As Christmas was nigh, the timid deer and wild turkey kept out of sight.

Although no sermon was preached, the question was discussed, how to reach the eight million souls now seeding the Gospel in Mexico. On the green grass, in the shade of a spreading oak, we surrounded with thankful hearts, a large store box, loaded with the bounties of the tropics. We remembered our gracious Redeemer who said: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to all nations." His blessings were asked to rest on the mission work begun here. We thanked him for past and present blessings. This was a missionary meeting and a feast of love. Though the table was small and but few surrounded it, yet we all, with our pioneer experiences, feel the great need of mission work in Mexico, and are doing all in our power to spread the glad tidings of our Savior among these neglected people. FROM VULI, INDIA.

At present Bro. E. H. Eby's are away for a few weeks to recuperate their strength. Vuli is full of fever this year, and they, along with the native people, have been suffering from it. We look for them home next week.

The native people have had a great deal of sickness this year. We sent two adults and two children to the Irish Presbyterian Hospital in Broach. One has returned cured and the others are improving nicely. How nice it would be if we had a hospital of our own, to which we might send our sick people. The fever was very hard to break in nearly every case, but the Lord has been good to us. One little one was taken from us.

Just now several of the village workers are here on account of sickness. Since they are better, they are taking a course in Bible study. We hope and pray that they will be better prepared for their work by spending some time in the study of the Word. Those who are full of God's Word are best fitted to live and preach it.

In a few days we are expecting several Mennonite brethren to come to visit us. Bro. Lapp, who is working in India, and two brethren from America, who are visiting India, are coming to see us. We are glad they can come, for it always encourages us to have visitors. We wish more would come.

Work on the new addition for Bro. Eby's is progressing nicely. A few years ago, when we built our bungalow, we had trouble in getting laborers, but now our Christian community is large enough to furnish all the laborers needed to do the work, so we are independent of outside help.

It is appalling, the way the liquor habit is growing on these poor Bhils. Several weeks ago the headman of our village went to Dashor. There he fed the Brahmin sweetmeats and had his face painted, and from that time on he intended to stop drinking liquor, but toddy was permissible. This man was a hard drinker and we hear that he is again slowly falling back into his old habit of drink.

One evening a man came saying, "Saheb, if you do not come, Kelya will kill his wife. He is drunk and is beating her." Dan went and found it all true. Kelya was entirely naked, and he was rolling and beating on the floor, pulling each other's hair. Dan picked up two bunches of hair that they had pulled out of each other's heads. They were separated, and Dan came home. In a little while, the little eight-year-old girl came trembling, and said that her father was beating her mother again. Dan went in a hurry, and, sure enough, it was all true. The woman was on the bed, and Kelya was standing over her, beating her with a stick. They were separated finally again. The woman found refuge in a Christian's home for the night. Dan says that if he had not interfered, he is quite sure that Kelya would have killed his wife. In a week or two after that, Kelya brought his wife for medicine. She could scarcely walk. Her back, and also her body generally, were bruised and swollen. Kelya said he did not know how she happened to get in such a woeful condition, but when he was questioned he had to confess that, within a few days after he beat her, Dan again began. We gave the woman medicine. We pitied them both from the bottom of our hearts, to think that they were so bound down in sin.

One of our neighbors is building a new house, and he had some wood to haul out from the station. Several Bhils did the hauling for him, and when they were done, and he went to pay them, the Bhils said, "Oh, we are friends. We will not take any money but you just get us liquor to drink." So that was the way they settled it. The man gave them all they wanted to drink, and they were very drunk,—so drunk that they all fell off their carts. A cart ran over one man and he was killed. Today we hear the shooting, telling us of a funeral.

Tomorrow the headman of this village must go to court as a witness in another murder case. This also was committed during a fit of drunkenness. While two men were fighting, one hit the other, who, falling, hit his head on a stone and was killed.

Brethren, pray that these people might have the love of Christ in their lives before they are entirely bound in Satan's clutches! Pray for a temperance campaign and then that they may be shown the Christ! The grace of Jesus Christ is the only thing that will save these people from destruction. There are many souls to be won and each year the fields are broadening. The liquor business is a great deal more than it was six years ago when we moved here. Each year it is growing worse.

What are we going to do? Can we stand by and look on, and not feel a call to work? It is in our power to say, "Brother, Christ loves you and would have you follow him." How can we be at ease when sin and the devil are abroad in the land! Pray, pray, that these poor, ignorant people may know him, and be saved from destruction!

SAFE ARRIVAL IN INDIA.

Many of the Messenger readers will be glad to know that the party of missionaries that sailed from New York Oct. 26 for India have had a safe and, for the most part, pleasant voyage, and have landed in India. The first three days out from Liverpool were very rough and stormy, and sea life was anything but pleasant, yet at no time did we feel fearful or mistrust our Lord. We lost a whole day during the storm, and so arrived one day later than we had expected. Our ship was a good one. Accommodations were, in most respects, all we could expect. Our fellow-travelers were companionable. The children of the party kept well and seemed to enjoy the long ride.

Sister Shumaker proved herself to be a good sailor, after the storm, like some more of us. She took some lessons in language study and was an interested pupil indeed. The page of odd and strange characters became full of meaning to her before we ended our voyage. Our only stop between Liverpool and Bombay was at Port Said. Some of us went ashore, and bought some necessary articles. I took a hurried look at the American papers in Thomas Cook's office. We were interested in the reports of the recent election. Keen was our joy, indeed, when we received several letters from India, telling how anxious all were getting for the day of our arrival. We, too, became more and more anxious as we neared our destination. We watched carefully the record of the ship's speed, as posted day by day, and calculated the time each hour when we would be remaining in port.

All were up early on Monday morning, Nov. 28, for we knew that we were to sight land about dawn. How welcome was that first sight of India's shore, as we approached! Letters from India friends reached us before we reached the shore. Their messages were so cheering. As we approached the pier, we strained our eyes to catch a sight of those who, we hoped, should be there to greet us. Long before they could distinguish us, we saw, by aid of a field glass, Bro. J. M. Blough and Sister Kathryn Ziegler, as they watched for us. We saw them and were glad. No time was lost when once our launch was lashed to the pier, to hurry up the steps and again clasp the hands of those who are so near and dear to us.

After the usual difficulties and trials of the customhouse, we went to Mrs. Briggs' hotel. Here we met Bro. E. H. Eby and family, who were just on their way home from Nasick, where they had gone to recover from fever. Bro. Eby also was ill, but not in the day. The following day we went to Bulsar. The railway journey was interesting. At one station a group of Indian Christians came into the car, and welcomed us by decorating us with wreaths of flowers.

When we finally reached Bulsar, a blaze of fire greeted us as our train rolled past the mission bungalow. At the station a score and more of Indian Christians met us and literally covered us with flowers. Tears of pain flowed as we bade our American friends adieu, but they sparkled with joy as we were so heartily greeted in India. We were hauled to the mission home, surrounded by boys carrying torches, and by those who rent the night air with their songs of joy.

In the new church we had a little meeting, where special songs of welcome were sung and where we tried to acknowledge their kindness. Does it pay? I wish you could have seen that greeting and have felt what we did.

We found the folks in good health. There have been many improvements made during the year. Progress has been made in many ways. We are now in the midst of a series of meetings preparatory to the love feast, which is to be held next Monday evening. Brother and Sister Blough are busy getting ready to sail, and if all goes well, will be far on their way when this reaches the Messenger readers. We wish them a safe and pleasant voyage.

AN INTERESTING EXPERIENCE AT WASHINGTON'S MONUMENT.

then all will be bright and clear. Then we will know even as we are known. Then the mists and clouds that overhang us now will forever have passed away. Glorious day! Troubled and sorrowing one, take courage. The mists and clouds of the consecrated life to thy Lord and Master will have a glorious significance to thee when the top of life's monument is reached. Then all will be clear and bright.

ARKANSAS.

Pitts.—Bro. S. C. Talley came to us the 17th, and preached five sermons. The attendance and attention were good, and we had the best of preaching. We feel hopeful of success at this point for the coming year. Some needy cases are being interested in their souls' welfare.—Nuts Pitts, Ark., Dec. 24.

FROM WAKITA, OKLAHOMA.

Bro. J. L. Teeter came to the Monitor congregation and began a series of meetings Dec. 4, closing the 18th. We had services each evening, and on Sunday morning we had services after Sunday-school. Dec. 8 we rejoiced to have some of the brethren and sisters visit us. They remained until after services and also visited on the Sunday-school and visited among our neighbors, as our people are very little known among them. Here is a good place to drop a little hint. Two of the sisters stayed all night with one of the neighbors, and so completely domiciled themselves as to make themselves quite agreeable. It pays to leave a good impression.

Bro. Teeter commenced with the inspiration of the Bible and used the following subjects: "Divinity of Christ," "Faith and Repentance," "Baptism: Its Importance," "Baptism: Its Mode," "Foot-washing," "The Lord's Supper and the Communion," "Salutation of the Holy Kiss," "Laying on of Hands," "Nonswearing," "Nonconformity," "Nonresistance, or Christ and War," "Sanctification," "The Prayer Covering," "Secret Societies and Christ," "Life and Death, or Foreordination," "The Easy Yoke," "The Love of God," "Will a Man Rob God?" One man said, after a few meetings, "Why didn't you tell us he was going to talk on such live topics? We thought it was going to be merely common preaching." On the subject of war one old gentleman said: "That is what I said twenty years ago—war never settles anything." Most of those subjects are familiar to many of the people, but not in the way the Brethren explain them. On sanctification an old lady said, that she had been taught it was a second work of grace, but she always thought that when the Lord did his work he did it thoroughly from the start. It seems as though some of these people have not heard of the ordinance of foot-washing.

When the weather was good we had a good attendance at our meetings. As the meetings were about to close, Bro. Teeter asked if any one had anything to say. One young man arose and said: "This man has been here preaching for us two weeks and has not said anything about money. He has to live the same as we, so let us take up a collection for him," which they did. One man had to leave before the meeting was over, and gave me a dollar and said: "Give this to the preacher." This is a time of sowing. We hope in the near future to have a bountiful harvest.

FROM PING TING CHOU, CHINA.

At this date,—Nov. 20,—we are beginning to feel the effects of winter in North China. The fall crops are all gathered in and the winter wheat is nice and green, while many fields are ready for spring crops. Except the pines, all the trees have lost their leaves, revealing unknown clusters of nests. The crows and magpies are very busy searching for daily food. The sunshine in the day time is beautifully warm. All through the winter it retains some of its great summer power. But the nights are cold and frosty, making it very hard for those who have not their wadded clothing and spend much of their time sitting on their warm kongs. They pity us, who do not have kongs to sleep on. They don't know how we can keep warm in such beds as we have, and think we must be cold if we don't use wadded clothing. But we have plenty of good, cheap coal here, so we have no fear but we will keep as warm as they do, even if we do dress and sleep on the American plan.

Bro. Crumpacker, together with Bro. Feng and another native helper, are preaching trip through the district of our territory. They expect to be gone several weeks. The Lord is blessing them greatly. Many remember Bro. Crumpacker from last year's trip. The people are buying hundreds of Gospels and our brethren preach to hundreds of people all along the way. How like Jesus and Paul's preaching tours! This is Bro. Crumpacker's delight. He is never so happy as when he is preaching the Gospel, and there is no other place in our mission field where the people—those who have never heard the Word before. Can you imagine yourself listening to the wonderful Gospel stories for the first time? Yes, and can you imagine yourself telling the story to those who have never heard it before? Then you can listen with breathless attention, and ask if it can possibly be so.

Two men have been cured in the opium refuge and like the people whom Jesus cured, are now praising God for his goodness. Another drug cured they have learned to use, and to love and trust Jesus, and attend services regularly. Five more are now taking the cure but some are having a hard time to overcome. One man felt so badly all the time that he thought if he could just have some medicine from a native doctor, he would be all right, so he secretly left the place and bought the medicine and came right back, but the medicine did him no good. He begged to be forgiven and still stay in the refuge and use foreign medicine. It is a month between the hill, perhaps, be all right by the end of the month. Another man showed much strength and determination. He soon learned to pray and trust Jesus. One day he said he did not need any more medicine, for he had prayed to Jesus to help him overcome the craving, and he had answered his prayer. Jesus was better than medicine.

The chapel gatekeeper is the helper at the refuge. He is a Christian from another place, who has come here to help us. His wife and children were killed during the Boxer troubles, so he has nothing to live for but to serve Christ. He is very consecrated and wants everybody to know Jesus. When the craving comes on the men at night, and they get desperate and can't sleep, he gets up and prays with them, as many as four or five times a night, sometimes. He has a hold of the real power of God and wants everybody else to have it. And this is the only power that can overcome sin and keep them free.

The man who has been doing our mason work promises well to be a good Christian in the near future. He is now with Bro. Crumpacker on the preaching tour, but the promised persecution is coming to them already. He is stirred up by gatekeepers of a temple near by. I had visited the home a number of times and was very welcome and told the gospel story and prayed with them, But the last time I went she said the owner of the temple said I must not come there any more to teach my religion. So she thinks I had better not come there any more, but is willing to come to our home to learn about God. She has come several times already. The good seed is beginning to grow, for during the past year that her husband be protected while he was away from home.

Many sick daily came to receive our simple remedies and we are daily praying the Lord to send us a doctor next fall. Upon whom will his blessing fall?

Shansi, China. Emma Horning.

Girdling The Globe

By D. L. Miller.

Prompted by an inborn desire to know, the author of this book made a tour of the world; and feeling himself under obligations to the many whose conditions in life prevent their going to see for themselves, he gives to the world, in this work, a record of things seen, of thrilling and interesting experiences and of lessons learned. This book is of interest to those who have been over the ground covered in it, by way of comparison with their own experiences; to those who may have under contemplation such a journey; as a guide book; to such as are denied the privilege of so doing; as a means of obtaining a fund of knowledge not otherwise obtainable. It is a continued story. The author speaks of the tour as a "homeward journey" from the very moment he and his wife started from home. The style is easy and intelligible, so that all who read can understand. The book contains 602 pages, profusely illustrated, substantially bound.

The book abounds in words of wisdom, caution and warning.

NOTES NOT CLASSIFIED

Huntingdon church was dedicated Dec. 11, and we are thankful for this comfortable house of worship. We wish to express our thanks to all who helped in this good work. Bro. M. G. Brumbaugh preached a good sermon in the morning, Bro. Ellis at 2:30 and Bro. Wm. M. Lane in the evening. It was a time of joy for us all, and we would show our gratitude to God by living such lives as shall honor him.—Bro. Millard Myers, of Chicago, preached for us last Sunday morning and Bro. P. H. Beery in the evening. Original Bible messages truly brought to us, and are better for having listened to such spiritual messengers. Our prayers go out to God for the ministries.—M. M. and Anna Blough, now sailing toward America, and whom we hope to meet soon.—Ella J. Brumbaugh, Huntingdon, Pa., Jan. 3.

Salamonia.—On Christmas evening I closed a very interesting series of meetings in what is known as the Salamonia church, Ind. The interest was good and two were baptized. I am now in the midst of a meeting in the Bethel church, near Milford, Ind. From here I go to the Deer Stillwater church, Ohio. I trust much good may be accomplished.—Reuben D. Nave, New Berlin, Ohio, Jan. 3.

Landess.—We have just closed a four weeks' series of meetings at one of our mission points, Landess, Ind. Services began at one of our second Sunday of August with six members living there that had not attended our meeting house for years. As a result of the meetings thirty-six accepted Christ. Of this number twenty-six are heads of families. Five were reclaimed, twenty-seven baptized, and three are awaiting baptism. Others are near the kingdom. Praise God for his wonder-working power.—J. W. Wright, Nappanee, Ind.

Franklin County church met in council Dec. 29, with Bro. J. R. Allen presiding. We reorganized our Sunday-school, with Bro. Ezra Burn, superintendent; Sister Lottie Allen, secretary. We decided to dispense with our Sunday-school services for the present. We decided to have prayer meeting every Wednesday night at private houses.—Frank E. Allen, R. D. 2, Dumont, Iowa, Dec. 31.

Harrisburg (West End Mission, Seventh and Maclay Streets).—Sunday, Dec. 25, we held our Christmas Love Feast. The lessons for the quarter were reviewed by four of the teachers, followed by choruses, which were sung by all of the teachers. Before dismissal, each scholar was given a box of candy and an orange. One hundred and twenty-five were present. We start out in the New Year with a new enrolment.—W. O. Maugans, 2005 Seventh Street, Harrisburg, Pa., Dec. 31.

Cando church met in council Dec. 17. One letter was received and ten were granted. Bro. J. A. Keeler was chosen as our elder for one year.—Phœbe Kesler, Zion, N. Dak., Dec. 29.

White Oak.—For two weeks Eld. I. W. Taylor conducted a series of meetings at the Longaneker house, in the White Oak congregation, which closed on Christmas night. There were eight applicants for baptism, and one to be reclaimed. Part of the time during the meetings was stormy, and this, which was an inducement for the young people to attend. More seem to be near the kingdom.—Anna E. Shaffer, Manheim, Pa., Dec. 28.

Patterson.—Last week we enjoyed several lectures by Bro. H. J. Harvey, which were interesting indeed. He began on Friday evening and continued over Sunday. These lectures were on the Old Testament and were appreciated. The attendance was good. On Saturday evening we met at our little church and enjoyed a Christmas tree and our Sunday-school children. After the children had done their part, Bro. Harvey spoke to the children on Christmas, its origin and should mean. Then a treat was given to the children, which made them glad. It reminded them of the treats given them of our Sunday-school. Sunday morning we met for Sunday-school. After the recitation of the lesson, we reorganized for the new year with Bro. Gilbert Fike, superintendent, and Bro. Durbin as secretary-treasurer. At 7 P. M. we met again, to listen to another doctrinal lecture. Every one was highly interested. A collection, which amounted to more than Bro. Harvey's expenses, was taken. The meetings were in every way good.—W. T. Haynes, Patterson, Cal., Dec. 31.

Rexpress.—Our church met in council Dec. 27, at 7:30 P. M., Bro. B. F. Fike presiding. The treasurer's report was read and accepted. One letter was granted. The church elected officers for the coming year. Bro. Wm. Hutchinson was chosen elder; Bro Ivan Jorgans, clerk; Bro. Frank Fike, treasurer; Sister Ethel Fike, church correspondent; Bro. Luther Beckly, president of the prayer meeting; Brethren Earl Whites and Bascomb Phillips, librarians. Bro. Iyan Jorgans was elected superintendent of the Sunday-school, and Sister Ethel Johnson, assistant. Sister Ethel Fike was chosen missionary distributor.—Wm. H. Lichty, Nezperce, Idaho, Dec. 31.

Pleasant Hill.—Our church met on Christmas Day. Brethren S. E. Hylton and Francis Weddle impressed some good thoughts upon our minds. Our Sunday-school services were conducted by Bro. Austin Hylton. A collection of $5.80 was taken for World-wide Missions.—Ruth A. Hylton, Willis, Va., Dec. 31.

Mount Garfield.—Our church met in council Dec. 28. We elected church officers as follows: Elder, Bro. W. A. Rose; church clerk, Bro. W. R. Hornbaker; mission solicitor and treasurer, Sister Rose; delegate to State Meeting, Eld. W. A. Rose and the writer. We send one query to District Meeting. Two letters were received and one was granted since our last report. Sister Clara Clark was chosen Sunday-school superintendent. Bro. M. L. Emmert was chosen president of the Christian Workers' Meeting. Bro. A. C. Root is expected to begin a series of meetings for us Jan. 8.—Clara Clark, R. D. 1, Palisade, Colo., Dec. 31.

St. Frances.—Our church met in council Dec. 23. Our elder, Bro. H. J. Lilly, was moderator. We also had meeting on Christmas Day, which was well attended. Bro. Lilly preached a good Christmas sermon. Our Sunday-school officers were reelected.—Lee Woodie, Palestine, Ark., Dec. 30.

Lancaster.—Our love feast was held Nov. 27. We also had children's day exercises in the forenoon of the same day. Ministering brethren present from other congregations were: Elders C. Ebey, Reuben H. Zahnizer and M. G. Forney; brethren L. N. Musser, Amos Hottenstein and William Zobler. Eld. C. J. Baker officiated. The meeting was largely attended, and the tables were filled. The services were very spiritual and uplifting. The sisters broke bread and gave out the cup. Monday evening, Dec. 26, according to our usual custom, we had Christmas and missionary exercises at the church, which were well attended. The Sunday-school children took part in the services, did particularly well. We had forty large baskets provisions to distribute to the needy. We trust we brought a ray of Christmas cheer to forty homes. —Emma C. E. Landess, 219 College Ave., Lancaster, Pa., Dec. 31.

Beaverton.—On account of smallpox in the neighborhood, our church is closed for thirty days. With our companion and son we drove fourteen miles on Christmas to our Bro. Edwin Pike. There we met Bro. Ferry Arnold and family, and other brethren and sisters and relatives. There were thirty-two children in all. After dinner we were called to the sitting room by Bro. Arnold, and when we were all seated, he gave us a short Christmas talk. Our services were opened by Bro. N. McKimmy, who gave us many good thoughts. Bro. Arnold followed with more good, inspiring thoughts. Then the writer was called on to talk to the children. Among other things I told them of some of the great needs in our city missions, and then gave them a chance to help in this great work. The collection amounted to $5, to be sent to Sister Gardner, in Toledo, for the benefit of the poor children. —Mrs. Nathan McKimmy, Beaverton, Mich., Dec. 31.

Wenatchee.—Our Sunday-school, in the city of Wenatchee, was reorganized on Christmas Day. The following officers were elected: Bro. Cline, superintendent; Lester Lavel, secretary. A collection of $2.93 was taken up for the Worldwide Mission. Our Sunday-school is growing in attendance and interest. We have preaching twice each Sunday, and a study of the Book of Mission every Sunday and Thursday nights, conducted by Bro. J. S. Smith.—Sister Pearl Smith, Wenatchee, Wash., Dec. 28.

Notice to Northern Indiana.—Churches desiring to entertain the District Meeting of 1911 will please make their request at once, as the conference committee will be located. Order of the District Meeting officials.—J. W. Kitson, Writing Clerk, Fort Wayne, Ind., Dec. 30.

Tropico church met in council Dec. 24, with our elder, Bro. Wm. Stutsman, presiding. We had a very enjoyable meeting. All business was disposed of pleasantly, and Sunday-school officers were elected. Bro. Chas. Fishel was chosen church clerk; Bro. Wm. Lauman, treasurer; Lucinda Stutsman, Sunday-school superintendent. Since our last report one has been reclaimed.—Lucinda Stutsman, Third and Sinclair, Glendale, Cal., Dec. 28.

Fredonia.—We have just located here. We came to this place to look for the Lord. There is a live church here, consisting of about ninety members. Our churchhouse is located in the midst of the famous gas and oil belt of Southeastern Kansas, where we have wild winters, beautiful summers, gas for fuel and light, a hospitable people, a healthful climate, excellent roads and a progressive people. Any of our Brethren, contemplating a change of location, would do well to look our country over. Any one wishing further information, can write me, enclosing stamp. I will cheerfully answer as best I can.—W. E. Rogers, R. D. 6 Fredonia, Kans., Dec. 28.

East Wenatchee. Sunday-school gave an interesting program on Christmas Day, in the usual Sunday-school hour. The program was followed by an excellent Christmas sermon by our young minister, Bro. C. N. Stutsman, who has recently located among us. We are anxiously looking forward to a series of meetings to begin the 8th of January, conducted by Eld. W. H. Eikenberry, of Barnum, Minn.—Vinnie A. Sellers, Wenatchee, Wash., Dec. 26.

New Freedom.—Bro. J. M. Mohler began a series of meetings in the New Freedom church Dec. 3, continuing until Dec. 18. He preached eighteen sermons, and didn't use the "Word of Truth" with power. The members were greatly strengthened, and a number came to be near the kingdom.—J. H. Keller, Shrewsbury, Pa., Dec. 30.

FROM DENVER, COLO.

Our revival meetings at this place closed Dec. 15. The attendance was good, and the church labored earnestly. Three were baptized, one reclaimed and two are awaiting baptism. Two dear ones, who came forward, are hindered by parents.

On Friday evening we met in council, with our new elder and pastor, Bro. C. E. Wolf, presiding. Five church letters were read and accepted. Officers were elected at this meeting as follows: Church officers,—clerk, Bro. E. J. Cline; secretary-treasurer, Bro. Jesse Culler (reelected); Messenger agent, Sister Ina Stotts. The writer was chosen as church correspondent. Bro. C. C. Rust was chosen as Sunday-school superintendent; Sister Sophia Bodkin, secretary. Bro. C. C. Rust was also elected president of the Christian Workers' Meeting, and Bro. E. J. Cline, secretary-treasurer. The church is well represented, and the spirit of love reigned supremely.

Sunday morning, at 11 A. M., we were bountifully fed from the Word by our pastor, and just before the 2 P. M. services, which were conducted by Bro. Hoff, of India, we engaged in the anointing of our dear Brother and Sister Weidman, who have valiantly fought the Christian battle and are almost ready for the crown of victory. How precious to us are the lives of our old fellow-soldiers! May we, by the assistance of this grand old army, strive to attain to that high standard of Christian life and usefulness, of which they have been an example!

At 7 P. M. we surrounded the Lord's tables, with several of our visiting members present. Bro. Wolf officiated. Forty-nine brethren and sisters engaged in the ordinances of the Lord's house. These have truly been seasons of great refreshing for us, and we pray that this same spirit may more fully prepare us for the great work that is to be done in this great city.—Mrs. A. G. Rust.

ONESIMUS

The Runaway Slave

By ELD. H. B. BRUMBAUGH

A book of sacred history, and biography, which, in a fascinating style, portrays an interesting phase of Eastern life and the conduction of Roman Society at the time when Paul wrote his epistle to Philemon. This little volume was not written in a day. Much patient research and careful study are clearly evinced throughout.

Better not begin the reading of it at a time when you have an important appointment near at hand. When once you begin it you will not want to stop short of the end. It is a charming story of an elevating character. Bound in cloth with gold side title.

AROUND THE WORLD

A Threatened Beer-Famine.

We are told that the world's crop of hops is 20,000,000 pounds short, and that only a record-breaking crop during the coming year can avert a beer-famine. We can readily think of a number of things infinitely worse than a shortage of the beer supply. In fact, a limited production of this worse than useless stimulant, entailing, possibly, an increase of price, might set some people to thinking about better ways of spending their money, and there might be a real gain in the end. "Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread?"

Commendable Social Reforms in Portugal.

If the Minister of the Interior in Portugal is permitted to introduce the reform measures now contemplated, that country will surely enjoy some most commendable privileges. Concerning the hitherto rather indifferent regard for Sunday as a day of rest, arrangements for a more appropriate observance of the day are to be perfected. Aged toilers are to be supplied with pensions. Public aid and protection are to be given to maternity, and proper care is to be extended to helpless childhood. The school system is to be enlarged, with free distribution of food, clothing and books to needy children. Such plans for better civic conditions are praiseworthy indeed, for they are sure to work for good, especially if proper religious instruction is permitted to do its work of uplift, "Righteousness exalteth a nation."

A Missionary Exposition.

From April 24 to May 20 a great Missionary Exposition is to be held in Boston. The history and triumphs of Christianity in every part of the world will be graphically shown. Village and city scenes in mission fields are to be faithfully portrayed, thus enabling the public to see for themselves at a glance the true conditions prevailing at home and abroad. If the proposed exposition should be as complete and accurate as the one held some years ago in England, it will doubtless be a great factor in arousing missionary enthusiasm. There is perhaps no subject on which the average person is so lamentably ignorant as that of the real needs of heathen lands. Anything that will afford a wider outlook,—a broadening of the horizon,—so that the true significance of the "Go ye" may be more fully realized, will be a distinct gain to the cause of missions.

Hindrances to Mission Work in Africa.

One would hardly suppose that Great Britain would seek to hinder the progress of missions in any of her possessions, and yet such seems to be the case in the Sudan mission field. This makes the task of the missionary doubly hard. It is discouraging enough to labor for years among low and degraded natives, reaping but scant reward for his arduous toil, but when, added to all, there is the stolid indifference and even the thinly-disguised opposition of the Government, the work becomes difficult indeed. Belgium, also, is taking the same attitude regarding mission work in its territory, while the Mohammedans let no opportunity pass by unimproved, to express their contempt and rage toward Christians engaged in gospel propagation. Thus the life of a missionary in Africa is far from being an easy one. Like Paul, he is "in perils often," and his friends are few indeed.

President Jordan's Proposed Attack on War.

According to an official announcement of President David Starr Jordan, of Leland Stanford University, the campaign against war, under the auspices of the Carnegie Peace Foundation, of which he is the leading spirit, will be opened by the diffusion of more widespread knowledge on the facts of war. Europe's enormous war debt, which is slowly but surely crushing the unfortunate citizens of the continent, is a burden so intolerable that none but those directly affected can fully realize it. More information on this point will be a great educator to the people in general. Then, too, there are to be "investigations of the cause, nature and effects of war," "promotion of international courts," etc. From the outline of the work, as given by Pres. Jordan, it would appear that the men in charge of the "Foundation" propose to make a vigorous effort in behalf of safe and sane methods of peaceably settling international differences. A right conception of human brotherhood will gradually lead to that exalted plane on which war will be impossible.

Temperance Gains in Canada.

If there is one thing in which friends of temperance can heartily rejoice, it is the progress of the good work in our neighboring country to the north. Revised returns of the local option vote in Ontario show that twenty-six municipalities have lately been added to the "dry" column. The 816 municipalities of the province are now divided as follows: No liquor license, 436; license, 380. When our Canadian friends take hold of a reform work it is bound to go. No half-way measures are tolerated. With them it is, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might,"—a good motto at all times.

The Unrest in Egypt.

The situation in Egypt is by no means reassuring. At present the various reactionary elements are dropping previous disagreements, and are making serious attempts to join forces against British domination of Egypt. Just what the result of these combined efforts will be, regarding the maintenance of present conditions in Egypt, only the future can tell. One thing is sure,—the intolerance and blind fanaticism of the followers of the prophet bodes ill to European preponderance in Egypt. It would not be strange if, amid the changing events of history, the land of the Nile were again to achieve its independence, and regain at least a part of its former glory, recalling the prominent part it once played in the history of the people and events of Bible times.

Better Conditions for Monaco.

In the southeastern corner of France, close to the Italian frontier, lies Monaco, Europe's smallest principality, known chiefly because of its notorious gambling resort, hitherto carried on by the full consent of Prince Albert, the ruler of the country, and the special beneficiary. The citizens of the principality come to have sought to obtain constitutional privileges for some years, but only recently have they succeeded in getting the desired concession from the autocratic ruler. There is a strong pressure that the gambling resort will termed the "plague spot of Europe," be eliminated, and possibly that may now be done, since the people share in the control of affairs. Monaco, though it has but 19,000 inhabitants, may now take a stand for law and order equal to any of the larger nations, and it remains to be seen whether, like a Daniel of old, they "dare to do right."

The Earthquake in Russian Turkestan.

When the seismograph stations in the United States and other countries recorded violent disturbances, Jan. 4, it was taken for granted that a severe earthquake had visited some portion of our globe, and there was no surprise when the cable flashed the news of a great calamity in Russian Turkestan, just east of the Caspian Sea. It is stated, in latest reports, that the town of Przhevalsk, near Lake Issyk-Kul, sank with all its inhabitants. This, if correct, would mean the loss of 10,000 lives. A new lake, it is said, now occupies the site of the town. Pishpek, on the River Chue, is also reported as having been destroyed, together with its 6,000 inhabitants. While full particulars are not yet available, there is no doubt that, by one of those appalling cataclysms of nature, thousands of our fellow-beings have been ushered into eternity without a moment's notice. Such occurrences,—liable to happen anywhere,—certainly should make one think. Seemingly nothing is more uncertain than life. It is well to "take heed to our ways,"—to "walk circumspectly, redeeming the time."

Child Labor Reform.

Recognizing that the future welfare of our country depends upon the welfare of the child, the churches of our nation have been invited by the National Child Labor Committee to observe Jan. 22, or the nearest convenient Sunday, as Child Labor Day. Since the organization of this movement, thousands of little boys and girls have been rescued from coal mines, glass factories, cotton mills, cigar and cigarette factories, and have been accorded the inalienable privileges of real child-life. Many States have already been induced to pass laws to that end, but in thirteen States children under fourteen years of age may still legally work in factories and other industries. In thirty-five States children may work in coal mines and other dangerous occupations. In thirty-three States children may even work all night in glass works, cotton mills and other factories. It is evident that protection must be given the children, and unquestionably is it the duty of the church to help in arousing public sentiment in their behalf. It is the will of the Father above that "not one of these little ones should perish."

Anarchistic Demonstrations in Europe.

London's recent experience with anarchists shows that these enemies of law and government are still intent upon their warfare against society in general. Their pernicious activity was further demonstrated when, Jan. 5, an attempt was made upon the life of King Alfonso of Spain, during his temporary sojourn at Malaga, en route from Madrid to Melilla, Morocco. Only by a slight miscalculation did the attempted explosion fail in its fatal work. The circumstance calls to mind the sad thought that there is as yet, no absolute protection against anarchistic attacks, judging by the many fatalities of the past. Equally reprehensible, however, is the anarchist of the spiritual realm who, by pernicious doctrines, would rob mankind of all that is best and dearest,—even eternal happiness itself,—if given an opportunity. Jude gives a fair description of such, "These are they who make separations, sensual, having not the Spirit."

The Cost of Christmas.

The chief of the bureau of statistics of the Department of Agriculture has been making an unofficial estimate of the cost of Christmas giving. According to his estimate only half of the people the past year made presents involving an actual outlay of money. Of the other half, some did not give presents because they do not believe in the custom, and others could not do so because they lived too far away from the rest. A vast number, however, failed to give because they have barely enough to feed, clothe and shelter themselves and their families. The total Christmas expense, to the people of the United States, is estimated at $90,000,000 cash. Perhaps $9,000,000 in debts had to be incurred, in order to secure the desired gifts, while hundreds, doubtless, practiced the most rigid economy to permit the outlay. Some one, perhaps, is ready to ask, Was it worth while? This depends on the spirit of both giver and receiver as well as the gift itself. If it brought them nearer the Christ, and gave them real Christmas joy, it was money well spent,—a worthy celebration of the world's greatest day.

Religious Pretenders.

Of new creeds there is, apparently, no end. No sooner has one fallacy of religious belief been exposed, until a new prophet arises, proclaiming an exalted vision of things spiritual, and,—strange to relate,—he finds a host of followers, no matter how absurd or erratic his so-called teachings. This peculiarity of human nature was brought to view anew, recently, when E. A. See, of Chicago, the pretended "revealer of the will of God" and, as such, claiming Divine power, was summarily called to account by the city authorities. Long and loud were his pretensions as to "purification," the "absolute life" and "Divine visions," and strong enough has been his personal influence to gather a number of deluded followers, but all this does not avail in the eye of the law if the life of the would-be "revelator" oversteps the commonly-accepted boundaries of propriety. Thus another "cult" has been consigned to oblivion, but this does not preclude scores of other visionaries from making similar attempts. The words of John, the beloved disciple, may well apply: "Many deceivers are entered into the world. . . . Look to yourselves."

A Wedding in Jerusalem.

Bro. A. C. Wieand sends us the following particulars concerning an event of interest to all our readers: "Those of us who were in Jerusalem on the evening of Nov. 6, were permitted to witness a unique, most pleasant and beautiful little service. The occasion was the marriage of Bro. W. R. Miller and Sister Olive Ringler, of Nappanee, Ind. The wedding took place on the Sunday evening just previous to departure of about half of our party on their journey homeward from the Holy City. The Jerusalem home of our party has been the Hughes Hotel, presided over so graciously, and in such a Christian spirit, by Mr. and Mrs. Hughes, and so ably assisted in every good word and work by Mr. and Mrs. Forder. Well, it was in the parlor of this hotel that we gathered, a little company,—honored also by the presence of the American Consul at Jerusalem, to witness the ceremony and lend it legal sanction,—to ratify and seal by the sanction of a religious service, the union of these two dear hearts whom God hath joined together in pure Christian love and the bonds of holy matrimony. After the service was over, we repaired to the dining room, where was prepared the simple wedding feast. What impressed us all was the beautiful, homelike spirit and way in which the tables were prepared, and tastily decked with flowers native to the Holy City. May God yet add many years of blessing!"

ESSAYS

Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth

God Knows.

BY D. R. BEARD.

What if life be a mystery,
God understands;
Not only life but everything
He comprehends.

Just why our lives are what they are
The Lord doth know,
If we have really lived for him
They're ordered so.

The thing that God hath kept concealed
Hath well been done,
When he will have us more to know
He'll tell some one.

For every thing he hath revealed
We should be glad
And not for things he's kept concealed
Should we be sad.

The universe with truths Divine
Doth overflow,
And what's for the Lord doth grant
Is ours to know.

The reason much is dark to us,—
And much is so,
Is not God's fault, it's simply this
We learn so slow.

Since bright creation's dawning morn
On man did shine,
The Lord has tried to teach us all
Of things divine.

But oft we fail to hear or see
The lessons given,
And so we fail to understand
The life we're living.

Dear Lord, we pray with strong desire
For truth and light,
To guide our footsteps day by day
Into the right.

And grant, dear Lord, that we by faith
May win the way
Into thy realm, where mysteries
Are cleared away.

Pastoral Visitation.

BY P. R. KELTNER.

The need of the minister using a very considerable part of his time visiting the homes of his congregation, is becoming more and more apparent. The changed conditions that are taking place in our manner of living,—using this as a general term,—is forcing all religious bodies to become awakened to the great need of pastoral visitation. There may have been a time, in the earlier history of each community, when churches could more easily get along without it than now, as it is now true, that there are churches and communities that can better subsist than others without a systemized calling into the homes of the people. But these churches and communities that can so exist and in a degree prosper, are becoming more and more the exceptions, and the probabilities are that even they could be much better served and helped, were they more frequently made to know the good effects of pastoral work, and to appreciate the visit of the minister into the home as a pastoral duty.

There are, in every community, scores of people that can not be reached by the pulpit. Some of them only go to church occasionally. Many of them do not go at all. If they are to be enlisted, helped and saved, some one must go where they are, meet them and talk to them on the plane of their life's surroundings. Among this class of people are many good and noble men and women. They are at least a part of the "field" that is waiting for "laborers" to come and gather them into the Lord's garner. Pastoral visitation is indeed a noble part of the great missionary spirit that is awakening and taking hold of us. We can no more consistently oppose the need of a house-to-house visit of the minister, than we can consistently oppose the sending of missionaries into foreign lands, to meet the needs of Christ's teachings. The "go ye" is no less a duty in the one than in the other. The masses can only be reached by going where they are, and awakening in them, as the Lord may direct by his Spirit, the need of salvation.

Then there are many, too, who must have help aside from what they get at the services. The hour of service, with its sermon, does not meet nearly all the diversified needs of the people. Some are not able to get from the sermon and the service the needed food their souls require. They will go home from the service,—if even they can be gotten there regularly,—unsatisfied. Their souls are not fed to the extent that others are, from the sermon. There will be still a material lack. But a prayerful visit into the home, a heart-to-heart talk with the inmates, a personal prayer for them and their children, will touch a chord that will bring a response, when all other means fail. Many will be awakened. Others will be made conscious, as never before, that we may all be workers in the vineyard, and still others will be better made to know that the minister is a man of sympathy, and that he is willing to come down to their plane, and reason and think with them.

We can not all be strong and convincing pulpit orators. It is reasonable to conclude that the Lord does not mean that all of us should be. If he had felt that the world was to be saved by oratory and strong, convincing pulpit reasoning, he would have made more of that class of people. But from the fact that there are so few of such preachers, we may conclude that the Lord sees other qualities that are more effective than the mere ability to preach like Paul. This does not, in any way, disparage the gift that God has given to the few, but it should teach us that there are more fruitful ways to reach the masses. One of the most fruitful of these means is to be a good pastor. While the large majority of ministers are but ordinary pulpit speakers, most of them may become strong and useful men by using their talent and much of their time in pastoral visitation. Surely no work will yield greater returns! It is true that many churches are losing out in membership and spirituality, largely because of the lack of earnest, prayerful, pastoral work.

The ordinary preacher,—and the most of us are in that list,—can not, by his sermons on the Lord's Day, touch the hearts of the community in a way that they will be aroused to active work and duty. But though we have but average talent in ability as preachers, most of us might, by some earnest efforts, become effective ministers, would we more frequently go into the homes of the members in our several fields. There we meet with the people on a common plane. They are ready to open their hearts to us. We may learn the hindrances they have, and the struggles they have to bear. They will there be free in expressing themselves, and in making known to him, whom they believe to be a man of God, their heart's deepest feelings. And there, after a short, earnest conversation, largely on spiritual things, and, when occasion permits, a short season of prayer, the minister is permitted to leave an impress for good that he can in no other way.

Again; our missionary activities are taking us into fields, where we are but little known, and where our membership is so small, if any, that if we have a people to preach to, they must be secured in some other way, aside from the mere announcement of a preaching service. In entering upon our work in the cities, we find that many of the people are strangers to our practices, and the interest of such must be enlisted in some other way aside from mere preaching. Our own people and their children may be held together, in a way, by the regular routine service, but services, —even with preaching above the ordinary,—are not going to attract strangers who are not directly interested, to any great degree. The most practical way to reach these classes, is by pastoral visitation. Get the people interested in us by letting them know we are interested in them. Our cities are fruitful fields for such kind of work. The secret societies, the insurance man, the diversified business enterprises, carry their claims to the doors of the people. They do not weary of it. They are everlastingly at it. Why should not we, who have a whole Gospel, the words of the Eternal God, use as much wisdom in taking our business to where the people are?

Disposing of an Estate.

BY JAMES A. SELL.

All persons are like it was said of the priests of old, "They were not permitted to continue by reason of death." Our little life runs its course and the current begins to show up as we approach its close. Our failing strength admonishes us that we are coming to the end and some changes must, of necessity, be made. Some find themselves encumbered with considerable property of value, as the accumulations of honest toil and endeavor. What to do with it now is quite a problem. To keep and care for it is a burden. To dispose of it unwisely or indiscreetly is to turn a blessing into a curse. The division may be very simple and inexpensive.

A good method, and one that is rather common among our people, is for the individual owner to be his own administrator. As he retires from business, and while yet in a sound state of body and mind, he sells or divides his property among his children or friends, reserving a certain annuity, to cease at death. This is an excellent plan, as it gives the proper ones the use of the property in a way and at a time when they can utilize it, and saves all expenses of a division and settlement after death. It also assures against the possibility of litigation. Property, disposed of in this way, can be secured against loss to all parties concerned.

Another way is to keep all possessions until death and then let them be disposed of, and distribution be made according to law. This means an equal division among the heirs, and at once throws the business into the hands of the court. It means appraisers, attorneys, auditors and, likely, prolonged litigation. Large estates have been nearly consumed by this way of disposing of them.

Another method is by a will. The difference between this and the former is that the owner says who shall and who shall not have his possessions, but in both cases a share—and sometimes a goodly share,—goes to pay expenses, and there is always present the possibility of a will being contested in the expensive machinery of the courts.

Undoubtedly a better way is to settle up and dispose of all, make distribution to the proper ones, and execute all necessary papers in order to secure the rights and titles of all.

When this can not be done, the next best thing to do is to make a will. But in disposing of your property, do not forget the Lord. All you have, after all, is his. He may have given to you freely. He gave you health, strength and judgment to make and keep what you have. Give part of it,—a goodly share,—back to him. Remember that all his work, carried on in the world,—missions, Sunday-schools, temperance, and charity,—necessitates expense. They can, in no sense, be made self-supporting. But the Lord has entrusted to his servants plenty of means to carry on all these enterprises, if they will only devote their possessions to the proper use. He will not be pleased if you hoard up your money during life, and at death dispose of it in a way whereby it is lost to his work, and may possibly be used to advance the cause of evil.

Many of our people are waking up to the importance of giving a portion of their estate to the Lord, and we have some noble examples of judicious investments for helping the good work along after the donors have gone to their reward. Of such a donor it may well be said, "And by it he being dead yet speaketh,"—and worketh, too. These examples should be followed.

Our people have not been educated to give as they should. It had not entered into their customs, and they therefore did not acquire the giving habit. They lived the simple life, practiced economy, built cheap churches, had a free ministry, accumulated money, put it out at interest, or invested it in property. When left to heirs who were out of the church, the money was not only lost to the church, but frequently used to support something that was to the detriment and sometimes to the disgrace of the church.

In the noted case of the poor widow who gave more than the rich, it is said that "Jesus sat over against the treasury, and beheld how the people cast money into the treasury." He sits there yet, and notes, approves of, and blesses, the liberal giver.

The Inspiration of the Bible.

BY NETTIE C. WEYBRIGHT.

II. How It Is Inspired.

ASSUMING, then, that the Bible is different from all other books,—inspired by the Holy Spirit,—the question arises, How is it inspired? To what extent? On this phase of the question also many theories are extant, a few principal ones of which, briefly stated, are the following:

I. Intuition or Natural Theory.—This teaches that the Bible writers had simply a high development of natural powers, or were geniuses, that there was nothing supernatural, mysterious or peculiar about them. But to this one would say, It is more than poetical rapture. Nowhere in literature can we find a "Thus saith the Lord," nor do we expect it. Evidently the difference is not simply of degree, but of kind. There is a certain "unknown quality" about it that even Shakespeare lacks. Were this true, the Bible, the Koran and the Vedas would all be equal.

II. The Illumination Theory, or Universal Christian Inspiration.—By this it is assumed that the religious perceptions of Christians were simply intensified and elevated, the same as all Christians possess, only, somehow, superior in degree,—that men are inspired today the same as Paul was. Were this true, we might have a new Bible for each age, but, for some reason, no one has, as yet, attempted it.

III. Dictation or Mechanical.—This theory makes men passive in the hands of the Holy Spirit to such a degree that they are mere machines, or hands, by which he wrote. Were this theory true, there would be no individuality manifest, no variety of style, whereas a great diversity of style is clearly evident.

IV. The Plenary-Verbal.—This theory not only comprises the truth of the others, but is still richer and fuller. It holds all Scripture to be equally inspired, that at all times God superintended or directed the choice of words, and that, at times, the very words were given by the Holy Spirit. (Ex. 4:12). This is "Verbal Inspiration."

"Plenary,"—is that which excludes all defects in the utterance of the Inspired Message. The Holy Spirit elevated and directed the faculties of the writers, when need be, and thus secured the errorless expression in language of the thought designed by God. This is "Plenary Inspiration." Thus, combined, we have the theory of Plenary-Verbal Inspiration.

Thus God sometimes, but not always, dictated the words directly, but mediately by producing such vivid ideas of thought and fact that the writers could find words fitted to their purpose. He wrought in, and with, and through, their spirits, so as to preserve their individuality to others, just as he now develops in each of his children the new man, yet preserves their own individuality. Thus the Bible is the Word of God in the language of men,—truly divine, yet truly human, making God, in the fullest sense, responsible for every word. We certainly would not concede that man is free when God controls his thoughts, and assert that he is a mere machine when this control extends to his words.

This theory is not new. The ancient church believed it. Justin Martyr said, "The Divine Plectrum, itself descending from heaven, makes use of holy men, as a harp or lyre, to reveal to us the knowledge of divine and heavenly things." Irenæus said, "The Scriptures are indeed perfect since they were uttered by the Word of God and his Spirit." Origen and Augustine also agreed. The Early Christians, at the Council of Nice, A. D. 325, said that the apostles had written what they saw, heard and knew.

But "what saith the Scriptures?"

I. 2 Tim. 3:16 says, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." This makes no distinction. This, of course, refers to the Old Testament. But if the Old Testament was wholly inspired, how much more the New? The apostles were prophets, but more than prophets,—of greater importance. They were sent forth by Christ, as he was sent forth by the Father. They were to go to the whole world, whereas the prophets spoke mainly to the Jewish nation. They received the keys of the kingdom of heaven, were especially taught by the Comforter (John 14:26). Some, who hold to partial inspiration only, argue that the history, at least, is not inspired, because of defects. But certainly, history is especially inspired. The doctrine of sin is based on the fall; faith is taught by God's dealings with Abraham; the priesthood of Hebrews is based upon the history of Leviticus; the person and work of the Holy Ghost are founded upon the historical Book of Acts.

II. The prophets wrote not their own will, but spoke as they were moved (carried along in God's will) by the Holy Ghost (2 Peter 1:21). So, when we read the utterances of the apostles and prophets, we are not reading their words, but the words of God. The Psalmist says, in 2 Sam. 23:2, "The spirit of the Lord spake by me, and his word was in my tongue." The prophet Isaiah says, in Isa. 1:10, that he spoke the "Word of the Lord;" Jeremiah gives us the same idea in Jer. 1:6-9. It is said that the expressions "The Lord spake," "The Word of the Lord came," etc., are found nearly 4,000 times in the Old Testament.

III. Christ, in John 10:34, asserts the law to be the Word of God. The use he made of the law, in Matt. 4:3-10, in the hour of temptation, shows the implicit confidence that he, the "Omniscient One," had in it.

IV. The apostles assure us directly that they received the Holy Spirit (1 Cor. 2:10). Their claim was attested by numerous miracles (2 Cor. 12:12). They were verbally inspired on Pentecost (Acts 2:4). 1 Cor. 2:13 says, "We speak not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth." We certainly should accept these words as true,—as conclusive evidence.

Truly, "The Bible is the chart which guides the weary wanderer to his eternal rest. It is a continued story,—a record of the great plan of God for the world he made and the church he redeemed. It reveals the way of their salvation and foreshows their eternal destiny. It is no man's book, but springs from the eternal depths of divine wisdom, love and grace. It is the transcript of the Divine Mind, the unfolding of the Divine Purpose, the revelation of the Divine Will." May we humbly, unhesitatingly, trustingly, accept it as such!

The Secret of Unbelief.

BY EZRA FLORY.

THE process of finding God is a process of living,—not merely one of thinking. The most conclusive of the reasoned arguments do not prevail with some men. There are other men who have a deep, abiding faith in God, though they know little about ordinary theistic evidences. The fair inference is that men believe or disbelieve in God because they use or do not use the proper faculties for apprehending him. The failure of men to believe when reasonably convinced, seems to prove that the intellect alone is not sufficient for belief. Therefore the prime necessity is to cultivate the habit of looking for God in our experience, and of living as if God were present with us, for thus he always is.

The most concise summary of the reasons for unbelief found in the ministry of Jesus is in John 5:30-47. Notice the rejected evidence: Another (v. 32); John Baptist (v. 33); the works of Jesus (v. 36); the Father (v. 37); the Scriptures (v. 39); Moses (v. 45). What an array of evidence! It reminds one of Luke 16:31, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, if one rise from the dead." Or, in other words, if they will not accept the evidence they have, they will not accept more evidence. The first reason the Master assigned is in verse thirty-seven, and in essence is this: A lack of spiritual experience—spiritual ignorance. No doubt there was plenty of form and ritual. "They that worship him must worship him in spirit and truth." Really, there is no coming to God till we come in this way.

The second reason is, There was no abiding of his Word. The reason here is also evident—not believing in him. He who lives the Word has the best commentary upon it.

Formal search of the Scriptures is assigned as a third reason for unbelief (John 5:39, 40, 46, 47). They knew the very place where the new king was to be born, chapter and verse, so to say, but we marvel at their slowness to believe in the Messiah.

Then, in verse 40, they did not will to come to him. The will and affections are the seat of unbelief (John 7:17). "If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know of the teaching." O, if we could only move the wills of men!

Verse 42 says they were not really loving God. Many excuses are often propounded, when, in fact, this is the real ailment.

Listening to false prophets is assigned in verse 43. Compare 1 John 2:18 and Rev. 13:6. He who does not accept the truth will accept fables. "If the vessel is not filled with wheat, the devil will fill it with chaff." Here is the reason for the progress of Dowie, Mrs. Eddy and a host of others. "I am come in my Father's name, and ye receive me not; if another shall come in his own name, him ye will (literally, 'ye will to') receive."

Another reason is seen in verse 44,—Vainglory. No wonder the Master told us to do secretly our alms, praying, and fasting. There is still much chance for the bias to unbelief in these very things.

Eighthly, these people are self-condemned (verses 45-47). Of course, there are other reasons for unbelief. John 3:19 tells us that one of these is a bad life. "Men love the darkness because their deeds are evil."

Materialism is still another reason (John 2:20; 6:52; 3:12; 8:19; 20:25). Where did Jesus learn all these things that the best of the best in his time did not apprehend? The answer is, From God.

His humble origin (John 7:27) was another objection and excuse for not accepting him.

But the prejudice of the people was still another (John 9:16, 29; 11:53). Professors who do not shine for him, everywhere and always, are also a great cause of unbelief.

The Challenge of the City

BY JOHN R. SNYDER.

"And when he drew nigh he saw the city and wept over it." (Luke 19:41).

THE city today presents one of the most perplexing problems that confronts the church of Jesus Christ. Here is an intermingling of men and women of all classes and conditions and tongues. Here is the influx of foreign-speaking peoples from the four quarters of the globe, with their peculiar customs and beliefs. Here are all kinds of religious creeds, and some people with no creed at all. Here are vice and gross immorality on every side. If Jesus Christ were to come to earth today, and visit one of our modern cities, he would again "weep over it," as he did on that day, long ago, when he viewed Jerusalem for the last time,—just a few days before he was crucified.

The movement today is toward the city. The last census, taken a few months ago, is a proof of this fact. There is a gradual drifting from the rural districts to the larger centers of population. From largely a farming country we are changing to an industrial nation. Our young men and young women are going from our country homes and finding employment in the factories, the offices and the stores of the great centers of industry and commerce.

Right here a great responsibility rests upon the Church of the Brethren. Many of our own sons, and daughters are finding their way to the city and unless we look after them, they will soon be caught in the great vortex of the world, swallowed up in the mass of humanity, and lost to the church and to Jesus Christ. For a number of years past it has been our lot to reside in cities in which the Church of the Brethren is not represented by an organization, and in every place have we found persons who have said, "Yes, my father and mother belonged to the Brethren church but when we came here we drifted away because there was no church here, and we joined another denomination."

At the Winona Conference one of the speakers made the startling statement that if the Church of the Brethren had done nothing more than saved their own children since the time the church came to America, it would number over two million members. This statement should cause us to stop and consider our responsibility for a moment. We cannot bring back what is past, but we can guard against it in the future. We must go to the city if we would keep our own.

Until quite recently the church was almost entirely rural. But changes have come and there is a drift toward the city. Changing commercial, industrial and social conditions have turned the tide from the country to the city. These changing conditions make the city loom up ever larger in the political, economic and social life. A moral and religious survey of the times will have the city chiefly in view.

One hundred years ago the vast majority of the population was rural. Only about three per cent lived in the cities. In 1800 New York had only 60,000 population. There were only six cities with a population of over 8,000. Today at least 35 per cent of the population live in the cities. This movement to the cities presents the most striking phenomenon in our national life. It is probably due to two causes: first, the turning away from farm life on the part of the American citizen. Second, the great migratory movement of peoples from other lands into our nation. Either one of these reasons is sufficient to cause grave concern to the church.

The future of the city is assured. Coming years will see an increased movement in that direction. Such conditions present a mighty challenge to the church. To build the city on righteousness and integrity, to permeate her institutions with the Christian spirit, to put upon her citizenship the stamp of the Christian ideal, is the mighty problem which confronts the church. Unless the possibilities for good become powers for righteousness, they will become perils to the life of the nation.

The very fact of the modern city presents a peril. The massing of human souls in unnatural and congested conditions creates a hotbed where all forms of sin develop rapidly and in a malignant form. If the city is the center of the marvelous achievements, it is also the center of anarchy and licentiousness. The character of our population presents great possibilities or perils. The inflow from the rural districts serves as a sort of safety valve to keep in check the hordes from foreign shores, but they soon amalgamate with the mass, and unless the forces of Christianity predominate, all becomes a fearful tangle of infidelity and ungodliness. Each year brings thousands to the city, dissatisfied with their past, anxiots for their future and the benefits of American citizenship. To win them to Christ and a higher citizenship is to add a mighty force to our national life. For the church to fail in this, is to miss her supreme opportunity in the present hour.

There is no reason why the Church of the Brethren should not share in this great work of redeeming the city. Some have said that our doctrine is not suited to the city. If such be true, there is something radically wrong with our doctrine. The sooner we change it the better it will be for ourselves and those whom we serve. But we are not among those who believe that our doctrine is at fault. It does mean hard work. The devil has a strong hold in the city. The environment suits his devilish purpose. But the cross of the Nazarene is equal to even this emergency, and going forth in his might we are sure to conquer. Adapting our methods to the needs of the city, there is no reason why we should not succeed. But we must not expect to accomplish in a few years what has been decades in building.

The commercial prosperity of the city creates peril. Great fortunes have been amassed, and multitudes have prospered, but never was the truth of the statement of Jesus Christ more needed, that "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." Moral and religious growth has not kept pace with the growth of the power of money. The worship of Mammon has drawn men from the worship of God. The effect is seen in lax morals, in a pagan Sabbath and in the increase of divorce.

The hope of the city is not in its size, its mayor, or in its prosperity, but in Jesus Christ. Life, such as comes from his standards, is the only solution of the moral problems. To bring his message and his life to the "inhabitants thereof" is the one great mission of the church. Let there be no drawing in of the lines, but rather let them be extended. We have reason to go forth with courage, knowing that the great Captain is leading. The task is a gigantic one, we admit. It will require a Herculean effort to overcome the enemy but he is all-sufficient. The work calls for a new sense of the power of God and his Gospel. It calls for new courage to speak from the pulpit. It requires the voice of a prophet calling out thunderings against a broken law, and the tender voice of a shepherd calling from sin. It will mean a new consecration on the part of the church, in country or city, to a personal evangelism.

Law in the Church.

BY CHARLES NOBLE STUTSMAN.

In Gospel Messenger No. 51, page 826, under "Man-made law," the editor expressed his desire to "induce thinking and reasoning along right lines." Let us, therefore, consider the relation of "law" to the church of Christ here on the earth.

"Law," as such, may be either "a uniform system and principle of action," or "a code of rules,—written or unwritten,—growing out of man's inter-relation both social and moral." It is therefore apparent that the Psalmist in his exclamation, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting (restoring) the soul" (Psa. 19:7), was not referring to the "Law," or code, commonly known as the Mosaic Law, but to his system and principles of teaching and action; for Paul, in Gal. 3:21, unmistakably affirms that the law given by Moses was imperfect at its best.

Again, in Rom. 3:19, we are told that the soul is guilty by the law, —not "restored." The Law of God is applicable only to "lawless and disobedient" (1 Tim. 1:9-10), and was "added because of transgressions" (Gal. 3:19). Added to what? The covenant with Abraham? Transgressions of what? The covenant with Abraham, certainly! Therefore the law serves "to bring us unto Christ that we might be justified" (Gal. 3:24). Why be justified? Because guilty. Guilty of what? Transgressions.

We see, then, that principles and the transgression of them preceded the law or "code of rules." Likewise do Christ's New Testament principles precede the code of rules which is to keep us close to him "to be justified." But where is his "law" to be found? In his church.

The church is his agent,—active and authoritative,—to stand in his stead here on the earth. It was the church that, he said, should disciple, baptize, and indoctrinate, all men (Matt. 28:19, 20). It was the church that should make known everywhere the manifold wisdom,—the hidden mystery,—of God (Eph. 3:10). To her, he said, I should go for help in the salvation of my erring brother (Matt. 18:17). It is to the church that the Holy Spirit comes,—not to the world (John 14:17), to perform the mission of "reproving the world" (John 16:8). Unmistakably she represents him, and is his agent.

But how far is the church an authoritative agent? In this connection we recall the political issue in our own nation when Thos. Jefferson sought and secured the presidency. The "strict construction" policy claimed that executive authority was limited to "Thus saith the Constitution,"—just as some of us today claim that church jurisdiction is limited to "Thus saith the Lord." But the "loose construction" policy laid claim to all power not prohibited by the Constitution as, it appears, is also true of the church, in which, as his agent, and under the guidance of his Spirit, is vested all power and authority not contradictory to his Revealed Will.

The apostles suggested, and the church gladly established, the office of deacon (Acts 6:1-6), and the Jerusalem church had a council "to consider a matter" (Acts 15), and rendered a decision which was the cause of rejoicing (verse 31), and was blest of him. But for NEITHER of these was there any "Thus saith the Lord." Matt. 18:18 quotes Christ as saying of his people, in official capacity, "Whatsoever ye bind," etc. This confidence in their wisdom and prudence is explained by John 16:13, "Howbeit, when he, the Spirit of Truth, is come, he WILL GUIDE YOU into all truth." Paul says in 1 Cor. 5:4, "When ye are gathered together, and my spirit, with the power of the Lord Jesus Christ."

Our Annual Conference, therefore, guided by his Spirit, is indeed authoritative. Her function, however, is not legislative,—law "making,"—but JUDICIAL,—law "interpreting." Her "decisions" (if we prefer not to call them "laws"), are therefore binding upon all, or "mandatory," in the same sense that Supreme Court "decisions" become "law." A factious, or quarrelsome dissenter is therefore deserving of the sentence which Paul pronounces upon just such cases in Titus 3:10, 11.

But let us always keep uppermost in mind that the primary object of all our law is "to bring us to Christ that we might be justified,"—never to punish or destroy. Then, we, as individuals, will not be so prone to murmur or complain of "too much restraint," but will be able to perceive in the "grievous chastening" of the present the later yield of that "peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby" (Heb. 12:11).

Ministers' Problems.

BY JESSE D. MOHLER.

Every calling has its peculiar needs. While much general religious knowledge is needed by the ministry, those who are to teach others need some things especially for themselves. The writer has often felt that our church has need of special instruction to the ministry that has not been generally available.

Our schools are conducting Bible courses that are the help needed for those who can attend, and special short terms are provided for those who might be able to spend a short time in class each year; but how great is the need of the many who can not even attend the short course! There are preachers' magazines that are excellent for those who have had the usual preparation for the ministry, but these are ahead of the man who enters the ministry, as our brethren are called to office without special training for its work.

After years of struggle and anxious watching for better methods of work, our brethren can make good use of the usual helps to preachers, but progress might be made much more rapidly if there were more general discussion, through the church paper, of the best methods of preparation for the active work of the ministry. General writings are good for general living and for general thought for the minister, but he needs some intensive thought for his own special use.

The yearly discussions in our ministerial meetings are an excellent help to those who are seeking progress in their calling, but are more or less local in the views presented. Some Districts have better talent in their discussions than others. Let that talent be used in a general dissemination of knowledge and experiences gained in the active work of the ministry. It would be a good thing if we had a page in the Messenger, or at least a column each week, devoted to the active work of the ministry.

We are aware that modesty might hinder the most of our brethren from wanting to contribute to such a department, as they might be accused of thinking themselves competent to tell others how to do; and we all know that confidence in himself is one of the poorest recommendations for a minister to offer. Therefore some who are best qualified to write such articles would refrain from offering what they have learned, while they would give an excellent talk when selected by a committee on program for a ministerial meeting.

The writer experiences that feeling of modesty, but has had to do so much digging and hunting for himself, and inquiring of others, listening to discussions at ministerial meetings and reading what he could find, that he will be glad to pass, what he has gathered, to those who are traveling the road he has passed over, hoping to gain also something from those who have traveled farther in experience, and dug deeper than himself.

The only way he can take any satisfaction in present ability, is when he views his work in the light of an explanation, once made as an apology for him, in the elocution class. One day, after he had read his assigned portion and received the usual amount of criticism, Bro. S. Z. Sharp, as instructor, came to his assistance with an explanation that, while the corrections were in place, Bro. Jesse was doing better than any one else in the class,—not that his work was so good, but in the beginning he had more to contend with than any other; and his success lay not in what he could now do, but in the amount he had overcome to reach that point. So in our ministry.

After nearly fourteen years in the ministry, there are more problems in sight than at any time in the past; but those few years have taught him much of the power of God, to assist those who will undertake his work; and his readiness to draw nigh unto those who will draw nigh unto him. We have faith that if we put ourselves at his disposal, God will help solve problems as needed, and open up the way as each new condition is met.

This is one of the first lessons we would recommend to the young man called to the ministry, and one of the hardest for us usually to learn. After thousands of years of teaching, man is very much like the Children of Israel, who had to be rebuked, time and again, for their lack of reliance on God, and had to suffer defeat after defeat to learn that the Lord he is God. No minister can accomplish the work intended for him to do until he has learned to put his efforts under God's direction, himself to do the work, the Lord to show the way.

Some have made a mistake even here, depending on the Lord to show the way and do the work too. Too much of the doctrine of dependence on the Holy Spirit is about as fatal as too little. The work of the Holy Spirit in the minister is to keep him in sympathy with God's will and to bring to his remembrance those things which have been told in his Word,—and which he has stored in his mind,—to give him wisdom in the interpretation of Scripture, and to enthuse him in its application.

The minister must furnish the brain power to do the work God orders. He must go to his appointment with the burden of his message worked out under the direction of the Holy Spirit at his desk. The idea of preaching as the Spirit directs, is pleasing to think about, but in practice it begets indifference, repetition of teaching, poverty of thought; and fails of the end sought, in granting such help to God's ministers.

As one learns to follow God's will, he is naturally transformed in his mind and heart unto a life that is itself a testimony for the cause he represents. However, he need not wait for that process of nature. He should take his thoughts and affections in charge, and assist in the transformation, that he may the sooner fit himself for the work to which he is called of God through the church.

Until a minister realizes that his call is of God to a definite purpose that includes right thinking and loving,—the impetus to higher living, as much as to preaching from the pulpit,—he can not have the power in his work that has been so effectual in the church under the conditions of the past ministry. The limitations of our fathers, in the matters we now think so essential, were an influence to bring them to seek to know God's will, and to so love and live as to reach the hearts of men.

This is now, and always will be, half the work of the minister; but conditions now demand something more of younger men. In practice, the years of active work of our older brethren give them a prestige that more than overcomes failure to conform to any standard that a rational disposition would require of a younger man.

Of the young man who has not the prestige of years of living among his people, something else must fit him for his work; and that something is special preparation, either in time to read and study at home, or such schooling as may best qualify him to do the work needed. If he has learned the lessons of reliance on God and of living for and loving his brethren, it is the duty of the congregation that calls him to serve in the ministry to see that he has the preparation which their standard of work requires of him.

The Gish Fund is doing a noble work, and is placing splendid material in the hands of the ministry. Among others of its publications "Problems of the Pulpit and Platform" is worthy of much thought by the minister who finds himself unable to cope with conditions that confront him in himself. And yet there is much need of special help to the minister who has not the benefits of actual contact and training under those qualified to open up to him the problems of a minister's experience and development.

The writer is in full sympathy with the demand for better preparation of our young brethren, and believes that the church owes it to herself to help them in such preparation. He also feels that much can be accomplished by those who will give to others their solutions of the problems that have confronted them in preparing and delivering their sermons. His proposition is to write soon of the ideas and experiences of others, and include some of his own solutions as a farmer preacher, trusting they may be of practical use and inspire others to take up the line of work where he must drop it, that all may work together for mutual help and the resulting extension of usefulness in God's kingdom.

Robbed by the Bedouins.

BY A. C. WIEAND.

[The following was sent by Bro. A. C. Wieand to the students of Bethany Bible School, Chicago, and we take pleasure in placing it before the Messenger readers. We are sure that it will be read with unusual interest.—Ed.]

My present purpose is to record, for a testimony to you, the continuous chain of Providential guidance and protection through which we have been preserved. Just now we have been delivered from many eminent perils which befell us because of an insurrection of the Arabs against the Turkish Government, as we were journeying through the ancient land of Moab on the east side of the Jordan. It came about in this way:

Wednesday, Nov. 30, we set out for Jericho. Next day we crossed the Jordan, climbed to the top of Mt. Nebo in a rainstorm and by evening were lodging at Medaba. Next day we went on southward, camping at night by the river Arnon. Then, on Saturday, we journeyed still onward to Kerak, the ancient Kir, the military capital of the Moabites. Here we took up our lodgings in the stone buildings, built a number of years ago for missionary purposes by our guide, Mr. Forder. At the present time the mission is closed, and the buildings are empty. Here we spent the Lord's Day quietly. Next morning, at daybreak, we were through with our breakfast and had begun packing up, planning to push onward towards the land of Edom, Mt. Seir, and Petra, and from thence to go on to Kadesh-Barnea, and Beersheba, returning by way of Hebron. With these plans in our mind, and while busily occupied with packing, washing dishes, etc., we were suddenly startled by one of our native helpers rushing in at the gate and shouting wildly: "Abou Jerious! Abou Jerious!"—the Kerakē have risen against the soldiers.

Very soon we heard wild shoutings at the other end of the city, followed immediately by a crack, crack, crack, of the rifles. Our first thought, of course, was that it was only a slight disturbance of the peace, and that it would all be over in an hour, but all day long the fighting continued, the Arabs stealing in from every part of the country and stealthily climbing from rock to rock up the steep sides of the triangular mountain on which the city is located.

We remained as quietly as we could within the stone walls of our buildings and compound. All around us the shooting went on until the day came to a close. Under cover of darkness the soldiers retired within the castle and the Arabs, unopposed, swarmed into the city. We went to bed, and most of us were asleep when, about ten o'clock, we were awakened by Mr. Forder calling to us, "Our friends have come," meaning by this that the Arabs had captured our part of the city and that because of his mission work among them, during the past fifteen or eighteen years, they were very friendly to him and, for his sake, to us. When he brought in one of the wild Arabs, a nephew to one of the leading sheiks, he swore, by God and Mohammed, that they would protect us and that nobody would harm a hair of our heads. So we all settled down and tried to sleep again until morning, trusting ourselves to the tender mercy of the Arabs, though, in reality, our trust was in Jehovah and he was our strong tower. At daybreak, the next morning, we were advised by these friendly sheiks that we had better leave the city and go out three hours' ride to a camp of the Arabs, where we should remain until we should find a way to escape to a place of safety. An escort was provided, led by two Arab Sheiks. Under their protection we reached, about ten o'clock, this friendly camp where our guide, Mr. Forder, had often been on errands of mercy with the message of the Gospel. You should have seen the welcome we received. All that was best in the camp was brought to us and put at our disposal.

Here we remained from Tuesday morning until Thursday afternoon, when, by the most urgent insistence of Mr. Forder (after a visit to the principal sheiks of all that region and imperiling his life a score of times), we again secured an escort from another tribe of Arabs to conduct us to their camp, down near the Dead Sea, on the north side of the Peninsula projecting into the sea. Here again we were received very kindly, and a tent was put at our disposal, where we ate our supper and slept during the night. Early the next morning we were off again, this time to be escorted to the Arabs of the south end of the Dead Sea.

But about ten or eleven o'clock we were overtaken by a band of fifteen or twenty wild Bedouins, generally known as the worst robbers and cut-throats of all that region. They were led by their sheik. And, because they were more powerful than the men who were conducting us, they compelled our escorts to give us over into their charge. And so, to tell it all in a sentence, during the rest of the day we were held up and robbed four different times. An hour or two after sundown we were escorted to their camp, where we lay down on our saddle bags and some slept. Our guide, however, while lying down near the camp fire and supposed by the Arabs to be fast asleep, overheard them planning together, and concocting a plan by which we were to be led out next day, killed, and looted of everything the party possessed. Of course, all this time we were praying for deliverance. There are many details which I can not here take time to tell you. Suffice it to say that deliverance came, providentially, through being overtaken by the friendly tribe to whom we had been consigned, and to whose camp we should have been taken the previous night.

It is needless to tell you what a time of rejoicing this was to us all. We overheard the members of the "robber tribe" say to each other: "It would have been better to have killed them last night."

By this friendly tribe we were shown every courtesy. Mr. Forder knew them well and had won their hearts by his mission work among them. In the stillness of the moonlight night, at ten o'clock, we mounted our horses and stole away as quietly as possible, escorted by thirty horsemen. We rode continuously until next day at eleven o'clock, without food or water, when we stopped for lunch and rest. Then we were in the hill country, south of Hebron, where we were in perfect safety. We spent that night in an Arab tent, south of Hebron, the next night in Hebron, and the day following we reached Jerusalem. Here, as in most other places of Palestine proper, there is perfect safety, as usual.

It has not been possible in this brief record to mention the multitude of little providences that came to us continuously, all along the way, and without which our lives would not have been preserved. I have room only to say that the promises of God are sure to those who put their trust in him. He is a stronghold in the time of trouble, a sure defence against evil. Will you not join us in thanksgiving for the mercies of God which alone kept us from death?

Jerusalem, Palestine, Dec. 16, 1910.

THE ROUND TABLE

Count the Blessings.

BY WEALTHY A. BURKHOLDER.

"Thank God for the sunshine, the fresh air and flowers,
Make gladness each day that you live;
Count often your blessings, you'll find they are many,
And to others a helping hand give."

TRULY the mercies and blessings that have been falling on our pathway, through every period of our lives, are very numerous, and it would be a task of no small magnitude to count them. Down they come every morning and evening,—every hour,—angel messengers from the Father, our Best Friend. If we have lived these years wasting mercies, treading them beneath our feet, and consuming them every day, and never yet realized from whence they come, we are ungrateful indeed. We murmur over our afflictions, but who has heard us rejoice over our blessings?

What are mercies and blessings? Ask the sunbeam, the raindrop, the star, or the queen of night. Life is a great blessing, and so many blessings may be gotten out of the years given us to prepare for the higher and better life. We are not placed in this world to work for ourselves only, and for our own selfish gratification. From every life there should radiate good cheer and good works. We are to help one another and bear each other's burdens. Often our afflictions are mercies in disguise. Hear the Psalmist David exclaim, "Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now have I kept thy Word." In this way he acknowledged the blessings and was thankful for the same.

As we look back over our past lives and the precious hours given us, can we thank the Lord for the many mercies that have been falling so often in our pathway? If not, we are ungrateful in the extreme.

"Surely they of many blessings
Should scatter many blessings round,
As laden boughs in autumn fling
Their ripe fruit to the ground."

Called for the Elders.

BY JOHN H. TOPPER.

I TOOK sick the middle of November with lung fever, la grippe, inflammation of the bowels, and a hemorrhage of the lungs. I threw up nearly three quarts of blood and was considered near death's door for several weeks. I did not forget what James says, and called for the elders. Eld. David Hoover, of the Cedar Creek church, asked me if I wanted to get well. I told him, if it was the Lord's will. So they anointed me and prayed for my recovery.

How much better it is to put our trust in the Lord and do what he says! At that time I could hear people, in a low tone of voice, say that I could not get well, but the Lord told me that he would raise me up, and this he is doing.

Brethren and sisters, we should not forget our family altars. We should live every day as if it were our last day.

For three weeks I could not read my GOSPEL MESSENGER, but how glad I was to get the three MESSENGERS to read, when I was able to sit up in bed! The MESSENGER is the best church paper I ever read. I would not do without it. I am now able to sit at the table and write this for the MESSENGER. Praise the Lord! Hundreds of people have been in to see me. I entreat them tenderly to give God the glory for my recovery and that they, too, should live the true, Christian life.

Lonesome.

BY J. H. MORRIS.

SOME TIME ago it was my happy privilege to associate with a —— minister. During our associations, he exclaimed several times, "A lonesome old place around here, isn't it?" It caused me to wonder and ask myself the question: "Is it possible for a Christian to be lonely? When is he lonely? Why?"

Not scientifically, but in our simple, easy way of understanding it, the word lonesome means without an agreeable person or persons with whom to converse or commune. The boy and girl are not lonesome with young friends of their age and temperament. The literary man is not lonely in company with other literary men (either in person or in their books). The literary man is lonely when put with an illiterate person, because he is being robbed of time which he could be using in association with Macauley, Emerson, Lowell, Browning, or some other great man.

But how about the Christian? He does not love to associate with a worldly man. He is not of the world, but his delight is to associate with other Christians because of the Christ-life which shines out through their life. We enjoy the moonlight, though it is only a reflected light and can not compare with the brighter light of the sun. In like manner intimate association direct with Jesus is much better than the indirect one through our fellow-Christians.

Suppose, then, that our friends do leave us alone for an hour or two, or even a day or a month, can we not associate with Jesus himself through the Spirit; through his Word; through prayer? What an opportunity for communion with him (when all are gone from us)? Can a Christian be lonely with such possibilities within his reach?

The Way of the Cross.

BY OMA KARN.

"COME, take up thy cross and follow me," was said to the rich young ruler, but he turned sorrowfully away. To him the way of the cross seemed hard, and the way of self-indulgence easy. He chose the easy way. What life held for him after this, we do not care to know. It is sufficient to know that it was a life without Christ. "Whosoever doth not bear his cross and come after me, cannot be my disciple," and "without me ye can do nothing."

There are some Christians who, like this young man, would like to shirk the carrying of the cross. They want the Savior's love and the Savior's favor, but they do not want to share in his suffering, his self-denial and his sacrifice.

The crucifixion of self is a hard, hard thing for them. Upon such the cross falls in a more terrible way, and with more crushing force than if they had been willing to take it in the way the Heavenly Father saw fit to place it upon them. The way of the cross must be traveled by all those who are to be prepared for glory hereafter. The religion of our Lord is the religion of the cross, and unless we take up and carry ours, we can never follow him, neither can we have power in our lives. "Therefore will I glory in the cross of Christ, that the power of Christ may rest upon me," says Paul.

"O cross that liftest up my head,
I dare not ask to fly from thee;
I lay in dust life's glory dead;
And from the ground there blossems red
Life that shall endless be."

Religion.

BY J. H. MILLER.

JAMES would have us get the religion that is pure and undefiled. Religion is a spirit of faith in doing the Lord's will. It is the daughter of heaven, the source of all true felicity. She can give a contented mind, which breaks forth in a flood of joy. Pure religion seeks peace in the home, and peace in the neighborhood. It dispels the gloom of sorrow, and sweetens the cup of affliction. Religion will purify the air we breathe, and help to sing the song of redeeming love. Religion looks up for the better light, to lighten one's pathway to the glory world. If we stand on the mountain top, we can see the sun shining long after it is dark in the valley. The cedar is developing its branches toward the top, while the lower limbs may fall off. Religion will reach the hands toward the God who made us, while worldliness will drop downward and be lost in the gulf of despair. A little religion will make men gloomy, if not tempered with the true greatness of the love of God, but a soul filled with the pure religion of Jesus will make the Christian smile, and feel as though his feet were walking the golden streets of the New Jerusalem. The religion of Jesus, if pure in the heart, will be a passport to heaven.

Healed by Anointing.

BY EMRA T. FIKE.

SISTER A., who lives at Fairchance, at one time suffered from a rupture. She consulted four home physicians and was advised that her only help lay in a dangerous operation at the hospital. She then consulted a specialist at Uniontown, Pa., who informed her that her only help was in a surgical operation which would prove fatal, as the rupture had become callous. She went home thoroughly discouraged. She said she had often prayed so earnestly that she would find herself reaching out and begging that she might but touch the hem of Christ's garment.

But now, going home thoroughly discouraged, she decided to call Eld. Jasper Barnthouse with a co-worker, to be anointed for her healing, as the physicians said there was no help.

Accordingly she was anointed and in three days was well, and still remains well. The cure was effected several years ago.

Surely the Lord does all things well. Oh, for a more confiding faith in him!

PRAYER MEETING

Consecration to the Lord's Work.

2 Tim. 2: 19-26; 2 Cor. 6: 14-18.

For Week Beginning Jan. 22, 1911.

1. A Consecrated Life Is a Separated Life.—Every man born into the world is a possible addition to the forces of evil that wreck men and blight society, or he becomes a great factor for good, blessing men, advancing civilization and increasing the power of the kingdom of God. The service a man renders society is an index of his own character and a prophecy of his destiny, and because of its influence for good or evil it becomes a matter of gravest concern to the world. Consecration implies not only a separation from everything sinful, but from everything that is essentially worldly. We must be "separated unto the Lord himself," "a people for his own possession," "his peculiar treasure" (Ex. 19: 5). We are ambassadors of Christ to all men (2 Cor. 5: 20).

2. Consecration Means Strength.—(1) It strengthens faith. "Faith without work (or service) is dead." Christian activity is the best protection against skepticism, the surest safeguard against apostasy. (2) It strengthens knowledge. "If any man will do his will he shall know the truth." The best commentary on Christianity is a righteous life. (3) It strengthens spirituality. "Give and it shall be given unto you." Consecration implies the giving of self—the best gift of all—to our infinite spiritual gain (2 Cor. 8: 1-5).

3. Consecration Ennobles and Purifies.—Attempting to do a great work for God insures his unbounded blessings. It gives us added fitness for still greater attainments. As the air is purified by the winds and storms, so the church is made purer by sturdy, wholesome work on the part of its membership. The busy, consecrated church has noble aims and pure desires, hence is happy in the Lord's work (2 Peter 3: 11-14).

HOME AND FAMILY

Are You Sleeping at Your Post?

BY J. O. BARNHART.

Soldiers in the Savior's army,
Are you sleeping at your post?
See the foe is lurking near you,
Lo, a strong and mighty host!
And his outposts never slumber,
But with ever watchful eye,
Leap at once to overpower,
If you lay your armor by.

Though be strong your trust in Jesus,
Though your armor may be bright,
To the camp the spies of Satan,
Come as angels of the light.
Though today you win the battle,
Be not lifted up with pride,
Lest the victory tomorrow,
Be found with the other side.

Recollections of past vict'ries,
Will not win the battle now;
Nor will other people's crosses
Place a crown upon your brow.
Every day has its own conflicts,
Every soldier his own foe,
And each Christian has a service
That no other one can do.

In this war are no discharges,
And no furlough Christ extends;
We must work with all our powers,
Till this earthly life shall end.
Then arouse, awake to duty,
All along the picket line,
And the vict'ry then be ours,
And, O God, the glory thine!

Prayer.

BY ANNIE BASHOR.

Prayer is communing with God. It is the breath of man returning to God who gave it.

Prayer is want felt, help desired, with faith to obtain it.

Prayer is a shield to the soul, a sacrifice to God, and a scourge to Satan.

Prayer is simply telling the Lord the heart's need,—the longing for a better and higher life than we have ever known, and which we would like to enjoy.

Prayer is not a speculation or an experiment. To get its power we must believe. Only those who earnestly seek, find salvation,—not only salvation but a supply for the deep needs of life.

We never think to praise him when all things go well with us, but when we are helpless, we call on God to aid. All men do believe in a higher power of some kind, yet how ungrateful are they for all his blessings! We are told to pray without ceasing,—not because the Lord can actually be drawn nearer to us, but because, by our persistent prayer, we are drawn nearer to God.

We must be in the spirit of prayer at all times. Christ's life was a life of prayer. From his first appearance in public, at baptism, till the end of his career on the cross, he was a man of prayer. Prayer was a part of his very existence. Prayer does not change God to us but fits us to receive the things asked for. May we not say, with true desire, as one of Christ's disciples, "Lord, teach us to pray"?

Supplication is a phase of prayer we use most frequently. When all things move well we do not feel the need of a higher power. When we realize that the Lord has helped us we praise him for it. We want to trust God with a fuller trust and so, at last, to come to that high life, when we shall be careful for nothing, but in everything, by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, make our requests unto God.

Who shall pray? All men should pray, yet do all men pray? No, with all of their plans thousands of men do not call upon God. God does not hear sinners who are satisfied in their sins, but hears those who are convicted of sin. As the humble publican smote his breast and said, "God be merciful to me a sinner," so we have the promise. If we ask we shall receive.

We should not be as the hypocrites who love to pray standing in the synagogue and in public places, but we should, the rather, follow the example of Christ and enter into our secret closets and pray to our Father in secret, who sees and knows, and will reward us openly. In praying to our Father we must be filled with the Spirit who "maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered." The Holy Spirit requires a holy dwelling place. His presence is a guarantee of safety, purity and separation from the world, and therefore holy communion with God. No one can have the witness of the Spirit in the daily walks of life except those who, by obedience to God's requirements, have been adopted into his family and continue faithful.

The Holy Spirit recognizes our needs better than we do ourselves. He gives us power for service, strength in weakness, power to do right. Christ did not leave his disciples comfortless. He speaks of that great Spirit of Power who, after his departure would carry on the work. We rejoice today because the Spirit's leading is an ever present help. Being filled with the Spirit we have power to witness for Christ. The world needs more Christians today who have power, because they are Spirit-filled within.

The Holy Spirit is also a witness-bearer, who approves our good and testifies to God in our behalf. He is a Comforter and Convictor. He convicts the world of sin, righteousness and judgment to come. He shows how sin keeps us from God and warns us of God's judgment.

In order that our prayers may be acceptable to God, we must have faith, for without faith it is impossible to please God. Christ said to his disciples, "If ye would have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove to yonder place, and it shall remove. Nothing shall be impossible to you."

A strong faith will often increase our bodily strength. How faith was rewarded to the woman who had the issue of blood for twelve years! Her life was slowly ebbing away, weak, unclean, miserable! She had spent all she had. Her disease was dreadful, and she was willing to give her all for a cure, but a cure for the sinless soul could not be bought with money. Human help was a failure. Nothing bettered, she rather grew worse. Her means were gone and still no improvement. She thought, "If I but touch his clothes,—just a touch,—I will gain strength by a touch." Weak strength can touch a great Savior.

Does God answer prayer? Men say that today the world is run by law. They say, we can not change God or his plans. We need but look at the example of Abraham. It was his great faith that gave him his wonderful character. Such a faith cannot help but express itself in proper communion with God, nor can it help but give rise to faith in others.

Whatever act of faith may be wrought in us, it will at once become the ruling factor of our lives and help us to attain to still better things. There is only one way to overcome, and that is to live with God, to set our affections in things above.

Do we always get what we ask for? Paul's prayer was that the thorn in the flesh be removed, but the Spirit knew better what Paul needed than he. By the assistance of God's grace it was better to bear the infirmity than to have it removed. God's grace is more than we can ask or think. The Lord may answer our prayers,—not by granting our desire in removing a trial, but by giving us grace to bear it. Oh the joys of prayer, the peace and comfort in communing with our Father.

Does It Pay?

BY ELIZABETH MILLER.

The great question is, Does it pay to be kind, and will there be anything in it for me to help somebody else?

On the battlefield a soldier lay dying. One of his friends came along and noticed that he was lying uncomfortable. The man stopped and fixed his blankets about him, that he might rest easier. The soldier gave the young man a note to carry to his father, who was quite wealthy. After the soldier's death the young man searched for the father and found him. But the father did not pay much attention to him at first, as he looked to be a tramp. But as he read the note, the last words, "For Charlie's sake," changed his mind. He rewarded the man, and thanked him greatly for being so kind to his dying son. Did it pay this young man to be kind?

How many times did Jesus attend to the wants of those who suffered and needed his help? And yet he was patient, long-suffering, and kind.

Nicodemus came to Christ by night, and asked him about being saved, but Jesus was patient with him and explained to him that he must be born again. The young ruler came to him with questions about eternal life, and Jesus kindly told him that he must sell his possessions in order to gain life eternal. He meets the woman of Samaria at the well and kindly tells her of the living water. And while he suffers on the cross, he saves the dying thief at his side. He dined at Simeon's house that he might save the sinners there. When Martha and Mary called him, he went in all sympathy, and raised their brother from the dead. He was continually healing and helping those about him.

If a beggar comes to our door and asks for bread, does it pay to turn him away? Did Jesus turn the five thousand away? Jesus, in all kindness, provided for them. Our neighbor, perhaps, has sickness and death in his home. Should we not enter that home and lend a helping hand? It pays us to help and sympathize with him, for did not Jesus enter the home of Martha and Mary, weep and sympathize with them, and help them?

As we pass through this world we daily and hourly find many opportunities to make somebody's burden a little lighter. A smile or any little kindness may change a whole lifetime of sin and suffering. Thus we can ease the pain of another, care for the dying and comfort the sorrowing, and try, in every way, to make the world better by our being in it.

The lesson of kindness is well explained in the life of the great army nurse, Clara Barton, the "Angel of the Battlefield." One of the soldiers tells the following story: Miss Barton was about stepping on the last car, conveying the wounded from the field, when a soldier told her there was left behind, in the pine bushes, where he had fallen, a fatally-wounded young soldier, who was calling for his mother. She followed her guide to the place where the boy lay. It was growing dark and the rain descended. She raised him up and quietly soothed him. When he heard her voice, he said in his delirium, "Oh! my mother has come. Don't leave me to die in these dark woods alone. Do stay with me. Don't leave me!"

At that moment an officer cried out to her: "Come immediately, or you will fall into the hands of the rebs. They are on us."

"Well, take this boy."

"No," said the officer, "there is no transportation for dying men. We have hardly room for the living. Come quickly."

"Then I will stay with this poor boy. We both go, or both stay." Both were therefore taken on the car, and the wounded boy was carried to one of the Washington hospitals, where his New England mother found him. There he closed his eyes in death, and from there he was taken to his old home where he rests with his kindred.

The mother sent a most touching letter, all covered with tear drops, full of expressions of thankfulness and gratitude to the brave, gentle woman who had rescued her son from a lonely death in the woods, and out of this life of sacrifice and service for others sprang the "Red Cross Society,"—a society to care for wounded soldiers. Did it pay Clara Barton to be kind? Was not the world made better and happier by her life?

"It pays to comfort heavy hearts, oppressed with dull despair,
And brave in sorrow's darkened lives one gleam of sunshine there."

To be good and to do good are the two great objects set before the Christians; to develop a perfect character by rendering a perfect service. True Christian culture leads to and expresses itself in service.

THE members at Reedley, Cal., are anxious that the date of their love feast, Jan. 28, should be widely known, hence this special announcement.

SINCE the last report from Coquille Valley, Oregon, five have been added to the church,—four baptized, one reclaimed, and others await baptism.

BRO. B. F. SHARP held a series of meetings in what is known as the Middle District church, Ohio, and five were added to the Lord's flock at that place.

THE special Bible Term for Hebron Seminary, Nokesville, Va., begins Jan. 13 and continues until the 22nd. A good program has been arranged for the occasion.

THE Sunday-school Meeting of Southern Missouri, to be held in the Peace Valley church, is announced for Jan. 15, beginning at 10 A. M. The program will be found on the last page of this issue.

BRO. A. G. CROSSWHITE is engaged in a revival work in the Nettle Creek church, Ind. He writes us that he is greatly pleased with the improved appearance and make-up of the first page of the MESSENGER.

BRO. S. S. BLOUGH, of Batavia, Ill., has just returned from Arcadia, Nebr., where he conducted a well-attended Bible Normal. He is very much pleased with his short visit among the members in Nebraska.

BRO. GALEN B. ROYER is now on a trip among the schools of the Brotherhood, expecting to be absent from Elgin about six weeks. On this trip he will probably visit all the schools east of the Mississippi River.

THE Mission Board of Northeastern Ohio is arranging to build a churchhouse in Akron City, and the District is to be canvassed for a part of the money required. An official notice to this effect will appear next week.

THE American population of India, among our mission workers, is increasing. Bro. A. W. Ross, of Vyara, under date of Dec. 9, 1910, writes us about the coming of a second girl to his family. We hope all the American boys and girls of India will turn out to be good missionaries.

SISTER IDA SHUMAKER, now at Bulsar, India, writes us that she is delighted with her work. She further says that she found everything in India much better than she had expected. In another issue she will have something to say regarding her late trip, and her arrival on the mission field.

TURN to page 29, Brethren Almanac for 1911, and at the bottom of the list of Old Folks' Homes write Kansas, in place of Iowa, opposite of Darlow.

ONLY a few months have passed since the first announcement of "Our Saturday Night" appeared in these columns, and now we are printing the third edition. The demand for the book is keeping up quite encouragingly.

BRO. W. E. WEST, chairman of the Mission Board of Middle Iowa, writes us that the service of Bro. Virgil C. Finnell has been secured for the Des Moines Mission. He is expected to enter upon the work the first of March.

BRO. I. B. WIKE, of Huntington City, Ind., writes us that on account of sickness in his family he has not been able to hold any of the revival meetings promised for the winter, and he does not know just how soon he can take up the work.

BRO. T. A. ROBINSON, pastor of the church at Muscatine, Iowa, writes us that a great sorrow has come to his home. His son, William, an exemplary young brother, was laid to rest last Saturday, after suffering for months with tuberculosis.

THOSE who did not order "Our Saturday Night," when renewing their subscriptions for the MESSENGER, can still secure a copy by remitting thirty-five cents. It would be better to have the book ordered by the agent who sent in the subscription.

BRO. JOHN E. METZGER, of Rossville, Ind., our earnest field agent, called on us a few days ago. He reports a splendid outlook for the MESSENGER. He is now at work in Middle Indiana, and will continue his efforts in the interest of all our publications.

THERE is a well-backed movement on foot among a number of our people in Kansas to establish a sanitarium at McPherson. Steps have been taken to incorporate, and a board of directors chosen. In an early issue we shall publish an interesting communication in regard to the contemplated project.

BRO. GEO. W. HILTON, Surrey, N. Dak., says that his health has sufficiently improved, to enable him to devote the rest of his time in the homeland to work among the churches desiring his services. This notice is intended for the churches west of the Mississippi River. A further notice will appear next week.

WE have two neat photo cards, containing front and back views of the Brethren Home at Neffsville, Pa. Judging from these photos, the Home must be an ideal place for the aged poor and the needy. When they can no longer care for themselves, they can feel that there is awaiting them a pleasant home where the rest of their earthly pilgrimage may be spent.

THE church at Rossville, Ind., is placing the MESSENGER in about twenty families where there are no members. We hear of other congregations that are doing even more than this. It is indeed gratifying to learn what an interest our wide-awake members are taking in the paper. They not only prize it highly themselves, but they want their neighbors to read it.

ONE of our correspondents in the South says that a number of our people are being drawn into a land scheme by which they have to pay more for land than there is any need of them paying. We say this to put our patrons on their guard. They should either personally investigate the situation for themselves, or write some member in the vicinity, enclosing stamp, for reliable information.

SOME years ago Rev. Harvey E. Simmons, of Ashland, Ohio, a Lutheran minister, delivered a fine address on "Secret Societies and the Church," at Trinity Lutheran Church. The address produced considerable sensation and was much discussed, both in public and in private. The address is in tract form, and may be had by addressing Bro. W. A. Gaunt, Huntingdon, Pa., at the rate of three copies for ten cents, ten copies for twenty-five cents, or twenty-five copies for fifty cents. The tract contains sixteen pages, and will do good wherever distributed.

NEW YEAR'S Day was a red-letter day for the members at Lanark. The Sunday-school attendance was over 300, and the dedication address, by Bro. I. B. Trout, was listened to by over 600 people. The new house is thought to be the best built, and the most commodious church among the Brethren in Northern Illinois. It is probably just the kind of a house needed in cities.

THE Chicago Evening American for Jan. 4 contains the pictures of four of the members of the W. R. Miller party, who were recently robbed in Moab by a band of Bedouins; viz., Bro. A. C. Wieand and wife and Bro. Miller and wife. On page 21, this issue, will be found a letter from Bro. Wieand, telling about some of their experiences on their trip around the Dead Sea. While the letter was not intended for publication, it makes intensely interesting reading.

NEWFOUNDLAND, with a population of 250,000, comes wonderfully near being without criminals. The whole country has but forty prisoners, and thirty-seven of these come from St. John, where the sale of liquor is permitted. If the saloons at St. John could be shut up, the country might be able to close the door of the only jail it possesses, and turn the building into a church, or make use of it for educational purposes. Who says prohibition does not pay?

"PROHIBITION: IS IT RIGHT?" is the title of a 125-page booklet, containing a discussion on the prohibition question between Samuel Dickie, President of Albion College, Albion, Mich., on the affirmative, and David S. Rose, ex-mayor of Milwaukee, Wis., on the negative. The booklet is intensely interesting from start to finish, and contains the very best that may be said on both sides of the liquor question. It is just the thing for the man who wishes to be thoroughly posted. Price, fifteen cents; two copies, twenty-five cents; or ten copies, $1. Address the Brethren Publishing House.

PROF. CHAS A. BLANCHARD, President of Wheaton College, Ill., takes delight in dropping into the MESSENGER sanctum now and then. A few days ago he called on us,—and, by the way, he is a genial man to happen around. We do a good deal of printing for him, and then he knows that our people enjoy that splendid book of his, "Modern Secret Societies." While here, he took his first careful look at the Gish Testament, and is delighted with the plan of the book. He ordered a number of copies sent to his school. He wants his own people to get hold of the book, and carry it with them.

A CORRESPONDENT writes about the indifference of the members at a point where a revival meeting was held. He thinks this lack of interest kept several people out of the church. Such a state of affairs is sad to contemplate, and a strong evangelist should be sent to the place with an avowed purpose of arousing the members to a sense of their duty. There is such a thing as a body of members being dead and not knowing it. It may take more earnest preaching and warning to put life into them than it would require to convert half of the sinners in the neighborhood, but it is something that should be done. Some of the seven churches of Asia needed an awakening, and the Lord saw that they received the needed help. But who will look after the half dead or lukewarm churches of today?

"THE UNIVERSALIST CHURCH AND FREEMASONRY" is the title of a splendid booklet of seventy-four pages, by H. L. F. Gillespie, R. D. 6, Manchester, Iowa; price thirty-five cents net. The author shows how one church after another goes down in our cities and towns, while the lodges prosper. The manner of treating his subject is quite forcible and what he says of the fate of Universalist churches may apply to most of the denominations. The lodges are sustained by the members of the churches, assisted by those who are not converted. Both the converted and the unconverted make common cause of the lodges, and the secret orders are kept up, while the churches are left to get along as best they can. The booklet, so far as it relates to Freemasonry in religious circles, should put a lot of people to thinking.

WRITERS should be a little slow about asking us to explain why we have not published their essays. We are doing our very best to make a wise use of the matter that has come to our desk. At this season of the year we always receive more fine essays than we can make immediate use of, and some must be held until we have room for them. We do not mean that writers should, on this account, cease preparing matter for the MESSENGER. Let them send their articles and we shall publish at least the best of them. But if a writer must inquire after his unpublished essay, let him say to what paper it was addressed.

Sunday-school Workers.

A WRITER suggests that, since the Sunday-school superintendent and all the teachers, as well as other officers, are working for the church and are expected to run the school in the interest of the church they represent, it would be a good idea for the elder in charge to exact of these workers a promise that they will each and all do their part in conducting the school in accord with the principles of the church, and that the teachers, when instructing their classes, will teach the Scriptures as understood by the Brethren. There is something in the suggestion offered by our correspondent, but all of this is wisely arranged for where Sunday-school officers and teachers are properly installed, in keeping with provisions that may be adopted by any congregation. We have such an arrangement here in Elgin. On a given Sunday the newly-appointed officers and teachers are given their charge in public, by being told that theirs is an important work, that it becomes their duty not only to teach the exemplary life, but to live such a life themselves, to take charge of their respective departments and conduct the school in harmony with the principles of the church that authorizes the school, and to teach the truth to the best of their ability, as set forth in the Word of God. They are asked to accept the work to which they have been called, and to promise that they will do their utmost to make it a success. Then there is a season of prayer, so conducted as to cause the workers to feel the responsibility placed on them.

Our Numerical Strength.

SEVERAL of our correspondents have had something to say regarding the numerical strength and growth of the Brotherhood, and at times what may seem rather discouraging figures have been given. Some of those, whose communications have appeared, have differed materially regarding church statistics, and the slowness of our growth, and in articles, yet to be published, the same differences will be found. We have, therefore, thought it well to offer a few remarks on the subject, and what we say may possibly clear up the atmosphere a little.

For statistics regarding our numerical strength we can depend very little on the encyclopedias. Some of the editors have not exercised the greatest care when collecting data relating to our people, and yet they may not be altogether at fault. But we shall deal more especially with certain facts that we happen to have at our disposal.

Very little information regarding the history, faith and practice of the Brethren church was given to the reading public before 1870. About this time there appeared, in one of the eastern papers, a very lengthy, interesting and scholarly write-up of the Brethren, and the communication was widely published and read all over the United States. To us the author is unknown, but the data are supposed to have been furnished by Bro. D. P. Saylor to the reporter of a leading Baltimore paper. The article has furnished the foundation for nearly all the lengthy descriptions of our people and their doctrine that have since appeared in the secular and religious papers. It has been recast a number of times, and about the first recasting will be found in the Brethren at Work for Jan. 1, 1877. Another recasting will be seen on page 770 of the MESSENGER for 1887.

The article, in its first form, started out by saying: "At the present time there are, in the United States, about 100,000 people, whose religious faith and practice are very imperfectly understood," etc. This was in the beginning of the seventies, and from that day to this the public press has been crediting the church with a membership of 100,000. This is where the 100,000 presumption got started, while, at the same time, our people, at that date, all told, did not number much, if any, over 50,000.

In 1882 Bro. Howard Miller, then of Lewistown, Pa., published his well-known "Record of the Faithful," in which he gave the most complete statistics of the Brethren church ever published. The number of members is given by congregations and District, footing up to 57,749, for the whole Brotherhood,—Progressive and Old Order Brethren included. This information he secured while employed by the Government to assist in gathering the statistics of the noncombatant denominations.

"In 1890 Bro. D. L. Miller, then office editor of the GOSPEL MESSENGER, assisted Dr. H. K. Carroll in gathering religious statistics of the Brethren for the Government, and in the MESSENGER for April 21, 1891, page 249, published the results of his findings by States, giving the number of congregations as 621; houses of worship, 858, and members 61,393. This did not include either the Progressive or the Old Order Brethren.

In the early part of 1910, the secretary of the General Mission Board undertook to gather certain statistical information of the Brotherhood, making a very thorough canvass by mail, and the result of his efforts will be found in the Missionary Visitor for June 1910, page 185, and in part on page 29 of the Brethren Almanac for 1911. Here it is stated that our number is 82,215, and that there are 896 congregations.

All of these figures show a gradual growth since 1870. However, it is natural to conclude that the estimates are rather low, and we may possibly be safe in placing our present membership at about 90,000, but not above that. In the religious statistics, published from year to year, our number has been given as 100,000, and will continue to be thus published until the next statistics are given out by the Government. Then all the churches, ours with the rest, should see that the necessary corrections are published.

If it is borne in mind that the report of 1870, when it was stated that we had 100,000 members, was wrong to start with, and that the encyclopedias and other works, got the wrong impression regarding our number, it will be seen that there is very little occasion for differing respecting the growth and present membership of the Brotherhood. We have probably more than doubled during the last fifty years, and while our membership may not be as large as we would be pleased to see it, it will, however, be wise in us to look more to the future for results, and not so much to the past for mistakes.

We should like to say something regarding the labors of our ministers in the few generations just past, as compared with the efforts of those who now have the work in hand, but will not do so in this article. We happen to know something about the zeal, efficiency and labors of the faithful who helped to make our Brotherhood what it is,—an organization of marvelous possibilities.

Church Federation.

THERE are many different kinds of federations, but they all have one and the same basic purpose,—that of having men and women unite their influence and efforts to reach their desired ends. Some of these ends may be undesirable, wrong and hurtful. Others may be of a local character and largely touch the interests and welfare of those directly concerned. Still others may be decidedly good, and made universally good as they apply to all.

For years church federation has been discussed by different religious organizations,—by some favorably and by others unfavorably. This is because of the strong denominational spirit that exists in the different church organizations, and the fear that a general move of this kind might disastrously affect the liberties and beliefs, of the weaker denominations especially.

This is, of course, a very grave subject, and worthy of very careful thought and investigation, as every church has a God-given right to carry out its conscientious convictions of what it believes the Scriptures teach, and to align its religious practices therewith. And no federal council should dare to deny that privilege.

Now, all church federations, as proposed, do not primarily have the same purpose and ends in view. And because of this, some are more favorably considered than others. Some have accepted the idea that the primary and only purpose of federation is the uniting of the different denominations and sects into one body. No matter how desirable such a move and union would be, it is evident to all careful thinkers that the time for such a union has not yet come, if ever it is to come, as the divided beliefs, as to what the New Testament really teaches as the essential doctrines and principles, for practical Christian living and doing, makes it impossible to formulate a foundation on which all the different churches could unite and stand.

But as this is not the primary purpose on the part of the advocates of church federation, we will look at the subject in its more favorable aspects. We were impressed with the thoughts we are now giving while attending a Conservation Congress, held in our town by a delegated body from the Presbyterian churches of this State. The leading purpose of the Congress was the conservation of the country and rural churches,—a very essential and practical subject, and one in which we, as a church, should be more actively interested than we are. We do not now have the space to give some of the methods proposed,—interesting, though, they were,—but among them was that of church federation.

To make the work practical, it was proposed that there be organized County and State Federations,—these federations to be formed by the convening of a delegate body, composed of one or two delegates from all the different churches of the county that would be willing to unite in the move. At this meeting by the delegates would be determined the purposes of the federation, the leading and general aim of the move to be that of civic righteousness.

Some of the things named as activities of the federation were: The temperance work, the observance of the Sabbath, nickelodeons, vaudeville shows and theaters. We would add to this list dancing and other vices that are leading our young people,—and older ones too,—into the ways of sin and away from the church. A federation after this order, it seems to us, all good Christian people could enter into and heartily work with, because this is a very important part of the work that all Christians should help to do, and do it with all their might. If all of our professing Christians would unite their influence and force against these and other evils that are endangering the spiritual lives of our church people and others, these things could be banished from our homes, towns, cities and churches.

Their Practical Workings.

Dr. McCaully, of Trenton, N. J., described some of the activities of federated churches in that city. They have there what they call a "Federate Council," formed by men elected from the different churches, who represent and carry out the wishes of the federated churches. A party in the city, representing the fun-loving and loose moral men and women of the city, petitioned the City Council for the privilege of playing baseball and football on Sunday. The Federate Council heard of their petition, went to the city council, and handed in their protest. And though this council represented all the Christian people of the city, their request was refused. Again the representatives of the same low class of people wanted the privilege from the city to open their vaudeville shows on afternoons of the Lord's Day. This time they went to the chairman of the Federate Council and said to him: "We want to open our vaudeville shows on Sunday. But as we want the patronage of your church members and Sunday-school scholars, we will not open until the afternoon, and in the evening after the regular church services, so as not to interfere with the services of the church people." They were told that as representatives of the churches they would not give their consent to any such Sunday desecration, but would use all their influence against any such desecrations of the Lord's Day. And the matter stopped right there.

A federation of this kind, it seems to us, would be a good thing for all of the churches to unite with, and encourage. We feel if all the churches of our town would federate after this way we could do a goodly amount of housecleaning, and remove from our midst a number of institutions that are proving a curse to many of our homes, husbands, wives and children. And had we such federations of all the churches, in all of our counties, in one year we could remove the liquor curse that is now disgracing the fair name of our beautiful State, and cursing and beggaring thousands and thousands of her parents and children each year. The men and women of the world and of sin are federating to aid the works of sin and the devil. Should not the good people of the churches federate together to diminish the kingdom of sin and help to enlarge the kingdom of God and his Christ? What say ye? H. B. B.

The Navy an Absurdity.

There is not in this country a more able advocate of peace among neighboring nations than the Independent. In a late issue the editor reads the United States, Canada and other Governments a plain lesson on the preparations of war, in the age of peace. We quote:

> In an age of peace a navy, like an army, is an absurdity. Its whole advantage is in war. It becomes, then, very important for a nation and its statesmen to be able to judge whether the old age of war has passed or is passing, or whether disputes between nations are still to be settled by force of arms. What is our age, peace or war? In future cases of difference between us and Great Britain, or France, or Germany, or Japan, will we get so angry that we will fight, or will we keep our temper and save our men and money, and settle our quarrel by arbitration? We believe the age of peace has begun, and we believe it is safe to act accordingly. But the governments do not yet think so. They have a pride in their armies and navies, and each tries to rival its neighbor in the threat of armaments.
> Among these is Canada. She has lived hitherto as in an age of peace, and has lived safely for a hundred years. But now, just when the age of war is passing by, she is getting nervous. She must begin to have a navy of her own, and she will find that plaything a very expensive luxury. Canada will begin with four big cruisers and six destroyers, to cost ten million dollars, and over a million more annually to keep them running. Now, Canada has not the slightest use for these cruisers and destroyers. She is absolutely in no danger of war. And Canada knows she is in no danger, and that it is of no advantage to her that she should put that heavy tax on her thrifty citizens. She is doing it, not for herself, but as a public declaration that she is loyal to Great Britain, and that so long as Great Britain keeps up the craze that she must maintain as strong a navy as any other two Powers put together, Canada must help her. It is a self-denying ordinance, and has that much of praise; but why should she encourage Great Britain in this insanity of the nations?

The Homiletic Review.

The January issue of the Homiletic Review contains some helpful reading, and then some that is not so helpful. The first of a series of articles on "Modern Palestine and the Bible," by Dr. Lewis B. Paton, is both interesting and instructive. We shall watch for his other chapters. The article on the "Peace Movement," by Dr. Benjamin F. Trueblood, will do good. It shows how rapidly,—though none too rapidly,—the peace sentiment is growing among the leading nations. The treatment of the Sunday-school lessons for the month strikes us as being exceedingly loose theology. The elimination of the Divine from the sacred narrative, as preserved in the Bible, is apparent to even the careless reader. As we view it, there is more of the destructive criticism creeping into the journal than is wholesome for the truly spiritual man. To affirm that the story of "The Fall," as given in Genesis, is merely folklore, is to give thousands of people good reasons for discrediting the Bible as an inspired Book. Had Jesus Christ and the apostles believed that what is said of the fall, the flood, the confusion of tongues, crossing the Red Sea, the destruction of Sodom, etc., belongs to folklore, the Christian church would never have been established. Men who convert sinners and build up churches, do not talk about any part of the Bible as being folklore.

Our Saturday Night.

As we pass along our onward way of life, often there flash into our mental vision some of the most beautiful and charming pictures. They are the snapshots of our life experiences, and they often prove to be the richest gems of our thought activities. In Bro. Moore's "Our Saturday Night" are found many of these most beautiful and interesting gems that he has found and gathered up by the way. It is a book that will be read and appreciated by those who enjoy the rich and the rare in small packages. The pages of the book will be read with profit and interest by all,—old and young. But it will be especially appreciated by those who do not have the time to read long and continued articles. The book is made up of some fifty stories, all brimful of interest, in connection with the times and experiences of our own people, years ago, as well as of those of more recent dates. We have spent some very pleasant snatches of time in scanning its varied pages, and feel quite sure it will afford both pleasure and edification to all who may have the opportunity of reading it. H. The Annual Meeting of 1846.

We are in receipt of a copy of the Minutes of the special Annual Meeting, held at the meetinghouse near the home of Joseph Bowman, Washington County, East Tennessee, Sept. 4, 5 and 6, 1846. According to these dates, the meeting began on Friday and closed on Sunday. The paper on which the proceedings of the meeting were printed is brown with age, but the printing is clear. There were thirteen papers before the meeting, though only seven of them are found in the complete book of Minutes, pages 91 and 92, published by the House last year. The Minutes are signed by nine elders. Among them we notice the names of John Bowman, Peter Nead, John A. Bowman and Benjamin Moomaw. Nothing is said about the moderator and clerks of the Conference. Just why one-half of the minutes of this special meeting should be omitted in our book of Minutes, published by the House, is no fault of the compilers, for we notice the same omission in the edition of 1876.

Where to Place Confidence.

We will have less occasion for discouragement if we will make it a rule to place our confidence in the men and women who are moving upward instead of those who are traveling on the downward road. The number who are earnestly striving for the closer walk with God may be much greater than we think. There is a possibility of getting our thoughts so fully set on the retrograde movement of a certain class of people that we forget to take notice of those who are moving in the opposite direction. Not only so, but by keeping our eyes on those who are headed for the land of the blest we will find it much easier to travel in that direction ourselves. The man who thinks that the whole race is rushing down to perdition, needs to face the other way and join the band of earnest and faithful pilgrims who are looking to Jesus, the Author and Finisher of their faith.

A Plan of Their Own.

If may be well for some people to have special plans of their own for mission work. They have their own way of providing missionary money, and then can say how they want that money applied. We happen to know a few people of this sort. They do not say much, never make any fuss about what they are doing, but they are doing a good work all the same. A brother decides through the medium of the press he wants the Gospel to reach at least forty people, so he sends us $20, and has the Messenger sent into forty homes, where there are no members. As a result of his efforts, the paper will be read by not less than 100 people, and before the end of the year a dozen or more of them may be added to the church. For this brother $20 may not be much, and yet it may be all that he can spare for his Master's cause. Let that be as it may; he is engaged in an excellent work, and the Lord is sure to bless him. We should have a thousand like him.

The Wide-Awake Brother.

One of our readers recently fell into conversation with a young man occupying the same seat in a train. Their talk drifted into religion,—a very appropriate subject on any occasion. The brother found it convenient to tell the young man how he understood the New Testament, and in the course of the conversation most of the doctrine taught by the Brethren was considered. All of this was new to the young man, but he seemed grateful for the information. When asked if he would like to read the Messenger, he responded in the affirmative. Our wide-awake brother knew that if he could get the young man interested in our literature, he could get him to thinking along right lines. We have a number of members who introduce our church principles to strangers in this manner, and occasionally some of the seed sown falls into good ground, and a bountiful crop is the result.

Holding to the Church.

One time a sister met a stranger who asked her if she did not belong to the Brethren church. She told him that she was a member of the church. He then remarked, "I hold to that church myself." This prompts one of our correspondents to wonder if there are not a number of people who simply hold to the church. They remind him of the man who, while in the water, holds to the old ship of Zion, but will not climb in and become one of the working crew. Possibly there may be thousands of these "holders-on." They do not care to become active, working members, so they simply hold on, trusting, in that way, to be recognized as members and in time to secure a title to the mansions in the skies. Jesus wants his church to be made up of earnest, active, working people, who can be recognized as in the church, and willing to make some sacrifice for his cause.

What Prohibition Does.

In his Thanksgiving Proclamation, the Governor of Kansas had this to say in behalf of his State, where wise prohibition laws are enforced: "One-third of our counties are without prisoners in their jails or paupers in their almshouses. One-half of our counties sent no convicts to our prisons this year. One-half of our prison inmates never lived in Kansas long enough to acquire a residence here. Churches and schools flourish, the spiritual outlook is hopeful and the saloon is practically banished." If the whole of the United States were prohibition territory, this is about what we might look for in the President's Thanksgiving Proclamation, and when all those who profess to be Christians vote on the right side of the liquor question, that is just what we shall have the pleasure of reading.

The Subjects Treated.

A list of the subjects treated at some of our revival meetings might prove helpful to a number of our readers. Here is a list given out by one of our evangelists in the West. Possibly we may hear from others:

1. Obedience. 2. Walk Ye in the Way. 3. One Mind and One Mouth. 4. One Thing I Desire. 5. The Secrets of the Lord. 6. Transformed. 7. God's Perfect Will. 8. Today I Must Abide at Thy House. 9. Looking Up. 10. Weep Not for Me but for Yourselves and Your Children. 11. The First Prayer Meeting in Hell. 12. The Unpardonable Sin. 13. If a Man Gain the Whole World and Lose His Own Soul, What Will He Give in Exchange? 14. Remember Lot's Wife. 15. The Gospel, Its Power; I'm Not Ashamed of It. 16. At the School of Christ. 17. Unequally Yoked Together. 18. All Things Are Yours. 19. Our Exercises.

AN EXPLANATION.

In Gospel Messenger of Nov. 5, 1910, there appears an article over my signature entitled "Are We a Missionary Church?" In issue of Messenger for Dec. 31, 1910, Bro. S. Z. Sharp takes issue with me in regard to this article, saying, among other things, "that the writer certainly must not have had the statistics before him or he would not have made the mistake."

If a mistake was made, it was not made by giving statistics off-hand, or by misquoting any authority. If Bro. Sharp will turn to page 1426, Vol. I., Johnson's Universal Cyclopædia," Edition of 1874, he will find these words: "The entire population connected with the denomination is estimated at about one hundred thousand."

This well-known work, which is generally regarded as good authority, gave the most definite statement that I could find concerning the number of our people at the time referred to. E. R. Miller.

SISTERS' AID SOCIETIES.

A few weeks ago a request was made that all societies wishing to be enrolled with the general organization, send name of society and enrollment fee (twenty-five cents) to the secretary. We appreciate the prompt attention that many societies have given our request, and kindly ask all others to do so as early as possible.

A number of the booklets, which contain the constitution and helpful suggestions, have been sent out. It is our desire that each society have one of these booklets, but unless you send us the name and address of your society, we have no means of reaching you.

When you begin your work for the year 1911, will you not all kindly report your work of the past year to the secretary, and send your enrollment fee if you have not already done so? Please give this your prompt attention. Do not send stamps, as it is not always easy to dispose of them.

Send all reports and fees to the secretary, Mrs. T. S. Moherman, Ashland, Ohio. Mrs. W. D. Keller.

FROM LAWRENCE, KANS.

Dec. 31 I came to this city, to begin a series of meetings on New Year's Day at the Pleasant Grove church, eight miles south of the city. A small congregation only was in attendance, owing to the muddy condition of the roads. In the afternoon the mercury fell about fifty degrees, the wind blew and snow filled the air, so that we could have no services at night. The next day continued very cold, with temperature below zero, so that very few people ventured to church.

This is one of the first churches of the Brethren organized in the State. They have a large and commodious church building, but only a small membership and no resident minister. They have an evergreen Sunday-school. They are very anxious to secure a resident minister. Land is fertile, and this is a prosperous section, though not so level and clear of rocks as Western Kansas.

Eld. I. L. Hoover, of Lone Star, Kans., has charge of the work here. A minister who wants to settle where his services in the ministry are needed, would do well to inquire. C. D. Hylton.

A BAPTISMAL SCENE IN THE BAY.

This morning, a bright and sunny Christmas Day, we, with the little band of members and friends of this place, wended our way to the public school building (where we hold our Sunday-school and preaching services), to celebrate this highly-honored day by way of giving praises to him who is the most precious Christmas gift this world can afford.

At the close of the services an appeal was made to all to live a more consecrated and devoted life to this Christ who suffered and died for us all. Others were also appealed to by urging that there could be no better day in all the year than this Christmas Day, to give their life and service to Christ as a true and genuine Christmas gift.

Two young boys showed their appreciation of a true and genuine Christmas gift by giving their hearts and lives to Christ on this glorious Christmas Day in this sunny, genial clime of God's heritage. At 5 P. M. we repaired to the Corpus Christi Bay, where a goodly number gathered with us. We walked out to the end of the pier. Here the roaring of the breakers, the solemnity of the people, the sweet singing, and the earnest prayer, made the place divinely sweet.

The two boys, hand in hand, were led by my husband down a ladder into the liquid bay and buried with Christ in baptism, to walk in newness of life.

Oh, that many more may have made the good resolve to dedicate themselves this day as a Christmas gift to God! It is very appropriate and fitting to resolve anew, on this Christmas Day, to serve the Lord more fully and to be devoted workers in his vineyard.

FROM MOUNTAIN VIEW, MO.

About thirteen years ago six souls, through the preaching of Eld. Dove, of Cabool, Mo., now deceased, were converted to the belief of the Brethren. Soon after, four of them moved away. Wife and I were left alone, and there was very little preaching. Brethren Stevens and Dove came once in a while for a few years. Another sister moved here, and one sister and our son joined the church nearly two years ago. Last April we rented the Advent church. Brethren Phineas Fike and Garst, from Peace Valley, sixteen miles from here, preached once a month. Dec. 11 Bro. Wyatt, of Joplin, Mo., was sent to us by the Mission Board. He preached twenty-two sermons. While there were none added to the fold, yet we feel much encouraged. The attendance was small, owing to the Holiday season. People were too busy fixing up Christmas trees. We invited many to our meetings. Some who came every night, were heard to say: "I wish he would preach three weeks longer." One man said that he heard more Bible preaching than he ever did in his life. Bro. Wyatt is a good preacher. We are made to wonder why such men can not put in all of their time and be supported by the Brethren. Surely, Bro. Wyatt is a man of God.

Mountain View, Mo., Jan. 2. Wm. Mullen.

FROM UNION CHURCH, IND.

We are now in the midst of our revival work, assisted by Eld. Albert Deeter and wife, of Milford. We are expecting great results from these services.

Our quarterly council meeting was presided over by our elder, S. F. Henricks, at which time our Sunday-school officers for the coming year were elected, resulting in choosing Bro. S. H. Beller as superintendent, and Sister Mable Markley as secretary.

Yesterday the yearly report of our Sunday-school was read, showing an average attendance of eighty. Bro. Henricks preached our Thanksgiving sermon, at which time an offering was taken for the benefit of our singing class, which will be organized in the near future by Sister Cora M. Staley, of Nappanee.

Our teacher-training class of ten young men and women have completed their work and will soon take the State examination.

Bro. Appelman and I have given several weeks of time in assisting the members of the Blissville church, the Cedar Creek church, and the Walnut church, in revival work, and we are now enjoying our meeting at home for a season. A. Laura Appelman.

THE GREAT "GO YE."

"Go work today in my vineyard" (Matt. 21: 28).

As I was reading the late issue of the Messenger, I noticed on the first page, among "Around the World" items, an account of a great disaster in China. The most distressing thing about it is that the many lives that were lost went down to Christless graves. These people were of God's creation, belonging to that number to whom Christ's Gospel should have been preached. "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations" (Matt. 28: 19).

The thought arises, Who will go? Did you ever study the force of the "Go ye," so forcibly taught in the Bible? If you have, you certainly realize that some one is responsible for those who are dying outside of Christ. Has the call ever come to you from some mission-field, home or foreign? If so, you should certainly feel your responsibility. Never does one feel the responsibility so keenly as when the call comes direct to him.

Dear reader, let us consider this question. Hear the command: "Go ye therefore and teach all nations." Whom does this include? The heathen as well as the civilized world. Why should we fear to go, when Christ has so gloriously promised, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world"? Whether we are in the dark regions of Africa, in the jungles of India, or in the interior of China, away from home and friends, we will remind ourselves of the promise of Jesus, "Lo, I am with you alway."

When we have a friend like Jesus, to whom we can bring our sorrows, and at whose feet we can sit as Mary did, that the good part may be ours, why should we hesitate or fear? Will we not confide ourselves to the hands of the Lord, and say, as did the prophet of old, "Here am I, send me"? The Lord's vineyard needs workers and who will go?

When Jesus had ended his conversation with the Samaritan woman, at the well, he lifted up his eyes and saw the great multitude coming from the city. Then it was he said, "The fields are white already to harvest." Dear reader, lift up your eyes and you will behold that the fields are still white. Are we doing our best to be diligent reapers? C. H. Steerman.

Frisco, Mo.

FROM LANARK, ILL.

On Christmas Day our attendance at Sunday-school was 170; collection, $15. A Christmas program was given in the evening at the close of the Sunday-school. We decided to make New Year's Day a rally day. The Sunday-school assembled in the new church. This church is considered a most beautiful, neat and convenient structure. It is built with all modern improvements. It is heated with steam. There are seven extra rooms, built especially for Sunday-school classes. The other four classes assemble in the main room. The attendance at Sunday-school on New Year's Day was 306. Collection, $44.80.

By the request of his own people, Bro. I. B. Trout preached the dedicatory sermon of the new house to over six hundred people. Texts, 1 Kings 8: 63; Rom. 12: 1. The house was so crowded that some were unable to get in. A free-will offering was taken up, which amounted to $586.40. Bro. Herbert Studebaker, of Greens Fork, Ind., preached for us at the second service, taking the place of Bro. D. L. Miller, who could not be with us on account of sickness. Ada. I. Royer.

R. D. 2, Lanark, Ill., Jan. 2.

FROM AHWA, INDIA.

Our hearts, with those of the angels in heaven, were gladdened again Oct. 23. On that day three more were received into the church by baptism. They have been seekers for more than a year, and once before we thought they were ready for baptism. A little company of us went especially for the purpose of seeing the rite administered, but during the time of asking questions, preparatory to administering the sacred rite, it developed that one was still holding and wanted to continue to hold to a custom that has its truest and most zealous devotees among those who know not the Lord, so the rite was delayed. The postponement was painful to the applicants as well as to us, but it has borne fruit.

These three are an interesting group. The group consists of an aged mother, her son and his wife. We have known them only one year and a half, but a write-up of their history at the time of their first visit would form a most interesting bit of mission literature.

During this present year we have had but four visitors. Brethren Stover and Long visited us in April last and Brother and Sister Blough came to us Nov. 17 and remained until the morning of the 21st. These visits of our dear members prove rich treats to us—socially, spiritually and otherwise. We so much longed for more of them, but the press of duty is so great in each and all of the stations that we can not ask or expect them to leave their duties for us. But if these dear ones got only a small portion of the joy of their visit to us that we got from the visit, they can feel assured that their time and labors to get here have been well spent.

On the evening of Nov. 19, while Brother and Sister Blough were with us, we gathered at the table of the Lord to partake of the emblems of his body and blood. What a blessed season that was to us all! The number that partook of the emblems was seventeen and with us at the tables were seven children. This may seem small to those who live in large congregations at home, but it does not seem so to us. It is the nucleus of what, under God's love and care, will some day be a large and, we trust, a Christ-filled congregation. Some of the members did not come. Six were absent. These were remembered in earnest prayers.

Bro. Blough preached three sermons for us. They were full of encouragement and advice for us all, and greatly appreciated by all who heard them. What blessings we can bring into one another's life by devoted companionship! We shall not forget these all-too-brief visits of our dear members.

On the morning of Oct. 4, when we sat down to the table to partake of our morning meal, we found by our plate a letter from our sister Eva. We read it with much joy, for in it we read, in and between the lines, the message that she was getting stronger and better than for some time. In less than four hours after that a message came to us, stating that Eva had died, and would be buried on the 6th. It was but brief but its meaning could not be mistaken. That letter was the last message she sent us. Do you wonder that we treasure it?

Since in India, this message and that other one, telling us of the death of our dear mother have come across the lands and seas which intervene. Four years have gone since our mother was laid away. How many of those who read these lines have gone away from home while mother or father, or both, were living and gone back to find one or the other, or both, of their chairs empty! But God still lives and loves and we, although mourning for our loved ones, do not mourn as those who have no hopes of meeting their loved ones again. Instead of the next meeting being on earth, we hope it will be in heaven with Jesus, for we do long to meet him and them for reasons unnumbered. God keep us all faithful in all things until death!

J. M. Pittenger.

Notes From Our Correspondents

As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country

ALABAMA.

Fruitdale.—Our Sunday-school was reorganized at our council Dec. 11, with Bro. William E. White as superintendent, and Bro. Allen Clague, secretary. Only a few of our Sunday-school scholars have been baptized within the last fifteen months. Five of them are teachers in the common schools. Nine of our members are county teachers. Most of our conversions have been from the Sunday-school and without public meetings. Prospects are bright for this year's work.—William E. White, Fruitdale, Ala., Jan. 1.

CALIFORNIA.

Denair.—Bro. J. C. Seibert, of Empire, preached here on Christmas Day. We partially organized Sunday-school with Bro. W. Winter superintendent, and Bro. Seibert as an assistant on points of the Empire church. It is about fourteen miles from Empire, but across the river. This makes it unhandy for the members living here to attend services at the Empire church, since we are anxious to organize a congregation with us. This is a good section of the country and we would like to have members, especially a good minister, locate here. There are no members here now. We have preaching every two weeks.—Effie C. Mahoney, Denair, Cal., Dec. 31.

Imperial Valley.—Our church meets at this place Dec. 30, at 10 A. M., with a good representation of our scattered membership. The business was disposed of in a Christian spirit. The Brethren of the East Side, known as the Alamo District, called for a separate organization, which was granted. They have a commodious house of worship ther, almost completed. Their organization will probably be effected in the near future. The church on this side, near El Centro, elected new officers for the ensuing year, as follows: Bro. W. H. Van Horn, trustee; Bro. E. S. Strickler, clerk; Bro. L. M. Van Horn, trustee; Bro. John Woodard, Messenger agent. Bro. Strickler again responded to the board of trustees was also elected. Sunday-school officers were elected for six months, with Bro. Arthur Hilton as superintendent. The work is progressing here, and several new members have located with us since our last report.—Emma D. Platt, El Centro, Cal., Jan. 1.

Los Angeles church met in quarterly council on Friday evening, Dec. 30, with our elder, Bro. J. H. Bashore, presiding. Officers for church and Sunday-school were elected for the ensuing year, as follows: Bro. Levi Hosfeldt, clerk; Bro. H. G. Iman, treasurer; Sister Della Banbury, church; the writer, correspondent; and Bro. S. G. Lehmer resigned as elder in charge, Eld. D. W. Crist was elected. Crist, of the Mission, Bro. G. H. Bashore was reelected in charge; Boyle Heights, Bro. W. J. Smith; Chanute, Bro. Jesse Ikenberry. There was a committee appointed to investigate this church, as well as the members, to better accommodate ourselves in the interest for Sunday-school. Sunday evening, Bro. Wm. Lampin, of Polo, Ill., began a series of meetings at this place. Attendance on the first meeting was out of reason into the water for baptism. This is a result of the efforts put forth in the Santa Fe Mission.—Mrs. M. M. Frantz, 1340 Boyle Avenue, Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 2.

Redondo.—Our Sunday-school was begun Dec. 12, with an enrollment of 12. At the close of 1910 we had an enrollment of 34, with an average attendance of 25 for the year, of 29. Our total collection for the year amounted to $43.56. Every second collection was taken for the poor each day. By vote of the school $17.43 was given to the World-wide Missions. We gave $6.22 to the General Mission Board for the Santa Monica work. We have organized a church here which, it was voted, should be used to swell the fund for the new churchhouse, which is being erected at this place. Since the last report from this place, one has been reclaimed. Dear reader, will you pray for the success of the work at this place?—Maude Moore, Redondo Beach, Cal., Dec. 24.

COLORADO.

Arriba.—As already stated in the columns of the Messenger we are located here at Arriba, under the name of the Bethel church. We now have thirty-one members. We have preaching every Lord's Day, and also Sunday-school and Christian Work. We solicit correspondence with any brethren who anticipate changing their location; also with brethren who are now living within our territory, whom we have not yet found.—J. T. Stanbrough, Arriba, Colo., Jan. 1.

Rockyford.—Our series of meetings began Dec. 19 and closed Dec. 25. Bro. Benton Berry did the preaching. The church was united with the church. Our Sunday-school gave a special program on Christmas morning. At the close of the exercises all were given a substantial treat. Two have been baptized since our last report.—Clara E. Miller, Rockyford, Colo., Dec. 26.

Smith Fork church met in council Dec. 26. Our elder, Bro. Brubaker, and Sister Ikenberry were elected as delegates. Bro. L. H. Howett was chosen superintendent of the Sunday-school. South Bend.—Bro. David Metzler came to us Sept. 1 and the Christian Workers of Goshen, Elkhart and South Bend held their first meeting in connection with the South Bend church. This was preceded by a Sunday-school Meeting in the afternoon. The meeting continued for the duration of the weather, while it diminished the attendance somewhat, on the other hand added to the enjoyableness of the meeting in the crisp air. It was a splendid opportunity for social interchange, occasioned by having remain together in the church during the noon hour. Such meetings on such occasions tend to promote the brotherly love that is so characteristic of the brotherhood.—Mrs. R. R. D. South Bend, Ind., Jan. 2.

Union Center.—Our Sunday-school met in regular session Dec. 25. At the close we organized for 1911. Officers elected were as follows: Bro. E. E. Stern, superintendent; Sister Dixie Bland, secretary. Dec. 31 we met at the church for a New Year's dinner, followed by a Christmas treat by the retiring superintendent. Bro. J. S. Harshbarger, of Nappanee, preached for us the very new year.—E. E. Stern, Nobleville, Ind., Jan. 5.

Union Center.—David Metzler came to us Dec. 11 and stayed till the 29th. In all he preached nineteen soul-inspiring sermons. He came out on the Lord's side, and others will follow from the kingdom. Upper Fall Creek.—Our church met in council Dec. 24. Bro. J. W. Fike presided. Sunday-school officers were chosen for his home. Bro. D. F. Hoover presided. A series of meetings was appointed to be held in the Center house, with Bro. Fike. Brethren Hoover and Fadely were appointed to secure a minister. Bro. Fadely was appointed to write for the church.—We need a resident minister here, to help build up the cause at this place. We have a nice town and a good church, and are willing to help the work along to the best of our ability. Why not make good resolutions to do more and better work for the Master during the new year?—Ida Fike, Peru, Ind., Jan. 1. We will continue to hold Sunday-school at the old church all winter, with Bro. Fike superintendent.—Sunday-school secretary, Verdilla J. E. Green, Middletown, Ind., Jan. 2.

Walnut.—Our church house we held a two weeks' series of meetings, the latter part of November. Bro. John Appleman did the preaching. Sister Appleman gave a short Bible lesson before each service. Two were willing to partake of the "cup of salvation." Bro. Appleman also preached on Thanksgiving sermon, after which a collection of $8.75 was taken for World-wide Missions. Our council convened Dec. 17. Bro. Amos Diehery presided. Bro. David Metzler was chosen to hold a series of meetings at this place next December.—Susan Puterbaugh, Argos, Ind., Jan. 2.

IOWA.

English River.—We have just been enjoying a most glorious season of spiritual refreshing by the efforts of Bro. E. B. Hoff, of Bethany Bible School. He came to us Dec. 24 and continued one week. With us he treated such subjects and as, "Prayer," "The Holy Spirit," "Our High Calling," "The Prayer Covering," "Conversion," "Absolving," and many other topics of much interest. Bro. Hoff has the characteristic of making things exceedingly spiritual, and many of us received the blessing and better work for the Master. Sister Nettie Senger, of the same place, was also here, and entertained with her violin solos. She also gave a few special talks to the older ones along the line of Sunday-school work. Our Sunday-school reorganized for six months with Bro. Harry Coder as superintendent, and Sister Ollie Coffman as secretary. Our mission collection amounted to about $15, which will be used for mission work in Southern Iowa.—Peter Brower, South English, Iowa, Jan. 2.

Panther Creek.—We have just closed a very interesting and inspiring Bible Term, conducted by Bro. M. W. Emmert, Dean of the Bible Department of Mt. Morris College. Many passages of Scripture were shown to us in a new light, and many very hearts burned within us as he opened to us the inspiring words of God's Book. We had two recitation periods each forenoon, with a demonstration. We had a meeting each evening. It was in this church that Bro. Emmert grew from a boy into manhood. Here he gave his heart to the Lord and later was elected to the ministry; so that we naturally feel an interest in him and in the work he is doing. Sunday morning, followed by the prayers of all who were under his tuition while among us.—A. M. Stine, Adel, Iowa, Jan. 2.

KANSAS.

Allamont.—Bro. E. E. Eby preached his farewell sermon at this place Dec. 11. Brother and Sister Joyce came here seven years ago, and have been faithful in the Lord's work as they put forth their best efforts in the work, because of the love they had for the cause. We gave Eld. Joyce to the church without any financial aid. We keenly miss each member of his family; as they were active in every department of church work. Bro. Joyce has given his whole time to the congregation. We are now left without a minister, but we hope that one may be appointed soon. He has been loved in this place, baptized ten; married six; preached eleven funerals, assisted Eld. Eby in holding two series of meetings; ordained elders for deacons, fifty-five council meetings, and preached many sermons.—Cora Morris, R. D. 3, Box 25, Parsons, Kans., Jan. 2.

Burr Oak church convened in council Dec. 31, with Bro. T. E. George presiding. Two letters of membership were granted. Officers for both church and Sunday-school were elected as follows: Bro. Jesse Garman, elder; Bro. Rees, elected church treasurer; Sister Rose Garman, church clerk; Bro. Cole Klein, Messenger agent; Bro. Jesse Garman, S. S. Our elder is at our home in Ella Quakenbush, Messenger agent and correspondent; Bro. J. S. On Sunday night, prior to our Christian Workers' Meeting, we chose the officers for the year. Bro. Leaman is president, and Sister Ella Quakenbush, secretary-treasurer. We are now ready for another years work. All business was disposed of in a satisfactory manner. Our Sunday-school is doing well, and we are planning for more. Our Building Committee reports the work progressing very well in Kansas City. The house which we have built to be moved to a suitable place for a church, is being torn down and will be rebuilt. We are glad to be helped to do so vast amount of work to be done, to increase the harvest for the Lord.—Lizzie Quakenbush, Olpe, Kans., Jan. 4.

MARYLAND.

Brandenburg.—We had a series of meetings at the Creek Hill house Dec. 4, conducted by the home brethren. Our meeting was inspiring and upbuilding to all. Dec. 14 Eld. H. E. Light was in our neighborhood and gave us an able sermon on 2 Cor. 7: 10 to almost a full house. Although some were made willing to surrender all to him who loves their soul, we do not feel discouraged.—D. R. Petre, R. D. 1, Hagerstown, Md., Jan. 2.

Correction.—I notice that in a late Messenger under the head, "Church Events Here of Maryland," it is stated that "the writer held the first meetings, as far as known, in Talbot and Caroline Counties." I meant to have it read: "So far as known to the writer." It was by the writer in 1881, but the first meetings were held by the Brethren in this new territory. Others, on a young man, may have preached before the article, as published, conveys the wrong impression. —M. P. King, Denton, Md., Dec. 31.

MICHIGAN.

Much business was disposed of, and early disposed of, and we enter the year 1911 much encouraged, especially in the Sunday-school work. Bro. Geo. D. York is our superintendent. For the past four years our school has been supporting a native worker in India, and now one of their brethren has offered to support a native worker, being a desire to do more toward sending the Gospel to all nations, we will this year raise funds to support a foreign missionary in China for 1912. The treasurer of our Building Committee reported money sufficient to meet all bills and expenses on our remodeled churchhouse. One brother has been added by baptism since our last report.—Grace Tisdale, Cedar Rapids, Mich., Jan. 5.

Three were received into the church by baptism. This makes four since we started the work here. Others are interesting themselves. The Sunday-school, Christian school and church is going out for good, and people are coming into our meetings. CORRESPONDENCE

"Write what thou seest, and send it unto the churches."

FROM VICTOR, COLO.

We convened in council Dec. 10, to transact business for the coming year's work. As there was much to be done, we assembled at 11 o'clock. Some business was disposed of, and at twelve o'clock we adjourned for dinner. These all-day meetings are closer together, and make us more willing to work as one family. We get both spiritual and temporal food.

Much business was transacted, among which was a plan to raise money for the coming year. Each family is to report all donations, presents, inheritances, and hand it to a committee. This committee estimates the cost of running the church, including our portion for the District Mission Work and other assessments, donations to World Relief, Missions, Ford fund, and the needs of two series of meetings. The committee then levies a tax of a certain per cent, so that each one gives as the Lord has prospered him.

A committee of three was appointed to secure an evangelist for coming meetings in the spring. Among the officers who were elected for the coming year are the following: Sunday-school superintendent, Bro. A. E. Thompson; secretary, Sister Eva Dees; home department superintendent, Sister Addie Thompson; superintendent of cradle roll, Sister Lizzie Balm; Christian Worker president, Sister Mary E. Daggett; secretary, Sister Violet Goad.

The business passed off pleasantly and we hurried home to prepare for Sunday-school and the evening, which was conducted by Bro. Katherman, of Lawrence, Kans. The three weeks' term of music closed on Saturday night, Dec. 24. We have been learning to praise our Savior through our singing, and have spent many pleasant nights together.

Bro. H. C. Collyer and family will move to Beverly, to assist Bro. Fitzwater. He is badly needed there, as Bro. Fitzwater's health is failing. May the Lord bless their efforts.

served our District as secretary of the Mission Board for nine years.

Eld. B. E. Kessler conducts a series of meetings at two mission points. Our Sunday-school is doing nicely. Teachers were elected last Sunday for the next six months. They take their places the first of the year. We are very thankful to our Heavenly Father for all the blessings he is showering upon us.

A. C. Daggett.

Covert, Kans., Dec. 31.

FROM SPRINGFIELD, OHIO.

We met in council Dec. 17. Eld. James Murray had charge of the work, assisted by Eld. Noah Longanecker. Elders Cline and Sprankel were also with us. The building committee presented their report, which was accepted. Two were received by letter—a deacon and his wife. One letter was granted. Officers were elected for our Sunday-schools, here and at the Kent house. With Bro. Bixler away in evangelistic work, and Bro. Kreiner at Bethany, the church felt the need of more help in the ministry. An election was held, and the lot fell on Bro. Charles Kurtz. He and his wife were installed.

On Sunday morning, Dec. 18, we met for Sunday-school and dedication services. Bro. Shoemaker conducted the Sunday-school work in his interesting manner, and Bro. Murray preached an inspiring sermon to a large and attentive audience. Visiting ministers present were Brethren N. Longanecker, S. Sprankel, Charles Kinsley, S. Shoemaker, Henry Young and S. J. Holl. After being deprived of Sunday-school and preaching services for nearly two months, we appreciate our well-arranged house. We can also sympathize more fully with others who are deprived of church privileges.

Bro. Murray continued the meetings for two weeks, closing on the evening of Jan. 1. He labored earnestly and well. Our members were encouraged and built up. Although there were no accessions, we feel that some are counting the cost, and that much good has been done.

Mogadore, Ohio, Jan. 2. Alice C. Mumaw.

EIGHTY YEARS OF WORK.

It has been about eighty years since a church has been organized in Northern Indiana. Bro. Daniel Cripe, a minister, came here from Southern Ohio, and settled at Elkhart Prairie about the year 1830. Soon others followed. Then the church began to spread out, until finally, we had forty-five congregations.

I see in the Almanac for 1911 that Indiana has more church organizations (congregations) than any other State. Pennsylvania comes next. Northern Indiana has lost by death sixty-seven ministers since eighty years ago. I remember of seeing and hearing all of them preach except two. I may have missed a few. At present we have over one-hundred ministers. Among these there may possibly be twenty-five who are not active, because of old age or other causes.

In 1910 we had 3,884 members; families represented, 1,610; number of delegates, fifty-eight; churches not represented, six.

We have fifty churchhouses of our own, and own part of a few union houses. There was a time, years ago, when we had no house of worship in towns or cities, but of late years we have about twelve or more. The tendency, at present, is towards the towns and cities. Some even go so anxious for city work, that they feel some of the country houses should be moved to towns. Thus they would seriously neglect the country people. Churches should be built both in town and country, so that all can be accommodated. May the Lord help in the good work, is our prayer! J. H. Miller.

CHRISTMAS IN ST. JOSEPH, MO.

Jesus said: "When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbors; lest they also bid thee again and a recompense be made thee. But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind; and thou shalt be blessed; for they can not recompense thee; for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just" (Luke 14: 12-14). This we did for the poor at St Joseph, by the help of the churches. This Scripture was almost carried out to the letter, in the following plan:

Dec. 8 we sent out letters to the churches, asking for a small offering to aid in feeding the poor, to which many of them responded. We then secured a large building at 5023 Kinghill Avenue for the dinner, and also a rest room at 5018. We had 1,000 invitations printed, which, by willing hands, were carried over the city to those where the poorest people live, taking great care that all sick or crippled might be noted down, so that we might carry them a well-filled basket.

We then proceeded to arrange for our supplies, by buying 500 loaves of bread, 350 pies, 4,000 cookies, 79 chickens, a large quantity of rabbits, 250 pounds of beef, 100 pounds of sugar, one-half barrel cranberries, ten dozen bunches of celery, seven bushels of potatoes, twenty-five pounds of butter, five gallons of sour pickles, etc. We then made ready the dinner on Saturday before Christmas.

The members and friends willingly helped us to make all necessary preparations and at 11: 30 we gave the South St. Joseph Sunday-school the first chance to eat. We had planned to seat ninety at the tables, and to 350 were fed at the tables on Saturday. We were provided with a doorkeeper, to keep the door closed while the people were being served. On the outside stood a large crowd—even out into the street—awaiting their turn. Among the number were many children, old men and women. The saddest sight was to see mothers standing with children in their arms, choosing rather to stand in the cold wind than to go to the waiting-room, for fear they would lose the next chance at the table.

After all were fed that came, we closed the doors and left everything till Monday morning, when again we called in help and began to fill baskets for those who were unable to come to the dinner. Many sister came to the door, begging for help, but we held them back till all orders for the sick and helpless were provided for. Then we allowed all to have a basket that came—taking care that no family was served twice. As we kept careful record, we were obliged, on several occasions, to ask children to empty their baskets, as they had already been served.

One dear father, seventy-seven years of age, who has no home, except what friends have provided for him, asked the privilege of carrying a basket to an aged, blind negro, at one time a slave. His thoughtfulness greatly pleased the old negro, so that he said: "God bless de Dunkards."

After serving all who came, and carrying baskets to the homes of the disabled ones, we found that a total of 183 baskets had been distributed, allowing ten lunches to the basket. We had also provided for those who came, and also some cash left, which will feed and clothe the workers, care for the poor, assist in the mission, or in any way needed.

We make quarterly and annual reports to the District Board of Northern Missouri, under whose care we are working. All receipts and expenditures are carefully recorded and handled in a business-like manner, open to inspection by all. Eld. J. S. Kline, of the North St. Joseph church, and a young Brethren sister, from Morrill, Kans., were present with us on Saturday.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Oct. 15 it was the happy privilege of the writer, with his wife, to enjoy a very spiritual feast with the saints at the Garber church, Rockingham Co., Va. Many recollections of my boyhood days were spent in the vicinity of this sacred spot, come to my mind.

The saints here know of God's greatness and his goodness. This congregation is very ably presided over by Eld. S. I. Bowman, with an able ministry and efficient deacons. I held two series of meetings in this congregation, and thus became acquainted with most of the members. There was some rejoicing among the dear ones, because the Lord blessed the efforts put forth.

Great changes have taken place since 1866, when we used to be citizens of the neighborhood. Near the old Garber church lives my only sister-in-law, with her six children near her. Two of her sons are in the ministry—Eld. I. Bowman, as already named, is minister in the first degree. One son-in-law, Bro. W. K. Compton, is also a minister, and one son-in-law serves in the deacon's office. There are very few remaining of those who were there in 1866, and in active service in the church then.

Nov. 5 wife and I went to the Nokesville church, in Eastern Virginia, near the town of Nokesville, Va., where Hebron Seminary is located, in charge of our well-known brother, I. N. H. Beahm. We visited the institution several times. During our visit the building was dedicated. We bespeak a bright future for the school. Some of the brethren and sisters have made considerable sacrifice in starting the work anew. They have a new building, almost paid. Some seventy or more students are now in attendance.

We had some very pleasant meetings with the dear, self-sacrificing brethren and sisters. Their membership is 135. They have a good many young members. The work is under the care of Eld. Jacob Wine, a cousin of the writer. There is some fine talent in this congregation.

We left Virginia for Huntington, Ind., Dec. 16, to assist the Clear Creek church in a series of meetings. At this writing I am very comfortably located near the church, at Bro. J. B. Haines'. Eld. Dorsey Hodgden has charge of the work.

At present this vicinity is in the grip of snow and zero weather. The attendance, therefore, is small, but very interesting. From here, perhaps Jan. 9, we shall return to our home at Girard, Ill., after three months of travel since Oct. 15. We have been in active work every night, except two. About Feb. 1, 1911, I shall be with the church in Montgomery County, Ind., near Colfax. At White church I shall close my work for the winter. I could still serve a few more churches. I expect to give all of my time to evangelistic work. M. Flory.

Girard, Ill., Dec. 26.

An offering of $18 was taken and sent to the General Mission work. Our Sunday-school took an active part in the Sunday-school Extension work in Chicago, and have sent in over $22. The little ones enjoyed this work.—Anna Myers, Centralia, Wash., Jan. 6.

Mount Hope.—Our church met in council Dec. 17. Our elder, Bro. Amos B. Peters, presiding. Four letters were granted. This means the losing of some of our best workers. We decided to have a series of meetings, to be conducted by Bro. John O. Strester, as soon as the roads are good. We reorganized, with Bro. Amos B. Peters as elder; Bro. Jesse Miller, foreman; Sister Alice Streeter, clerk; Sister Benjamin Streeter, treasurer; Sister Ruby Metcalf, chorister; the writer, Messenger correspondent. Since Brethren Arthur Roper and Sherman Clapper, two of our ministers, have left us, we appointed Brethren A. A. Frazier and G. L. Hixson to fill the vacancy. Bro. Peters preached at Mount Hope on Sunday forenoon, and in the afternoon he visited the Sunday-school in town, and gave us a short talk. He seemed well pleased with the interest shown, and encouraged us to work on, though our band is not so large as formerly, and we are somewhat scattered, yet we feel that God is good and will send us help, or strengthen us for the added responsibility.—Pearl Hixson, Chewelah, Wash., Jan. 2.

Olympia.—Dec. 18 the Olympia Sunday-school rendered a Christmas program to a crowded house. The songs and recitations were inspiring. Our church met in council Dec. 27. Officers for the Sunday-school and the Christian Workers' Meeting were elected for the coming year. Several letters have been received since our last report. We expect Bro. Studebaker, of Bethany Bible School, to come and preach for us in the near future. Bro. C. Fitz was with us at our Thanksgiving services, and favored us with a short address. A collection was taken for the Bethany Bible School.—Mrs. Ayers, Olympia, Wash., Jan. 2.

Tacoma.—Our council, last evening, we elected officers for the Sunday-school for the first six months of 1911. Sister Stiverson was reelected superintendent, and Sister Eva Shockley as secretary. We decided to begin our revival meeting Jan. 1, the writer doing the preaching. Our Sunday-school gave a very appropriate program on Christmas Day. We had a green Christmas. On Christmas eve wife went into our yard and picked some roses, that were in full bloom. Bro. D. B. Eby called on us Dec. 26, on his way to Portland, Oregon, to attend the meeting of the Board of Church Boards. We invite all members, passing through the city, to call and see us and worship, and get more information about our city mission work.—U. G. Stiverson, 712 South Fifty-second Street, Tacoma, Wash., Dec. 31.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Manassas.—Our church met in council Dec. 31. Sunday-school superintendents were elected as follows: Brethren J. J. Conner and G. F. Suchen, for Canon Branch; Brethren M. J. Hottle and Ira Wakeman, for Bradley. Bro. E. E. Blough was elected president of the Christian Workers' Meeting. Two letters of membership were granted and one was received. Bro. W. K. Conner, of Bridgewater, is expected for us on Christmas Day.—Alice C. Blough, Valley Furnace, W. Va., Jan. 3.

Packs Branch.—Brethren James A. Riner and James Rogers, of Bragg'ville, W. Va., were with us the first Sunday in November. Bro. Rogers preached a good sermon on Saturday evening, and one on Sunday at eleven o'clock. After preaching services, Bro. Riner baptized one of our Sunday-school girls. Dec. 18 Bro. Riner preached for us again. We feel that our Brethren at Bragg'ville are faithful workers. It is several miles from their homes to this place, and they have a very inconvenient way to get here, yet nevertheless they have been coming to this place for a good many years, and have done much good.—Della Lafferty, Packs Branch, W. Va., Dec. 20.

Pleasant View.—We have just closed a most interesting Bible and music class, conducted by Bro. Jacob S. Zigler. The Book of Romans was taught. The church feels much benefited, and stronger to battle through the new year of 1911. Dec. 30 we met in council meeting, with Eld. Jacob S. Zigler presiding. Our delegate to District Meeting is Sister Virgie McAvoy, with Bro. E. L. Clower, alternate. Bro. Thomas Jones was elected superintendent for this year. Sister Lela Zigler is our cradle roll superintendent. The average attendance for our Sunday-school last year was seventy-one; amount collected, $49.84. Three Sundays $49.84. Three pupils attended the entire year without missing any Sunday.—Anna Flanagan, Rock Hill, Bragg'ville, W. Va., Jan. 2.

Shiloh.—Our church met in council Dec. 17. Eld. Obed Hamstead presided. The following officers were elected: Sunday-school business came before the council. Bro. C. W. Guthrie will, during the coming spring and summer, hold a tabernacle lecture of his trip around the world at this place and also at the Nicklow church. Bro. Hamstead and the home minister began a series of meetings at this place Dec. 18, continuing one week. We had good crowds and good interest. On account of the bad weather we decided to close and not hold a meeting later. We reorganized our Sunday-school, with Brethren John Pike and Ira Nicklow, as superintendents. —Dora Auvil, Valley Furnace, W. Va., Jan. 3.

NOTES NOT CLASSIFIED.

Carthage.—We earnestly solicit the prayers of the Messenger readers in behalf of our afflicted daughter, Sister Nellie B. Cook, who had to be taken to the asylum, leaving an infant four months old. This gift three years ago made a sorrowing husband, Bro. B. J. Cook. The sister was a most faithful member of the church, called for the Lord's work, and was anointed, and at the close of the services sang beautifully. Brethren, pray for the sister and her family.—Mrs. Lucinda and Eliza Switzer, Carthage, Mo., Jan. 6.

Denver, Colo.—The members of this place rendered their Christmas program to a large and attentive audience. The program was carefully selected and rendered, and it not only proved a interesting, but beneficial to all. Those attending the Christian Workers' Band rendered a most inspiring program. Our new superintendent, and lady assistant were met with we celebrate. Truly, "the harvest is great, but the laborers are few." Who will respond to the call of the harvest for more consecrated workers!—A. G. Rust, 1131 South Pearl St., Denver, Colo., Jan. 3.

White Oak.—Our series of meetings was held by Eld. Jesse D. Garst, of Dayton, Ohio. He faithfully expounded the Word of God to a very attentive audience. He delivered several sermons, beginning Dec. 15, and closing Jan. 1. He also held a meeting at the home of our aged sister, Fannie Landess, who is nearing the eightieth milestone, and could not attend services at the church. Our Sunday-school was very well attended and three reclaimed. Others are near the kingdom. Our Sunday-school is planning during the year with Sister Landess at the helm.—E. C. Davidson, Lynchburg, Ohio, Jan. 3.

Butts Valley church has just passed through a very refreshing series of meetings, conducted by Bro. Jesse Overholtzer, of Princeton, Cal. The meetings continued three weeks. Seventy only one was made willing publicly to accept the whole Gospel, we feel that many more were convicted of their duty. Our meetings closed with a love feast on the evening of Jan. 1.—H. W. Allen, Macdoel, Cal., Jan. 2.

Mexico.—Our church met in council Dec. 25, Isabiji presided. Two letters were granted. We decided to begin a series of meetings Jan. 1, and to hold cottage prayer meetings the week before. Bro. L. A. Miller is to conduct the meetings.—Leona Ross, 2105 Avenue D, Kearney, Nebr., Jan. 6.

Wonargo.—Our series of meetings began Dec. 25, over the Curryville house, beginning Dec. 25 and closing Jan. 1. Bro. A. B. Miller did the preaching. He did his first effort in a series of meetings. Considering the bad weather, much for the cause. Attendance and interest very good. One was received into the church by baptism, and one was reclaimed.—D. S. Stayer, R. D. 3, Woodbury, Pa., Jan. 3.

Spring Run congregation met in council Dec. 31, at the Pine Glen church, with Eld. J. C. Swigart presiding. Three letters of membership were granted. It was decided to hold a series of meetings at the Pine Glen church during the month of May, closing with a love feast.—Minnie M. Bell, Mastland Farm, Pa., Jan. 6.

Long Beach.—Dec. 11 Bro. William Lampin commenced a series of meetings for us. He preached the Word with power until Jan. 1, when he closed his labors here to go to another field. The truth was much built up in the church, and near the kingdom. Dec. 31 we held our love feast, which was well attended. Twelve were received into the church, seven members have lately moved into our midst, and we are ready to welcome them. Our church is also starting out (Sister Glick takes a minister), and his family, from Fruita, Colo., also other families.—Mrs. Marie Hoover, Long Beach, Wash.

Silver Creek.—During the year 1910 our church received by baptism thirteen; by letter, six; restored to fellowship, two. One died, two gave letters in which to unite, two letters of membership, fifteen; total membership to Jan. 1, 1911, is 150. Our present ministerial force is the second degree and sixteen deacons.—Noah Long, Sr., Pioneer, Ohio, Jan. 5.

AROUND THE WORLD

Closing of Postoffices on Sunday.

Notwithstanding the constantly-reiterated declaration that it is impossible to close a postoffice in a large city on the Lord's Day, Detroit, a city with nearly a half million inhabitants, has successfully closed its postoffice on Sunday, thus giving a much needed rest day to the employés. It is asserted that there has been no inconvenience whatever from the innovation, and it now looks as if the establishment of a national law, enforcing a similar Sunday closing law upon all cities and towns, might be perfectly feasible. Such an enactment would go a long way towards a better observance of the Lord's Day in general,—a matter in which there is room for considerable improvement.

Troublous Times for Christian Scientists.

From present reports it seems that the disciples of the late Mrs. Eddy are not to have the smooth sailing that was anticipated. While the founder of the cult was still living, her strong personality and leadership were amply able to direct the destinies of the body, but since her departure the ranks of her followers are torn by dissensions, spiritual as well as material in character. One of the best-known "Scientists," Mrs. Augusta E. Stetson, who aspires to supreme leadership, is coming out with declarations savoring strongly of blasphemy. Whether the rank and file of the Christian Science cult will fall in with the would-be leader, or whether there will be a sharply-drawn division and ultimate dissolution, only time can tell. In the final day of reckoning, Christian Science, as lived by its exponents, will stand or fall by the verdict of the Impartial Judge.

Further Progress in China.

Any one conversant with the pernicious influence of lotteries in China will truly rejoice that by imperial enactment they are now absolutely forbidden. The general introduction of newspapers has done much in the enlightenment of the people on this and other important questions. It is largely due to the influence of the press that education of the masses is to be made compulsory throughout the empire. The Chinese people are learning the important fact that knowledge is power, and are sparing no effort to make it available for themselves. Most encouraging is the fact that Chinese officials are openly espousing the cause of Christianity by a sanction of medical missions, hospitals, and mission schools. Such endorsement will have great weight with the mass of the people, and lead them to an intelligent investigation of Christianity and its claims.

More Church Activity Needed.

We notice, in our exchanges, the universal plaint, "The theaters are full and the churches empty," and it is well, perhaps, to face the question in its various bearings. According to a recent statement "the modern theater spends more money to advertise one evening's entertainment than the average church spends in a year, in the announcement of its services." Then, too, the theater management has "the single aim of doing its utmost to get and hold audiences, to a degree which would be heroic in a worthier cause." We wonder what would be the result, if every congregation of the Church of the Brethren should display a similar zeal and earnestness in attracting people to our services as is exercised by the world in its theatrical enterprises. There would surely be something accomplished, for the story of "Christ and him crucified" still has power to "draw all men unto him."

Brains Versus Brawn.

Is it really true, that, in this enlightened country of ours, the material gains of bodily labor are more highly esteemed than the intellectual development of immortal minds? Dr. Booker T. Washington, in a recent reference to the scant support of negro schools in the "Black Belt" of Alabama, declares that there are communities where teachers are paid but $15 to $17 per month for a school year of only three or four months, while able-bodied negro convicts are farmed out for as high as $46 per month. He deplores that such a condition should be allowed to exist, and points out the serious consequences sure to follow. And what Mr. Washington says about Alabama is likely true of equally deplorable conditions elsewhere. When it comes to a choice between financial gain and intellectual or spiritual attainments, many cling to the fleeting baubles of this world, though they "lose their own souls."

Living Fountains for Deserts.

Many of the deserts and arid public lands of the United States have hidden springs, streams and water holes that might, by judicious efforts, be made available for the weary traveler, if located, developed and protected. Hereafter, by means of guide posts, at proper places and intervals, the traveler is to be fully informed as to his way across the trackless deserts of the West, and the nearest available supply of water,—according to recently-proposed plans of our Government. It is thought that many lives might be saved by this wise provision. No less important, however, is it that every Christian, in this broad land of ours, be a guide to the many perishing ones in search of the Living Water, which alone can quench the thirst of immortal souls.

Discoveries at Samaria.

The excavations at Samaria, carried on under the auspices of Harvard University by means of the special gifts of Mr. Schiff, are to be continued for some years longer. Samaria, the city founded by King Omri, was the old-time capital of the Kingdom of Israel. It was situated thirty miles north of Jerusalem and about six miles northwest of Schechem. Ahab was its first strong king and most of the recent discoveries pertain to the idolatrous practices of his time. The fragments of pottery emphatically declare the prevalence of Baal worship during Ahab's reign, and amply confirm the Bible record,—strongly depicting the low spiritual life of the people of Israel at the time when their king and his still more wicked wife, Jezebel, "caused the people to sin."

Italy Taking a Stand for Peace.

Italy is apparently the first European nation to cooperate with the United States in a practical stand for the furtherance of Peace Foundations, as described by Andrew Carnegie, as referred to in these columns several weeks ago. United States Ambassador, Leishman, has been notified that Italy is very much in favor of the peace movement, and is ready to enter into an agreement with the other nations, by which there will not only be amicable adjustment of possible differences, but also a gradual disarmament. Italy's proposition is practical as well as highly commendable in every way. The only way to usher in the reign of peace,—that golden age so eloquently described by the prophet Isaiah,—is to talk peace, and seek to bring it about in every possible way and manner.

Eliot's "Religion of the Future."

Chas. W. Eliot, the eminent Harvard professor, will be remembered by many because of his "five-foot book shelf," on which "the Bible was conspicuous by its absence." In a recent lecture he ignores Jesus Christ as a Mediator between God and man, disposes of Satan, and denies the supernatural manifestations of God's power as shown in the Bible. Referring to secret orders he says: "Millions of Americans find Masons, Odd Fellows and other fraternal orders at once their practical religion, and the satisfaction of their social needs. So far as these orders teach mutual regard and industrial cooperation, they make up the religion of the future." This may be "the Gospel according to Prof. Eliot," and pleasing to those affiliated with secrecy, but it is not "the faith which was once delivered unto the saints."

When Silence Is Golden.

That, undoubtedly, there are times and places which make it highly advisable to weigh well the words spoken, was brought out in the recent incident connected with the London visit of Commander Sims, of the American navy. While attending a dinner, given in honor of the United States officer, it was said that "America would give its last dollar and its last drop of blood, if Britain were ever seriously threatened." This unfortunate remark aroused considerable feeling in some of the other nations of Europe, and President Taft considered it of sufficient moment to administer a public reprimand, laying down the sound rule that American naval officers "are under special obligations to see to it that they do or say shall not embarrass their Government in its foreign relations." It is the commonly-accepted function of our naval officers to carry to all nations the good will of the United States, thus being harbingers of peace rather than stirring up animosity by unguarded expressions. The incident however affords the basis for a very fine lesson spiritually. As members of the church of God we are representatives of the King of kings, and it is expected of us that we "walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called." This implies great care in what we say lest, by unguarded expressions and unbecoming language, we dishonor the King whom we claim to serve,—a lesson that most of us do well to ponder seriously.

Prohibition in North Carolina.

Most dire consequences to the prosperity of a State are invariably predicted by the advocates of the liquor traffic, and sometimes they glibly quote "supposed" facts and figures to bolster up their claims. It is truly refreshing, therefore, to note the testimony of Governor Kitchen, of North Carolina, who, in his annual message, gives this testimony to the value of well-enforced prohibition in his State: "Business has experienced increased rather than decreased prosperity. Morality, industry and frugality have increased, and politics and government have been, to a great extent, relieved of one of their most corrupting influences." These are words that may be depended upon, and one can not help but wish that more of our States could tell the same story. However, as we "abound in diligence," in the good work of temperance promotion, the glorious fruition may, in the Lord's own good time, be realized.

The Appeal of the Missionaries.

While the death knell of the cigarette has been sounded in America, and State after State is prohibiting its manufacture, it is deplorable indeed that the insatiable greed of commercialism should attempt to fasten the evil practice upon the unsuspecting people of China. Promoters of the cigarette business are freely distributing samples of their goods, and the people are only too ready to accept the free gift, not realizing how the fatal fangs of appetite will eventually bind them for all time. The missionaries are crying out for help against the invasion of the cigarette, and certainly it is to the shame of civilized nations that any one should be so vile and mercenary as to inflict, upon the Chinese people, an evil as bad, almost, as the opium curse. Surely, the love of money is "a temptation and a snare" to many, ruining not only themselves but those whom, for a few paltry dollars, they lead into evil habits, diametrically opposed to all good influences.

Age Limit for Ministers Not Practicable.

At a recent meeting of the Presbyterian Synod of Pennsylvania a suggestion was made that ministers be retired at the age of sixty, but was promptly and energetically resented by the ministers in attendance. There may have been a time when sixty years was the limit of ministerial usefulness, but that time is not now. In all religious bodies—and our own is no exception,—some of the strongest ministers, in mental powers and effectiveness, have attained their three score years, and are still vigorous and efficient exponents of the Gospel. The Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph suggests that "it would be unwise to fix an arbitrary limit for the ending of pulpit activity. Those who make such a plea probably think that young men only are now wanted in the pulpit. They should remember that a large part of the congregation still reverences the men of long experience, the saint of the silver crown, to whom men and women look for safe guidance."

India and the Opium Question.

It is a well-known fact that most of the opium produced in India is exported to China under the terms of an agreement, forced upon the Celestial Empire by England at the point of the bayonet, in 1842. Since then the annual export of the drug has varied from $25,000,000 to $35,000,000 per year, the net revenue having grown from $11,000,000 to $23,000,000 annually. As, however, the Chinese Government is now making strenuous efforts to curtail the importation of opium, as much as according to the stipulations of the treaty, it is permitted to do,—with the ultimate aim of entire suppression,—England faces an economic problem of no little magnitude in its Indian dependency. Something must be found to take the place of the highly lucrative opium as a revenue producer. It is very much like some other grave economic conditions that are a puzzle to the statesmen of today. However, as long as periodic famines are threatening India, it would seem to be the part of wisdom for England to encourage, more and more, the cultivation of grain and other food crops on the land now used for the cultivation of the poppy plant. In that way India's real prosperity might be far greater, in course of time, than it now is. A threefold blessing would be the result of such a policy: China would be well rid of a noxious drug, India's millions would be more amply supplied with the necessaries of life, and,—best of all,—the blessing of God would attend such an act of general benefit to all concerned.

Rock of Ages.

BY JAS. A. SELL.

The following was inspired by the picture "Rock of Ages," presented to me by my beloved companion on my sixty-fifth birthday, Nov. 28, 1910.

"God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Eph. 4: 14).

When the curse of sin was resting,
On our lost and fallen race,
Not one ray of hope was gleaming,
God had veiled his smiling face.

But his love, so strong and tender,
Found a way to save the world,
On the cross, on Calvary's mountain,
Was this wondrous love unfurled.

Jesus Christ, our Lord and Savior,
Bled and died to set us free,
From his cross a light is beaming,
Shining o'er the earth and sea.

When the storms of time beat round us,
And our hearts begin to fail,
From the cross there beams a radiance,
From the home beyond the vail.

Come, O come, thou blessed Savior,
Where we linger at the cross,
Open still the cleansing fountain,
Purge us from all sinful dross.

May our faith in thee grow stronger,
As life's trials press us sore,
And when all our cares are ended,
We will serve and praise thee more!

The Call to the Christian Ministry.

BY JOHN W. WAYLAND.

And Jesus, walking by the sea of Galilee, saw two brethren, Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea: for they were fishers.

And he saith unto them, Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men.

And they straightway left their nets, and followed him.

And going on from thence, he saw other two brethren, James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, in a ship with Zebedee their father, mending their nets: and he called them.

And they immediately left the ship and their father, and followed him.—Matt. 4: 18-22.

THIS was a call to the Christian ministry,—a personal call by Christ, the Founder of the Christian church. These men were not only called by Christ, but they were also called to him. "Follow me," he said. Moreover, they were called to work,—to service: "I will make you fishers of men," was his declaration to them.

We do not believe that Christ was compelled to have these men, or any other men, for that matter. He, being God as well as man, might have devised ways and means for saving the world some other way; but he chose "the foolishness of preaching," and he ordained men and women as his messengers. This is God's way. He always has employed men to reach other men. When God's hand touches us, it is clothed in the flesh of humanity; when his voice falls upon our ears, it is usually as a human voice. Christ has revealed no plan for saving the world except the plan that men and women, under Divine Guidance must carry out.

Please observe that this call to service, to the Christian ministry, was given only to those who had already given evidence of their faith in Jesus. At least two of these four, possibly three or all of them, as we learn from the first chapter of John's Gospel, had become disciples of Jesus some months before, soon after he began his public ministry in Judea. They had become disciples, but not preachers at first: not even constant associates or companions, it would appear; for here we find them at home, engaged in their ordinary business of fishing on the Sea of Galilee. But now, having been believers, disciples, for nearly a year, perhaps, and having given proof of trustworthiness as well as of a greater or less measure of ability and capacity for spiritual work, they are called to follow the Master constantly.

These men, when called, obeyed, and obeyed promptly. They left their other work. They gave up their ordinary work to engage in a work that was extraordinary. They left their families—not in the sense of neglecting or abandoning them; but they went into a work that took them into the homes of other persons rather into their own. The world does not come to the preacher's house. He has to go out of his house, seeking the world. These four men, called by the shores of Galilee, not only left their own work, they took up Christ's work; they left their homes to follow one who on this earth was confessedly homeless. They went with Jesus, and were trained by him.

We are accustomed to think of these apostles of Christ as unlearned and ignorant men. I fear we often overdraw that side of their character,—this notion of them. They were not, as we might say, graduates of the schools like Paul was; but they were not illiterate. The Jews have always been concerned about the education of their children. In the period to which we refer it was the custom to send every child to school for regular instruction, beginning at the age of five or six. If the training of any was neglected it was not that of the sons of a family, we may be pretty certain. Schools were common throughout Palestine,—higher schools as well as primary schools. There were schools in connection with the synagogues, as well as in houses built for school purposes. It was deemed unlawful for a Jew to live in a place where there was no school.

Two languages, Greek and a form of Hebrew, were in common use in Palestine in the time of Christ; and Peter and John have given to the world seven masterpieces written in Greek, the greatest literary language known. Such men can hardly be termed illiterate; much less ignorant. Many persons whom the rabbis and their disciples might have styled unlearned, we might fairly class as pretty well educated.

Then we often overlook another fact. These men were with Christ a couple of years, and were deliberately trained by him. They were his disciples,—his pupils. Two years or more in the school of Christ! Think of it! Two years or more at the feet of the foremost Teacher of all this world. Let no man justify willful neglect of education by pointing to any of the Twelve. Justification of an untrained ministry must be sought outside of the personally-selected disciples of Christ.

After Peter, Andrew, James, John, and a number of others had been constant followers of the Master for some time, they were elevated to another stage of service; they were promoted, as we should say, in the schools. See Luke 6: 13-16, etc. First they had become believers—disciples—of their own voluntary choice. Next Christ chose them to be ministers, and they became constant followers and attendants upon him; finally, twelve of them are chosen to a higher and closer circle, and are named apostles. An apostle is a messenger—"one sent," bearing a message. First believers, next ministerial students; finally apostles—itinerant preachers, clothed with a fair measure of authority and power. See Mark 3: 14, 15.

Having gone out upon their missionary tours, and having returned to the Master, the apostles were given further instruction by him upon the basis of their experience and observation. See Mark 6: 30-32; Luke 9: 10. They were not only given further instruction and training, but they were also made the witnesses of his final sufferings and triumphs upon earth, and of his glorious ascension to heaven. Then they became apostles in the fullest sense of the term: They were sent out, guided by the Holy Spirit, into all the world, to carry on their Master's work.

To sum up: These were common men, though not necessarily poor men or illiterate men. They were young men, full of vigor and enthusiasm. They were rough men—turbulent and passionate—rock men and sons of thunder, some of them. They were strong men, full of powers and capacities; strong physically—they were sailors and fishers; strong in intellect, in ambition, in soul power, in human feeling and experience. They were called from the ordinary fishing business to become fishers of men. "They were to catch men, not as the huntsman catches his prey, by driving it away before him, and striking it down in death, but as the fisherman does his, by drawing it to him, and taking it alive."

Eulogizing the Deceased.

BY D. M. ADAMS.

CONDUCTING funeral rites and solemnities may well be considered one of the most difficult and burdensome duties the pastor is called upon to perform. This is owing to the frequent demands made upon him, and the diversity of the lives of those whose obsequies he is called upon to conduct.

In my own experience it has frequently occurred that the friends of the deceased requested me to use a certain text as a basis for the funeral sermon. This request is sometimes made, notwithstanding the text suggested is by no means applicable to the manner of life lived by the deceased. It is true, they did not ask to have the deceased eulogized, but that such was their desire was plainly implied by the nature of the text selected.

Now no minister should be expected to deliver an encomiastic address on the funeral occasion of one whose life is incongruous with Christianity. He should not be expected to make out a commendable case in a funeral sermon. It is not within the province of him whose chief business it is vehemently and unreservedly to denounce sin, lift up the risen Christ, and magnify the Christ-life. The case ought to have been made out by the deceased and ready for the occasion. It should have been made out by living an exemplary Christian life,—a life lived to the honor and glory of God. Every person should get his own case ready for his funeral service. Have the vouchers, the witnesses, the certifications, the pleadings ready for the occasion, so that the verdict may be unanimous and instant: "A faithful Christian gone to heaven."

Early in his ministry Dr. Lyman Abbott resolved that he would not profess religion for a man after death who had never professed it for himself when living. No man ever made a more rational and scriptural resolution.

The orthodox Christian minister who ignores the life lived by the person whose mortal remains lie within the casket, and endeavors to find a title for him to "a mansion in the skies," even though he never gave any scriptural evidence of being transformed by the Word of God, takes back in the particular what he preached in the general.

To eulogize a life spent in sin is a travesty on the Gospel, and only serves to appease the conscience of the ungodly, encourage neglect of religion, and bolster up the hopes of those who are standing upon the sinking sands of atheism and infidelity. Even though the deceased lived a moral life, the minister must be careful lest he lay a foundation made of wood, hay or stubble, upon which many of his auditors will be disposed to build their hopes for eternal life. He dare not paint as light that which is dark. He must not cry "peace" where there is no peace. Sin is condemned by the Scripture under any and every circumstance. Without Jesus there is no salvation, either in life, or in death, or in the final judgment; no salvation for the deceased, none for the bereaved. The fact that the departed died unconverted dare not be ignored, even for the sake of those who have come out to hear. It would place upon the preacher the stigma of a coward, and put him on a level with the false prophet.

Thus the funeral sermon is essentially a testimony for Christ, and a public declaration of the glorified and blissful state of the redeemed beyond this vale of tears. Such a declaration on the day of interment exerts a mighty influence upon the heart not yet completely hardened by sin. There is no more opportune time to impress men and women with the importance of salvation in Christ, the Redeemer of a sinful world. At such a time the hardest heart is more or less susceptible, and open to conviction.

Now I do not mean, by what has already been said, that the dark spots in the life of the deceased shall be dwelt upon or even mentioned. If nothing good whatever can be said about the deceased (indeed such must have been a most desperate case), then it is best to make the address a general one,—that is to speak of the destroying influences of sin, the necessity of being born again, and the importance of living a life compatible with the teaching of the Blessed Master. Those present will readily read between the lines, and make the proper application of the sermon. If the deceased was a cold, inactive member of the church, there is nothing to be said except that he was a professor of Christianity. If he was very bad, the least said is the soonest mended. Let the life of the deceased be what it may, it is the minister's business to direct his hearers to the "one thing needful."

The Problem of the Country.

BY JOHN R. SNYDER.

"And he said unto them, The harvest truly is great but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he send forth laborers into his harvest" (Luke 10: 2).

In a previous article we spoke of the city's challenge to the church. In it we noted the rapid growth of the city, both in population and moral decline. And the very same cause that brings the city to the forefront, as a challenge to the church, presents another,—the problem of the country. The fact that the rural districts are losing their best young men and women by the onward rush toward the city, has placed the country church in a perilous condition.

For many years this phase of the question did not seriously affect the Church of the Brethren. Our membership was practically all in the rural districts and in the small villages. Churches in the city were rare enough to be almost a curiosity. Our ministerial register then showed but few ministers living in the cities. Churches and ministers in cities could be counted on the fingers of the hand. But in the country it was different. Churches were manned by from one to half a dozen ministers. On love feast occasions it was not unusual to see from 15 to 25 ministers present.

But now things have changed somewhat. Our strength still lies in the country and our largest congregations are still to be found there, and it is from them that the main support comes. But conditions are different, in many respects. Emigration and other causes have weakened many of the churches in numbers and ministerial help. The ministry of several years ago, effective and active in its day, is no longer the force that it once was. The solution of the ministerial problem has not yet been reached in our denomination. The demand for active ministers, who can devote their entire time to pastoral duties, is not as large as the demand, and the rural church suffers. It is not unusual now, on love feast occasions, to scarcely have ministerial help sufficient to officiate at the service. This is partly due to the scarcity of active ministers and partly because of changed conditions.

The church has shown gradual prosperity during the past decade. But notwithstanding this, there are few country churches in the older States that will show a net gain over five years ago. Many of them will show serious losses. This is not altogether a bad sign, for many have gone out from the mother church to build up new congregations in new territory, extending the influence and widening the field of the church, but it has brought a problem that must be solved or the church will suffer.

In the Northwestern District of Ohio there are at least ten churches and missions without active pastors or ministers, and the Mission Board has been compelled to issue an urgent call for help. To all appearances there is little hope for relief from within, and aid must come from without. That is, these churches must be helped by the Mission Board or some other method. In the District there are plenty of ministers to supply each church with a pastor, but they are not equally distributed or other causes interfere. Evidently there must be a change in our method of ministerial distribution if the church is to prosper.

We do not know that we have a solution. We can only offer a suggestion. Let some plan be evolved whereby two or three churches, not too far apart, may unite and support, or partially so, a pastor. We have in mind several places where such a course might be arranged to advantage. Naturally it might not be possible to have a preaching service each Lord's Day, but a Sunday-school should be maintained to train workers, keep up the interest and hold the congregation. Such a plan, if carried into execution, would go far to solve the problem of the country church, too weak to support a pastor in itself. At the same time it would keep the fire burning at the congregational altar, and build up the church from within and without. It might be well for Mission Boards to experiment a little along this line, in the hope of solving the problems which now so seriously confront them. This is the method pursued by the Methodists, Episcopalians, United Brethren and other denominations, who organize on a "circuit" basis. They are holding their own in the rural districts to a larger degree than any other of the larger denominations which have come to our notice.

In congregations which are strong enough, a small piece of land might be secured and turned over for the use of the pastor. From this he could, to a certain extent, solve the problem of support, and at the same time have time to devote to his pastoral duties. As many of our ministers come from the farms, they are in a position to make the most of such an arrangement, and it is now being carried out with signal success at many places.

Despite our growth in the cities, and the trend toward the city churches, the main strength of the Church of the Brethren is in the country, and will so remain. The very form of our church government and methods of work find their most signal success in the country districts. We dare not neglect the country church if we would prosper. It is our "tower of strength," our fortress. From it have come our strong elders, our faithful missionaries and our Sunday-schools workers. Our college teachers had their first training in the country schools, and country students fill our colleges.

The success of the country church is the hope of city missions. The "challenge of the city" must largely be answered by a response from the rural congregation. Not until we have, in a measure at least, solved the problem of the rural church, will the problem of the city be solved. The two are not alike, yet bound together. We must not disorganize the weak churches, but by diligent effort build them up.

As the Master looked over the fields of Samaria and saw them "white unto harvest," so may we look over the fields about us. Brethren, we must be up and doing! Let us pray diligently the "Lord of the harvest" that he will send forth laborers into our country districts, to build up the weak churches and organize new ones. Our hope for future prosperity is in the rural community and if this hope comes to full fruition we must awaken to the opportunity, and shoulder the responsibility.

Time.

BY ELSIE P. STINNETTE.

"Behold, I come quickly and my reward is with me, to render to each according as his work is."—The Master.

Life bears us on like the stream of a mighty river. Our boat, at first, glides down a narrow channel. We note the playful murmuring of the little brook and the winding of its grassy border. The great trees shed their leaves and blossoms over our young heads; the tiny flowers on the brink seem to offer themselves to our young hands. We are happy in hope and even grasp eagerly at the beauties around us, but the stream hurries on and still our hands are empty.

Ah! how swiftly, down the stream, we seem to glide! At first slowly, then faster and faster, and soon,—nearly too late,—we begin to realize how fast time is flying and how little we are accomplishing. Each moment is holy, for each moment God sends forth a human soul, and back to him, each moment, some wandering soul returns home.

All days seem alike to us. Each day comes with its own opportunities, its own call to duty and privileges holding out radiant gifts. Soon the day is gone, never to return. Other days, as bright, may come and we let them pass with all their golden opportunities. Let us awake to our duty in life!

As I look about me, in this large city, and see the conditions as they are and the many thousand souls going down, down to ruin, my heart cries out—

"To the work, to the work, we are servants of God, Let us follow the path that the Master has trod."

Just as we are borne along irresistibly in the onward flight of the orbit on which we live, just so are we speeding along on the wings of time. The flowers fade, man grows old and dies, but time writes no wrinkles on eternity's brow.

I often wonder, if the Lord should come quickly, would he find our lamps all trimmed and burning? I am afraid not. On the other hand, the man who improves his time, and works, let him ask no other blessedness. He has a work, a life purpose. Labor is life!

When a lady once asked Turner, the celebrated English painter, what his secret of success was, he replied: "I have no secret, madam, but hard work." This is the secret that many never learn. Labor is the genius which changes the world from ugliness to beauty.

Let us lose no more of the precious time that God gives us. In putting on the armor do not forget that the Sword of the Spirit is the Word of God. Instead of skimming over acres of truth, dig deep into the most practical passages. Study carefully the twenty-fifth Psalm, and the eighth and twelfth chapters of Romans. By reading the whole Epistle of James we learn how Christians ought to do.

If we are going to be successful we must take our stand for God, and let it be known that we are on the Lord's side.

Life is uncertain. Why put off one little opportunity of doing good? We are here today and gone tomorrow. A little while ago we were not here,—not one of us. A little while hence we shall be here no longer. Here today and gone tomorrow!

It is hard for us to force ourselves to do little things for others, to conquer our wish for solitude and cheer and comfort those who are depending upon us. It is hard to surrender our pride, and do good here and there, when we would rather do big things, but in the new commandment we have that which will make all things easy if we but obey. "Love one another as I have loved you." Yes, love, the fruit of the Spirit, is all-important. "He doeth much who loveth much." When we love as Christ desires us to love, we will be ready to work, and waste no time. Life is made up of time. Let us not squander a moment of it!

How Large a Mission Work Can the Brethren Church Support?

BY A. W. ROSS.

We look about us and see the more popular churches everywhere supplying large means to mighty forces and organizations for the conversion of the world. Seeing this, and then looking at our own feeble efforts and smallness of numbers, we are liable to get the idea that while we should do something, yet we can never hope to do much. In humble obedience to our Lord's command, we go forth into the heathen darkness, feeling that when we have done a little we may have done our part, for, surely, to whom much has been given, from them much is expected,—that the great responsibility of converting the world rests on the Methodists, the Presbyterians, the Baptists, the Congregationalists, etc.

True, a man's duty is not measured by what he has not, but there is no law on earth or in heaven which will excuse a man for not developing the latent powers within him, and how often it is found that the development of the latter makes giants from what before were the "laughing stock" of their communities.

Generally, the greatest service to mankind has not been done by men of the most wealth or even men of the highest learning. Even many who gave little promise of ever being known outside their own country have swayed nations, while the world looked on amazed. Great movements had their small beginnings, and few of them, at the time, showed little sign of ever becoming the world powers they are today.

Who would have thought that the little peninsula of Greece would one day be the master of the then known world, and give a universal and time-honored language? Who would have dreamed that the solitary city, Rome, would one day be the mighty empire of a few centuries later? Who, at the time, would have dared contemplate that heathen Britain would one day be "Mistress of the Seas" and that the sun would never set on her vast domains? Later, who would have dared to think that the weak, struggling colonies of America would one day stretch from sea to sea, and shape the policies of two hemispheres?

Again; who would have dreamed that the tall, lank, homely, awkward boy of the Kentucky log cabin would one day be the honored President of the United States and the emancipator of the negroes? Who would have anticipated that the Roosevelt of the western prairies of thirty years ago, would today be the one man whom all nations seek to honor? Who could have seen in the "consecrated cobbler," Carey, the translator of the Bible into more than thirty Indian languages? Who could have prophesied other than the prophets of God, that the Babe of Bethlehem would one day be King of kings and Lord of lords, the Savior of the world? Who would have thought that the weak, persecuted, stigmatized Christianity of 2,000 years ago would today be the recognized power in all the world for the regeneration of both individual and state?

The great and abiding things of the world have come through the only fundamental law, as laid down by our Lord and Master, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone," and, Brethren, in the light of history we have as much chance for becoming a mighty factor in the world's redemption as any other people ever had, only we must remember that death precedes life and growth.

One of the smallest churches in the world is the Moravian church, but in consecration to the cause of redeeming the heathen, it leads the world. She has missions scattered world-wide and has taken the very hardest fields. Today her membership abroad is two and a half times her home membership, with a yearly increase of 1,500 converts. Her home membership of less than 40,000 is represented on the field by 400 missionaries, or one missionary to less than one hundred members, and for the support of the work abroad her contributions reach the surprising sum of $425,000, or more than $10 per member.

Brethren, we should not be content with small efforts. I dare say that at this time we have the ability and the resources to do more than ten times what we are doing, and that our ability for future work will increase as we measure up to the extent of the powers within us. We have men and we have money, and the Holy Spirit will be only too glad to bless them to the salvation of a large part of the heathen world. It is not a question of paucity of resources or a failure on the part of God to do his part. It is rather a question of the consecration of these resources to the Lord's work.

If we would believe, give, go, and consecrate, as the Moravians are doing, we could have nine hundred missionaries on the field, and $900,000 annually to support the work. Visionary, fanatical sentiment, is it? Well, I believe much like a man I met in Colorado: "A thing that has been done once, can be done again." If the Moravians are doing it, why can't we?

Have they more Gospel than we have? Have they more abundant resources than we have? Have they any more right to expect the Lord's blessings than we have? No, Brethren, they are not all millionaires, not by any means. I dare say that we are able to give $10 per member if they are. To do so at once would hurt us a lot more than it does them,—make us grouchy, I fear. They give it praising God that they are found worthy to deny themselves for his sake, while we might call it home-breaking, unwarrantable sacrifice, and Gospel oppression.

Does $10 a head look too big? Then cut into two and make it $5, yielding an annual income of $450,000. Does it still impress you as being too exceedingly big? I dare say the Lord thinks it is mighty small rent on the millions he has invested for our fields, for our cattle, for our swine, for our fortunes and for our forces. Yes, he purchased all, even ourselves, and our boys and girls, with the blood of his own dear Son.

But why try to get so much when we are not able to raise even a fourth that much? The sum of $100,000 is a splendid ideal and why not be satisfied with that? But we are not talking so much about what we are doing, as about what we are able to do, for ability measures the extent of our obligation and duty. Beyond that the Lord does not require.

Let us get at the question through yet another comparison. In the Brotherhood are nearly 900 congregations with approximately 90,000 members. With an average capital stock of $1,000 per member we would have a grand total of $90,000,000 which, yielding six per cent interest, would bring in the handsome income of $5,400,000. And not for a moment should we think of giving the Lord of the harvest less than ten per cent of the income, so his share would be $540,000, as against the $75,000 we are now raising from all sources. But many of the members are not representatives of capital stock. Very well then. Cut off one-third for minors, and another one-third for wives and mothers, leaving 30,000 heads of families or representatives of capital stock. Give them $3,000 each, and you still have a grand total of $90,000,000 which should yield the Lord, as his humble share, upwards of $500,000.

Look at it whichever way we please, if we think a bit we find ourselves in a peculiar position, with respect to this question. And it will not do not to think. We must meet the issue in the light of truth. To plead that God will convert the heathen in his own good time, when he wants to, is most uncharitable to our Lord, and, indeed, only a step from infidelity. It will not do to excuse ourselves by saying that since the other churches are working at it so successfully, let them complete the job. If we say that, we must for sure add, "And let them hear the welcome plaudit of the Savior, 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant, forasmuch as ye have done it unto these the least of these, my brethren ye have done it unto me.'" If we say, "We are doing all we can, and how can we do more?" we are only making ourselves believe we are children, when the facts are we have been "grown ups" this good while already. We have the age. We have the experience. We know our duty. We know our opportunity. We know the Gospel.

Then, how large a mission work shall we support? Nothing short of mission work, well-supported, well-manned, well-disciplined, in many lands and to the fullest extent of our ability will discharge our obligation. Then may we begin to talk about gospel obedience and God's blessing upon the faithful. "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."

Be Not Discouraged.

BY C. D. HYLTON.

I FEEL very grateful for the two articles in GOSPEL MESSENGER No. 53, Vol. 49, "The Growth of Our Church" and "In the Balance," written, respectively, by Elders S. Z. Sharp and G. A. Shamberger.

A number of our zealous brethren are wondering over our slow progress and why our number should be so small as compared with other religious bodies.

It is a sad fact that our membership is not as large as it should be. Could we have held all of our own children for the church, together with those we have gathered from other sources, today we ought to be able to multiply our present number by one hundred.

Noah was not successful in saving the antediluvian world but he saved his own children. We ought to do at least that much.

The trouble is not with the principles of the Gospel, as accepted by the Church of the Brethren, but because of other causes, such as parental methods of child training, lack of harmony in the home, church factions, rivalry between elders, ministers and even the laity, as to who shall "wear the bell." These all have a detrimental effect on the growth of the church.

If our churches were properly organized in their work, and every man was attending to his work systematically, there would not be much chance for unpleasant friction.

Many of our children are lost to the church by parents moving into localities where they have no church privileges or associations for their children. This is a sad mistake, as many of our brethren have realized after it was too late. We should first look for a church home when we have children in our families, and let other things be secondary matters.

Build up strong churches; then work out. Ministers and other members, who have no children, or those whose children have grown up, can best afford to locate in new fields; then let the parents with children follow.

A study of our past church history will be helpful to drive away discouragement.

"The Growth of Our Church" and "In the Balance" will bear a second and third reading.

Let us labor and pray for more consecration and a deeper work of grace in our hearts, and leave the results with God.

On the Way to India.

BY IDA C. SHUMAKER.

ON Saturday, Nov. 5, our cabman came to our hotel at Liverpool, and we were off to the steamer City of Athens, which was to be our home till Nov. 28. We crossed the Mersey River and boarded our boat at Birkenhead. We were to leave between five and six o'clock P. M., but did not leave till twelve o'clock, so we had ample time to view our new home and become acquainted with our new neighbors. One finds so many interesting people, especially when you make it a point to study human nature and to be a close observer. During a long sea voyage you have a splendid opportunity to note the traits of character, and can find many interesting things to place in the pigeon holes of memory.

We all retired early, and when we awoke, next morning, we found the sea very rough. The three days spent in the Bay of Biscay were hard days. Our ship was tossed to and fro upon the angry waves. An old seaman, who had been in the service for thirty years, said, "I have never seen the Bay so rough." The rain and storm made it impossible to be out on deck. In fact there were but two passengers who were able to leave their cabins. We could feel the effects of the storm in our cabins and could hear the rush of waters down the stairway into our companionways. The crew were kept busy trying to keep the water out of our cabins. No, we had no fears, for the eternal God was our refuge,—"a shelter in the time of storm." "He hath measured the waters in the hollow of his hand" (Isa. 40:12). Surely we could say, "A rock of refuge, Lord, thou art. Thy perfect peace bathes all my soul and quiets every fear." So, above the voices of many waters,—the mighty breakers of the sea,—we could hear his sweet voice saying, "Peace, be still." "Lo, I am with you always;" also Isa. 43:2 and 41:10.

On the morning of Nov. 9 a most glorious day burst upon us. Between five and six o'clock, that morning, we came within fifteen miles of the coast of Portugal.

At seven, next morning, we passed St. Vincent,—a noted point of interest, made all the more so since the Spanish-American war. All day we hoped to reach the Strait of Gibraltar before dark, but, owing to our delay in starting, we passed the "Rock" during the night. We were glad to have such a fine view of the snow-capped mountains of Spain the next morning.

Our second Sunday at sea was spent so differently from the first. We had Divine service in the morning, Sunday-school in the nursery at three P. M., and special praise service in the evening. All were very helpful; especially at the last preaching service we had on board, which Bro. Emmert conducted. Most of the missionaries on the boat were present and the message to us was soul-awakening, as well as a message of warning.

We came in sight of the great lighthouse at Port Said early in the morning of Nov. 17,—a day late because of the storm. We entered the harbor at 9 o'clock. Most steamers stop here for a short time to "coal the boat," or to await their turn to enter the Suez Canal. Since we were to remain at Port Said till 2: 30 P. M., some of us left the boat and went into the city to do shopping,—to study the place and the people.

Space forbids extended mention of our interesting stay at Port Said. At 3 P. M. our boat glided into the peaceful waters of the Suez Canal and for sixteen hours we had a voyage which was a rare treat. The weather here is usually very hot, but at the time we passed through it was ideal. To our right were waving palms and other trees, with grass and shrubbery,—all so fresh and green. Then, too, the many pretty block-houses, all along the way, added to the beauty of the scene.

Our Thanksgiving Day was a very quiet one. We had many things to be thankful for, and we enjoyed the praise service very much. Our communion with the Father was precious. It was so touching to hear Master Lloyd Emmert pray so earnestly for a poor, afflicted native man on the boat, who became insane and was fastened to the floor in his cabin.

On the morning of Nov. 28 we entered the harbor of Bombay. The tide was out, so we left the City of Athens and went ashore in a "tender." Our hearts were beating wildly, and tears of joy filled our eyes when we recognized the faces of Bro. Blough and Sister Kathryn Ziegler, who were awaiting our coming on shore. It was such a joy to travel the long ocean voyage in perfect safety and then to meet and greet the loved ones who were ready to welcome us to our new home. It called to mind our voyage over the ocean of time to eternity. What a joy to meet and greet the loved ones who have reached the other shore in safety, with Jesus as their faithful Pilot. They are now awaiting our arrival to the other shore!

We also had the privilege of meeting two of our native Christian boys. One could not help but feel like praising the Father for the gift of his dear Son, more than ever, as we looked into the faces of those Christian boys. What a change in the faces, even, of those who accept the Savior! It is so manifest here when you note those natives who are not Christians. Would to God that all had an opportunity to hear the message and then accept Jesus. Helpers are needed! Will you be one?

What a happy meeting we had as we arrived at the Temperance Hall! Still more joy was in store for us, for we were soon made aware of the fact that Bro. Enoch Eby and family had arrived. Then we heard the voice of Bro. A. W. Ross calling to us. How happy we were to meet and greet those of like precious faith! How we did enjoy the season of worship together! Bro. Eby's left for home in the evening and Bro. Ross the next morning. The rest of us left Bombay for Bulsar at 1: 30 P. M. The ride of six hours was a most pleasant one. Before we left the station at Grand Roads, we had a royal welcome tendered us. Some of our native Christians, living at Bombay, came into our compartment and greeted us so warmly! Then we were each given large bouquets of rare, fragrant flowers, and garlands were placed around our necks.

As our train pulled into Bulsar, we saw a scene which beggars description. To be understood and appreciated it must be witnessed and experienced. Never will that beautiful picture fade from memory. The home-leaving, with the prayers and parting blessings of the loved ones still upon us, we looked into a sea of earnest, joyous, expectant faces of the loved ones here. It was truly a feeling of joy and hope that swept over us. As the hearty salaams were given, many bouquets and garlands of the most beautiful and rare flowers were showered upon us by those who came to the train to escort us to the mission. How deeply we were moved!

On our way from the platform at the station to the carriages, we passed through two rows of our boys, carrying torches. They, too, gave us very many hearty salaams, and walked beside our carriages all the way. As we came to the church where a welcome service was tendered us, the boys lined up on both sides of the walk to the door of the church. As we entered we found the rest of the native Christian men and others. The native Christian women and girls, in charge of Sister Miller, sang sweetly. We were ushered to the front of our church where we were seated on chairs. The rest were seated on the floor, of course. After the singing ceased, we noted how all bowed their heads in reverence to God and prayed silently. A class of Senior boys came to the front and sang a hymn, composed by them for the occasion. This was followed by a hymn sung by a class of girls. Both bedecked us with more flowers. We were asked to speak to them. How they drank in the messages of the returned missionaries! It was a real joy to watch their bright faces. These addresses were followed by an appropriate address, and prayer by Bro. Blough, after which the entire audience arose and sang a hymn.

After the parting blessing we wended our way to the mission home, where the boys had come to render another selection, while we stood on the veranda of the bungalow. By this time our hearts were too full for speech. We could only send up a prayer of gratitude and praise to the Father, and ask him to bless this band of earnest Christian native workers and those faithful teachers who have, by the grace and power of God, made this possible. God bless them all, every one.

The Homeless.

BY J. HARMAN STOVER.

MUCH of my time is spent away from home. This may account for my sympathy for that large class of our fellow-beings who know nothing of the blessedness of a home welcome.

I walked home from church, some weeks ago, going along the railroad track. I met seven or eight men with blankets on their backs, who had walked from Klamath Falls, a distance of thirty miles. Asking me the distance to the next town, and its possible accommodations, I was led into a conversation with the men, who frankly gave the inside life of a man, obliged to "get a job where he can."

I have made a study of this class of unfortunates and know they did not exaggerate. In fact, I could have interjected, into the narrative, facts of a blessed home life, which, by comparison,—could they have been made to see it,—would have made it doubly painful to the homeless.

While many of these men become regular tramps, and more or less nondependable, the impositions practiced upon them by corporate, moneyed, industrial enterprises,—in conformity with the intensely selfish rules of modern business,—make them so.

The Weed Lumber Company has a pay roll of 1,600 men. They seemingly make every preparation for the accommodation of their men. They have many good men who remain with them,—usually the skilled workmen,—but the men of the homeless class do not fare so well. These do the common, unskilled work, board at the boarding house, pay the company's prices at the big store, drink the liquor sold in the same store and at other places, but find on pay day that their pay check has dwindled, in many cases, to three-tenths of the original wage amount.

The great Stanford University, of California, runs for its maintenance or profit, or both, the large vineyard and "winery,"—wine distillery,—at Vina, twenty miles of Chico. The result of this enterprise upon this class of men, and its influence upon the youth of the country, for a radius of twenty miles and more, is a disgrace to common humanity. The carousals seen there during the grape gathering and distilling season, are a disgrace to a low joint saloon. Much more so should they be to an institution supposedly moving only upon a plane of ideality.

Money paid to these poor unfortunates on Saturday evening finds its way back into the company's bank by the middle of the next week, because of the saloon suction policy. For while these men hire their time to the company, nine in ten, through the inveigling policy of the company, are entrapped into giving a mortgage on their appetites. Thus the sons of the wealthy and fortunate class are being educated at the cost of soul and body of the unfortunate laborer whose appetite has gotten the mastery over his judgment.

In witnessing these sad scenes, and contrasting them with the life of ease spent by these rich owners and stockholders, as they motor back and forth, "looking after their interests,"—not that of their brother's,—one is made to think that here is a real "juggernaut," operating in the twentieth century. As those large cars go flying in and out, back and forth, from Chico to Vina, imagination needs but little suggestion, to see ground to death, under the wheels of such a vicious system, the lives and souls of many men.

A reasonable estimate would say that for every graduate at Stanford, there are twenty souls started, or continued, on the way to confirmed inebriety.

In contemplating man's inhumanity to man, one is made to exclaim in the language of Dickens, "'Tis not on earth that heaven's justice ends."

Take the very best of these homeless men,—those who wish to do the best that can be done under the circumstances,—and even for them there is no home greeting as the day's labor closes. They have no interest in near loved ones, none to care for,—to feel responsible for. They are conscious that no one cares for them. Their living room is a dingy boarding house office, clouded with tobacco smoke. They come in contact with no refreshing, living "Waters of Life," but day and night they are in constant contact with the cesspools of low living. How can they rise much higher than their sordid level?

To those who do not have the price of a bed, no door is open but the saloon. There is nothing on earth to cheer and comfort them. Is it any wonder they become desperate?

There is no mission that really reaches and restores this unfortunate class. A few street-promenading missions save a few, but few, if any, that start men back to manhood and God, are so prepared as to hold and sustain them later on. What can be done for these, our brothers in the flesh?

There is no tie on earth so endearing,—none that bears such a sustaining relationship to the purity of youth or even manhood as that of the home.

The child who is blessed with a father, mother, and all the endearments of the old homestead, even though he be the head of a new home and near and dear ties, is always glad to visit and converse with his aged parents. He enjoys a lease of extraordinary favor, the blessings of which are indefinable.

Unfortunate, indeed, is the child, who, made homeless by the loss of parents, can look only into the face of strangers. While suffering an agony unknown to others it can never fully comprehend the loss. Few sadder wails are heard on earth than:

"Where is my wandering boy tonight?"

We need a tract that will reach the homeless,—one that will help him look up, not down; look forward, not back. I again ask, What can be done to save this great army of our unfortunate brothers?

Corning, Cal.

FROM PRAIRIE CITY, IOWA.

We had the pleasure of having Bro. E. E. Eshelman with us during the Holiday week, and with him have been reading the Divine Word of Truth. We were fed with the rich spiritual feast of salvation, which is the power of God to all who believe. We studied "The Old and New Covenant," "The Book of James," "Sunday-school," "Holy Spirit" and "Individual Responsibility." It was all a feast of good things, each lesson bearing to us some special benefit. His closing theme was Rom. 12: 1.

The fountains of the hearts were broken and thrilled by the earnest appeals of our dear brother. He brought many convincing proofs of the great necessity of presenting our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God. A new light was thrown on our lives, showing many neglected opportunities. Our individual responsibility was shown anew. Surely, there have been many crippled lives in the Master's service.

We agreed that our Bible School was better and did more good than a series of meetings. The last night of our meeting it was very cold, but those of us who braved the storm and were received a great blessing which will enable us to do more and better work for the Master.

Quite a number of our young people are attending Bethany Bible School. Bro. Bennie and Sister Buckingham, Bro. Irvin Buckingham and Sister Lova Brubaker have been there for some time. Bro. Eshelman, who was with us in December, 1910, also took a few more students with him,—Brother and Sister Earl Brubaker, and Brethren Charles Colyn and Roy Alexander. We miss them much in our work here. It leaves us fewer in number, but we will have to work the harder to do more and better work for Jesus. Jennie Alexander.

THE ROUND TABLE

The Lost Son Found.

BY EZRA FLORY.

MANY years ago, before there were railroads in Illinois, it was necessary for the people to haul their products to market in wagons. A certain farmer, who was also a preacher, sent his son, one day, with a load to Chicago. He waited a long time for the return of his son, and at last set out to find him. When he learned that his son had delivered the grain, he began to fear that he had been killed. Through a detective he ascertained that his son had been in a gambling den and lost all the money he had received, and then, in a vain hope to recover it again, he lost the team also.

Poor boy! He had fallen into the hands of thieves who had stripped him and then set him adrift. Because he was ashamed to return to his home, he disappeared.

Now, what was the father to do? Did he give up looking for the son? Would you have given up? No, how could he? He went from city to city, inquiring about his son and rehearsing what had happened. Wherever he went, he asked permission to preach, and then, at the conclusion of his sermon, he would tell that he had somewhere, wandering over the earth, a son; and he begged that if any of those present should see him they would tell him.

At last some one told him that his son was in California. Would the father go there for the wayward son? It was a far journey, through dangerous parts of the country, and no railroads. Yes, even there did this father go in quest of the wanderer. He went to San Francisco and announced that he would preach on a certain day at a certain place. Again, at the close of the sermon, he rehearsed the sad story of his boy. No one could tell him any news of him. But when the congregation had dispersed, he saw a young man remaining, and advancing to meet him. The father recognizing him ran to embrace his son without giving him time to make his desired confession. The father pardoned him and brought him home, full of joy and gladness.

But behold the sinner fleeing from God to escape the consequences of his sin! Yes, behold the grace and mercy of God following him up, to "seek and save that which was lost!"

The Significance of Pentecost.

BY PAUL MOHLER.

THE Day of Pentecost marks a great epoch in the history of Christianity. Its events rank in importance to the world with the birth, death, resurrection and ascension of our Lord.

Before leaving them, the Lord promised that the Holy Spirit should come to his disciples as a Comforter, as a Convictor of sinful men, and as a Power by which they should preach the Gospel to the ends of the earth, doing greater works than he himself had done. These promises were largely fulfilled on Pentecost. The Holy Spirit came upon them. It enabled them to preach the Gospel to men of all nationalities in Jerusalem. It convicted sinners, so that they were converted in greater numbers than had ever come to Christ himself. It came also on those who believed, insuring the continuance of its work among men. The great achievement of that day was but an earnest of the greater and wider work to follow.

Great promises had been made by God through the prophets, to be fulfilled by the Messiah. The Messiah came, strove mightily to win the world for God, but was himself rejected and crucified by the very people that should have been his most faithful followers. Were God's promises to be of no effect? If their fulfillment depended upon the EARTHLY ministry of Jesus Christ, they must have meant but little to the world at large. Christ must have other arrangements, or fail.

The Lord's further plan was to send the Holy Spirit to finish the work he had begun. The events of Pentecost prove positively that Christ is both able and willing to bring the world unto himself by this great Power he has given to the church. The church has but to use the power given to her today, to bring the world to God, and this is what Pentecost means to me.

Color Blindness.

BY JAMES A. SELL.

MEN who are engaged in work in which they have to depend upon signs and signals for directions, to know what to do, are required to undergo an examination to determine if they are color blind. As different colored lights or flags are displayed, to indicate danger or safety, it is all-important that the vision discriminates at a glance. If the danger color is mistaken for the one indicating safety, a serious consequence may result. Strange as it may seem, there is this defect or diversity in human vision, called "color blindness."

And what is true in this respect, in the physical domain, is also true in the moral world. There is a moral color blindness. There are signals of danger and safety in the moral as well as in the physical realm. Those who do not distinguish the colors or signals are in great danger of a smash-up. The very appearance of evil is to be avoided. Many people do not seem to know when a thing has the appearance of evil, and sometimes the evil appears to them to be the good. The Lord long ago pronounced a woe upon those who "call evil good and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter."

The apostle John speaks of a brother hater as one whose eyes are blinded with darkness, and Paul, in exhorting believers to exemplary lives, says they should not be as the Gentiles who, "having the understanding darkened, were alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them because of the blindness of their hearts."

Our Savior taught his people that the light of the body is the eye, that, when the eye is single the whole body is full of light, but when the eye is evil, the whole body is full of darkness.

The Posture in Prayer.

BY W. L. TERWILLEGER.

IT seems clear that while engaged in prayer, the kneeling posture should be observed when at all convenient or practicable to do so. It is the most humble posture. We should learn to kneel facing the minister who is praying audibly. This is in harmony with the Bible. Daniel of old prayed three times a day, his windows being open toward Jerusalem, the chosen city, where the altar of the Lord had been placed.

Our prayers should be earnest and sincere that they might ascend to God in one mighty volume of humble pleading for forgiveness of our sins and shortcomings, and for a continuance of his blessings. Let us consider the most consistent way to offer our prayers. I think we should always kneel with our face toward the one who leads in prayer. We ought not to turn our back to the one praying when we are in the house of God. God's house is a house of order. Would it look orderly for an audience to sit with their backs to the minister during his sermon? It certainly would not. While kneeling with the minister in prayer,—the most sacred part of the service,—why do some of us turn our backs to him? Some of us need a little training.

The Night Is Far Spent.

BY IDA M. HELM.

Do we hear the message? It is time to awake out of sleep, to cast off the works of darkness and put on the whole armor of light. If we are taking life easy, forgetting that there are any serious obligations to fulfill, and thinking that life is long, and that there will be plenty of time for us to think and work by and by, or that some one else will do the work, it is high time for us to shake off our sluggish stupor and awake to the solemn, weighty responsibilities that are resting upon us. Let everyone of us bestir ourselves to action, that there may be a great awakening all along the line! Let every one draw very near unto God, that in his strength we may work more earnestly as children of light! Then the work he would have us do will be accomplished. "Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem." The night is far spent; the day is at hand!

Just the Thing.

BY A. G. CROSSWHITE.

THE first thing that attracted my attention on picking up the MESSENGER this morning was a change on first page. Just the thing! nothing is too good for our people, and many have said that the first page alone is worth the subscription price.

The paragraphing under suitable headings is a welcome innovation, and will have a tendency to eliminate a sordid desire for secular newspaper information that has not been boiled down.

PRAYER MEETING

"Let Your Light So Shine."

Matt. 5: 16; Eph. 5: 8; 1 Thess. 5: 5, 6.

For Week Beginning Jan. 29, 1911.

1. Our Former Relationship.—"Ye were sometimes darkness." The kingdom of Satan is the reign of darkness (2 Cor. 4: 4). Its subjects are the children of disobedience, who love darkness because their deeds are evil (John 3: 19-21). Darkness and sin are intimately connected. The fruit of darkness is corruption and death,—the works of the flesh (Gal. 5: 19-21).

2. Our Present Relationship.—"But now are ye light in the Lord." God is the "Father of light" (James 1: 17). He is the Source of knowledge and light (2 Cor. 4: 6). Christ's life was the light of men (John 1: 4). Thus Christians, as children of light, reflect the True Light and are adorned by heaven-born gifts and graces. There is a transforming power (2 Cor. 3: 18), whose fruit is the fairest (Gal. 5: 22). The church, as an aggregation of light-bearers, becomes a mighty power for good (Philpp. 2: 13-15).

3. Activity in a Life of Light.—"Walk as children of light." We, who are of the light, should not hide our light under a bushel, but be awake to every opportunity. The waiting world is anxious to share the glorious gleam and glory of him who really shines for Christ. "Children of light," therefore, are: (1) "Imitators of God" (Eph. 5: 1). They can not hope to imitate God in his creative power, his wisdom, or perfection, but they can imitate him in righteous endeavor. (2) "Walk in love as Christ gave himself for us" (Eph. 5: 2). If animated by love, we do love's work, ever abiding near the Great Source (1 Cor. 13: 1-5). (3) "Walk in purity" (Eph. 5: 3-5). Pure in heart, our conduct is beyond reproach (1 Tim. 4:16).

4. The Proof of the Shining Life.—"Proving what is acceptable unto the Lord." Light means power,—it shines, it quickens into life, and makes fruitful. It is a wonderful thing, but no less wonderful is the Christian. Sent by Jesus as a light-bearer into the world of sin, he is to dispel its gloom (Rom. 13: 12).

HOME AND FAMILY

Voices from the Other Shore.

BY J. O. BARNHART.

Voices I hear o'er the river today,
Voices of loved ones that call me away.
Angelic spirits are calling home,
Saying, "Oh, weary one, weary one, come!
Out of earth's pain, sin and sorrow and night,
Into the regions of endless delight,
Oh, when I reach that bright, beautiful shore,
Temptation and trial can harm me no more.

There, with the ransomed, in robes of pure white,
We'll walk through the streets of that city of light,
Close by the river that from the throne flows,
And near whose bright waters the tree of life grows.
There we will drink of those waters so blest,
And beneath Elim's cool palms we gladly will rest.
Singing of him who the victory gave,
Wondrously loving and mighty to save.

Then, with saints standing around the white throne,
Looking into the face that makes glorious our own,"
With loud hallelujahs the heavens will ring,
Hallelujah! Hallelujah! to Jesus, our King!
Oh, as we roam o'er the heavenly plain,
And echo with rapture the wondrous-refrain,
The joy of the ransomed what mortal could tell,
Or such songs of praises on earth who could swell!

Come, then, bright spirits, and hear me away,
Over to regions of infinite day,
From this prison of clay to be free,
Over to glory, my Savior to see.
There, as I meet with the loved gone before,
Who are waiting and watching upon the bright shore,
With loud hallelujahs the portals will ring,
Hallelujah, hallelujah to Jesus our King.

Das Rheingold.

BY ELIZABETH D. ROSENBERGER.

WAGNER has given us the story of the Rheingold. The river Rhine flowed by summits of rock which were covered with gold. Alberich coveted the gold. The Rhine-daughters, who fancied that Alberich would never take the gold because he was in love with them, were soon undeceived, for he cursed love and snatched the gold. He was told that whoever shall forge a ring of this gold would have universal power, but whoever would obtain that power would have to renounce love. Later a struggle ensued between Alberich and Wotan for the possession of the ring, and Wotan was victorious. Infuriated with disappointment over his loss and rage at his defeat, Alberich pronounced a curse upon the gold, "May he who has it not, covet it with rage, and may he who has it, retain it with the anguish of fear." And so, with curse after curse, Alberich gave way to his conqueror.

Wotan knew that a curse rested upon the ring of gold but a long time elapsed before he was willing to give it up. In this story we have an illustration of the text, "The love of money is the root of evil." With the gleaming gold before him Alberich cared only for the gold. Forgotten was his love for the Rhine-maiden; he wanted only the gold. He was willing to renounce love forever and possess the power, obtainable only by the ring of gold. In our day the lure of gold is sufficient to make men sacrifice almost everything else to follow its quest. Love is the greatest thing in the world, but the glitter of gold blinds men to this truth. Like Alberich of the Rhine, they cease love and obtain gold. They brave the curse which comes with possession, "May he who has it, retain it with the anguish of fear." Nothing matters so the coffers are full.

"Wasted and all in rags his starved soul went
And opulently paupered he grew old.
And stood with loaded hands and heart forespent,
A beggar with a million bits of gold."

The curse of Alberich clings to it today. "May he who has it not, covet it with rage." There are men, and women too, who do covet the gold they have not, covet it so fiercely that they are unhappy and dissatisfied. And yet we can neither eat it nor take refuge in it from the cold. Why, then, are we so eager to possess it? Because it will buy us the things we desire, —food that we can eat, clothes that we can wear, a house to live in, and things that we enjoy. In fact, gold will buy nearly everything. Yes! Things! but only things will it buy. And there are other and more important values than things. Money is often said to be power but it is not. It is only power as a hammer or an axe is power in the hands of a man who knows how to wield it. Let us not over-estimate the value of money. It will buy things but not character, and we all know that the joy and largeness of life depend not on the abundance of things which a man possesseth.

In our quiet country homes we occasionally hear echoes from the world where money is truly the measure of values. Then we realize that only those who have money can travel in first-class style and see things in the luxurious way of modern customs. But what of it? Our dower of contentment is worth more than money. One woman asked about a mutual friend. "Oh, I never see her these days," was the reply. "They have such a lot of money and it has spoiled her. No, I don't mean that she is that most contemptible of all creatures,—a snob. She is not. She always seems delighted to meet any of her old friends and treats them royally. But she has acquired a passion for spending money. It takes all her time to see to her magnificent furnishings for her palatial home, and the costumes of her children are a dream." Later this friend said, "I believe the day will come when our friend will see that Solomon was right when he said, 'All is vanity and vexation of spirit.'"

What are half of the handsomest homes in our cities? Museums,—and without orderly museum arrangement. Fortunes are spent in decorating rooms for the satisfaction of the owners. And then, because women of wealth surround themselves with a thousand needless things, a thousand other women who have money enough only for the necessary things of life, are unhappy, and strive for the accomplishment of the same end. That means saving and scrimping and nagging in the family. The husband is only too well aware of his wife's discontent and unhappiness. Both wife and children grow to regard him as a failure because he can not make as much money as they want. The husband grows discouraged, and bitter taunts and ugly retorts are the precursor of a divorce. As Alberich said, "May he who has it not covet it with rage." Then love goes, and strife and folly and sin ruin the home.

To all of us comes the idea that if we had more money we could live better; we would do good with it. But we also might have time and opportunity to be far worse than we now are. Oh, there is no lesson so hard to learn as the chapter on contentment. To be content is to keep from foolish repinings, and yet do each day the work which our hands find to do with a skill which shall bring its reward in nobler living and better pay. It is an end to be sought after and prayed for. The rewards of success are great, and opportunities are many; so we need to watch that we do not sacrifice things worth more than money and fame by our efforts. Of all the influences which may blight the home, ambition is the most subtle, because it starts in a worthy impulse, often in a desire to better the very home it destroys. Where the members of the home circle are the chosen confidants of each other, and come home for that sympathetic support which every one craves, there is no danger. But if the father is restless, after spending an hour or two at home, and the children look disappointed when they must remain at home for the evening, there is a likelihood of the family drifting apart, of an isolation of interests, of each following his or her solitary way. Love only, will bring things right, love alone will make a home.

"Joyous at heart when their hair is gray,
Husband and wife together stay,
And hand clasps hand as they pass along,
And the heart of each is glad with song:
You have been true, dear, and I have been true!
Loving me well as I have loved you!
And time and change and good and ill
Have linked us closer and closer still,
Hearts ever true, love, hearts ever true."

Covington, Ohio.

It's no use praying to be delivered from temptation unless you want to be divorced from sin.

SISTERS' AID SOCIETIES

SUMMITVILLE, IND.—Our mission circle has been silent for a long while, but not idle. We have met nearly every week in the year, with an average attendance of eight. Work consisted mostly of quilting stenciled quilts and quilting. We sent $5 to the St. Joseph Mission, in Missouri, towards their Christmas dinner. We have helped the poor at home by giving groceries and clothing. The year closes with $33 in the treasury.—Mrs. Hiatt, Summitville, Ind., Dec. 30.

COLORADO CITY, COLO.—Our Society met Dec. 29, and reorganized for the coming year. During our first year we have held forty-five meetings, with an average attendance of seven. We have made a number of comforters, and donated clothing to needy families of our city. As the cold weather becomes more severe, the need for food, fuel and clothing increases. We seek to be helpful for any deserving need to be used in helping the suffering ones here. Send all donations by freight, direct to the writer.—Lola Reed, Colorado City, Colo., Dec. 31.

BURNHAM, PA.—We organized our Sisters' Aid Society April 14, 1910, by electing the following officers: Sister Emma Arnold, president; Sister Olivia Harnsberger, vice-president; Sister Vina E. Shellenberger, secretary; Sister Dessie Fetzer, treasurer. Our present membership is eleven. We held fifteen meetings, with an average attendance of five. Our work consisted of making bonnets, aprons, clothes-pin aprons, and sewing patches for a quilt and a comforter. At our last meeting we took in $4.40. After buying material for our work, we have on hand $14.20. We are aiming to pay part of the debt of our church.—Vina E. Shellenberger, Burnham, Pa., Jan. 7.

Eight meetings were held during the year, with an average attendance of eight. We had in the treasury, at the beginning of the year, $12.38. Received during the year, $76.74; making a total of $89.64; expenses, $51.18, amount left, $38.46. We have $31.50 for new carpet in the aisles of our church. We sent the following named articles to Bridgewater, Va., to help furnish the Girls' Dormitory room: One comfort, one pair of cotton blankets, two pillows, two pair of pillow cases, one bolster, one bolsted and two quilts. After we called council in October a collection of $10.92 was taken and given to the superintendent of the Society, with authority to pay clothing to any provisions for a poor family whose household goods had been destroyed by fire. Seven bushels of apples were donated to this family. One Sister made and donated a bonnet and prayer covering to a sister; also a comfort to the Sisters' Home.—Nancy Yoder, Jr. We have consists of making comforts, quilts, aprons, children's garments, prayer coverings, and such articles as are needed where we have a call. We have a number of articles ready to send to some mission point.—Bertha L. Yoder, R. D. 6, Bellefontaine, Ohio, Dec. 30.

LIMA, OHIO.—The Sisters' Aid Society of the Sugar Creek church plans to hold her meeting the first Wednesday of each month, and they generally hold one or two special meetings during the year. At the first half of the year of 1910 Sister Mary Plaugher was chosen president and the writer, secretary. For the last half of the year Sister Anna Ebersole was president and Sister Anola Shutt, secretary. Thirteen meetings were held during the year, but we failed to have a report of three meetings. The report for the ten meetings is as follows: Average attendance, twelve; amount received, $43.55; expenses, $42.28; leaving $1.27 in the treasury. Our work consists mainly of making garments, piecing and knotting comforts and making prayer coverings. Twice, last spring, we sent clothing that we had made to the Toledo Mission. This fall we again sent a large box and bag of clothing to the same Mission, consisting of garments, three bed comforts, shoes, stockings, coats, and underwear. We also sent literature to the Zigler Sunday-school in West Virginia, amounting to $2.00. Our Society has had its reverses and seems at times to take no interest in the work; yet we desire to press on, feeling that God has blessed our efforts and will continue to do so as long as we do humble service for him.—Pearl Vore, Beaverdam, Ohio, Jan. 7.

A SERIES of meetings, to be held by Bro. J. E. Jarboe, in the Victor congregation, Osborne County, Kans., is to begin March 5.

THE Sisters' Aid Societies are well represented in the Home and Family Department of this issue. We shall hear from more of them next week.

THE work at Sidney, Ohio, has started out well for the year. So far seven have made the start for heaven, and become new creatures in Christ Jesus.

BRO. S. S. ULERY, one of our widely-known elders residing at North Manchester, Ind., is reported to be quite sick. Several days ago he called for the elders and was anointed.

A NUMBER of Bethany Bible School students called at the House last Monday,—probably a dozen of them. We were glad for their call, though we may not mention each one by name.

BRO. LEE ANGLE, of Wirtz, Va., passed away on Christmas Day. He had been a member of the church for thirty-eight years, and for three years of that time served in the eldership.

WE are requested to say that the churches at Olympia and Seattle, Wash., are in charge of Bro. J. S. Secrist. Turn to the Brethren Almanac, page 34, and make the necessary correction.

THE Missionary Visitor for January is filled with matter furnished by our India missionaries. They have done their work well, and what they say makes interesting and helpful reading.

BRO. J. M. BLOUGH and wife, of India, accompanied by Sister Ella Brubaker and child, are expected to reach New York on Wednesday of this week. News of the date of their landing, cabled from Naples, reached us too late to be announced in the issue of last week.

DURING a series of meetings, at Preston, Minn., lasting two weeks, and conducted by Bro. J. E. Miller, President of Mount Morris College, seven came out on the Lord's side and were baptized.

AT the late District Meeting of Texas and Louisiana, held at Roanoke, La., Bro. J. A. Miller, of Manvel, Tex., was chosen a member of the Standing Committee for the coming Conference.

BRO. DAVID HOLLINGER and wife, Sister Nettie Stauffer, and Bro. T. A. Eisenbise, left Bremen, Germany, Jan. 5, on their return from Palestine, and reached New York in the afternoon of the 12th.

TWENTY-EIGHT have been added to the church at Roaring Spring, Pa., since the dedication of the new house of worship in October last, and seventeen of these came out on the Lord's side quite recently.

BRO. J. M. BLOUGH, whose landing at New York, this week, is mentioned elsewhere, may, for the present, be addressed at Huntingdon, Pa., where he has been engaged to assist in the Juniata special Bible Term.

ONE of our evangelists writes us that, as he preaches the New Testament doctrine from evening to evening, the elder of the congregation distributes some good tracts. He finds that these tracts prove very helpful in his work.

WE were pleased to have with us, in our Sunday-school meeting last Sunday, Bro. I. D. Heckman, of Cerro Gordo, this State. He is Sunday-school Secretary of Southern Illinois, and was called on for a short talk while at the meeting.

BRO. G. E. YODER, of Elk Lick, Pa., is now engaged in evangelistic work at Sharpsburg, one of the preaching points of the Manor congregation, Md., where about forty members are residing. The attendance is said to be large and the interest good.

BRO. I. H. CRIST, Treasurer, Kansas City, Kans., announces that the amount received for the Christmas baskets and relief fund foots up $178.49. He says the donations received are greatly appreciated, and that the calls for further relief are quite numerous.

BRO. DAVID EMMERT, of Huntingdon, Pa., is recovering from a very critical surgical operation. For a time his condition was considered quite serious, but now he seems to be on a fair way to recovery, and was able to attend church the first Sunday in January.

BRO. FRANKLIN MYERS, elder of the Cherry Grove congregation, who was in the Rockford Hospital several weeks, has returned to his home near Lanark, Ill. He had a paralytic stroke several days ago, and when last heard from was not getting along very well.

THE church attendance at Elgin, last Sunday morning, was unusually good. The devotional exercises were conducted by Bro. Jesse Noffsinger, of Dayton, Ohio, and the address, which was very much appreciated, was delivered by Bro. J. F. Burton, of Muscatine, Iowa.

WE would be pleased to publish all the splendid things our correspondents are saying about the enjoyments of Christmas, the reflections on closing the old year, and entering upon the duties and privileges of the new year, but we can not. We use enough of the matter received to fill the paper, and that is the best we can do. However, we are certainly grateful for the hopeful thoughts that come our way, indicating that our people are looking on the bright side of things.

FROM the Winona Conference to the close of 1910 was quite a busy season for Bro. Reuben Shroyer, of New Berlin, Ohio. The greater part of the time he was engaged in evangelistic work, and writes us that he delivered 162 addresses, besides visiting many homes and doing other things that fall to the lot of a busy evangelist. While it was unpleasant to be away from his family so much, still it was a pleasure to be about his Father's business, and have the blessings of Heaven rest upon his labors.

THE late revival at Afton, Nebr., was brought to a close very suddenly by a terrific blizzard that sent the mercury down to twenty-four and even thirty degrees below zero. Eight persons, however, applied for membership. The services were conducted by Bro. D. G. Wine.

A PUBLIC discussion is being held this week three miles southeast of Foreman, Ark., between D. G. Berkman, of Arden, upon the part of the Brethren, and Benjamin M. Bolard, of Little Rock, on the part of the Missionary Baptists. The debate was to begin Jan. 16, and last five days. The notice reached us too late to appear in the issue mailed last week.

AFTER spending some months in evangelistic work in Kansas, Bro. E. F. Sherfy and wife have returned to Bethany Bible School, in Chicago, and may now be addressed at 3435 West Van Buren Street. Referring to the situation in Kansas, he says: "I find the MESSENGER a potent factor for good in nearly every home among our Brethren. This is especially true of the places where Bro. Finnell has been."

BRO. S. G. NICKEY, of Cerro Gordo, Ill., is engaged in a series of meetings at Waynesboro, Miss. The field here was made ready for preaching by a very free use of the MESSENGER. The people of the community have read the paper until they feel a deep interest in the church and the New Testament doctrine set forth in our columns. After he is through with this meeting, Bro. Nickey expects to go to Fruitdale, Ala.

SOME time ago a copy of the MESSENGER was left on a seat in a western steamboat. It was picked up by a gentleman who read it, and then read it again. There was something about the paper that appealed to him, so he subscribed for it. Instead of destroying your papers, leave them where they can be found and read by others. The MESSENGER will attract attention anywhere, and, when it has a chance, will plead its own case.

BRO. JOSEPH AMICK, widely known as the retired Business Manager of the Brethren Publishing House, drops into the MESSENGER sanctum every now and then. Though in his seventy-seventh year, he goes about like a man ten years younger, and seems to be enjoying fairly good health. When he called on us, a few days ago, he reminded us of the fact, that Bro. Howard Miller never lived in Lewistown, Pa., as stated in our article on the "Numerical Strength of the Brotherhood," published last week, but that his place of residence, while in the Keystone State, was at Lewisburg.

WE have two good articles from Bro. W. R. Miller, who is yet in Jerusalem. One of these will appear next week; and the other, one week later. He promises us a good write-up of his experiences in Moab, when robbed by the Bedouins. Near the middle of December, while several miles north of Jerusalem, and riding in the direction of Bethel, his wife's horse slipped off of a ledge, and rolled over her and down the side of the mountain. Sister Miller was considerably injured, but no bones were broken. Another letter, written from Jerusalem, four days later, says that she was recovering from her injuries.

LAST Sunday the church at Elgin had the pleasure of entertaining nearly fifty visiting members from Batavia, Chicago and Naperville, it being the occasion of the joint meeting of the Sunday-school workers and the Christian Workers. The Sunday-school gathering was held in the afternoon and proved to be the most helpful meeting of the kind we have yet attended. The Christian Workers convened in the evening, and carried out a well-arranged program. The attendance and interest were splendid at both meetings, and all present went away feeling that they had been entertained in a very helpful manner. These meetings, conducted wholly by the young members, are growing in interest and we are pleased to observe that the exercises on this occasion were limited to our own people. The more use we make of the talent in our own church, the better meetings we are going to have, and the greater efficiency are we going to develop among our brethren and sisters.

No Church Raffles.

In Kansas City, Kans., it has been decided that hereafter there shall be no raffles of any sort, not even in churches. The law is a good one, but it seems strange that worldly authorities must be called upon to prohibit wrong-doing in churches. The members of the body of Christ should live so far above all evil, and necessary laws, as to set a good example for the lawmakers. Of the Christians, at the beginning of the first century, it is said that they were superior to the laws. Their lives were even better than what was demanded by those who made the laws. One might possibly excuse weak and uninformed church members for taking part in church raffles, but as a rule such raffles are gotten up and managed by the leaders in the church. And to make the situation still worse, the work generally receives the hearty approval of the pastor. For people who are leaders in church society there is no excuse for such wrong-doing. In fact, the necessity for any city prohibiting church raffles is a sad reflection on what the world regards as Christian religion.

The Christian Critic.

The spirit of criticism seems to be born in us, and to many it is a most delightsome task. The more we do of it the more we see to be done. The habit,—and a habit it may become to be,—so grows on us that it becomes a part of our thought life, so much so that all we hear and all we read comes within range of our criticism. The fact is, we hear and read with this purpose in mind and, as a result, we lose much of the purpose, force and beauty of the speaker or writer in our hungering and thirsting after food for criticism. The word itself is not a Biblical term, but its use has become quite popular in our modern Christian civilization; and today the world is rank with all kinds of criticism—philosophical, scientific, literary, Biblical, higher-biblical and so on.

We might speculate as to the cause of the dominancy of this spirit, or, rather, its activity. But, as this was not our purpose when we thought of the subject, suffice it to say that the world is getting very wise, and this is one of the ways to let our fellow-men know it. It is said that too much personal wisdom tends to speculation, and speculation opens the door to criticism. We know that it is often said that much of the criticism is made because of interpretations being made to harmonize with our own personal and accepted church views. This may be true in some cases, but we must not forget that we are all human, that we may all be mistaken as to the motives of others, and that to sincere souls salvation is alike precious. Therefore Christian criticism must be made in a Christian spirit.

Criticism made humbly, kindly and modestly is commendable, because if men and women who are honest and sincere, get wrong views on vital points of the doctrines of religion, it is our duty to try to set such persons right, as far as it is possible for us to do so. But in trying to do this we should be very careful not to manifest a self-righteous and braggadocio spirit, as if we were all right and the other party all wrong.

There are very few sincere Christians that willingly and knowingly misinterpret scriptural truths that are vital to the salvation of the soul. It is not natural, not rational, for men and women to do so. And because of this, we should not charge those who differ from us as being dishonest and expressing wrong views, as we see them, simply because they are unwilling to receive the truth because of the sacrifice it may demand of them in their accepting of it. In some cases there may seem to be a shade of truth in such conclusions, but in many cases their Christian activities show that they are quite as willing to make sacrifices for the truths which they accept, as are those who differ from them, and pose as their severest critics. We must not forget to add the Biblical adage: "Every man is right in his own eyes, but his neighbor cometh and searcheth him." This means that no man can be so right, in his own estimation, or opinion, but what his neighbor has a right to ask questions or have a different view.

"But," says the self-righteous critic, "I have the Scripture for the position which I take and, therefore, I must be right." Well, suppose you think you are, and the party whose position you criticise says exactly the same thing, who, then, shall decide which one holds the better position? Not you, not I, not he. It now becomes a matter of Biblical interpretation. And, then, to whom shall we go? To the "higher critics," the lower critics, or to those who just know things and interpret as they have learned to know? The latter are the ones that, as a rule, are the surest of being right, and the surest that those who don't see as they do, are wrong. There is a reason for this. What is it? Well, we shall not venture an answer. A little careful thinking along this line of thought may give us some new ideas that will be helpful to us in taking some of the sourness out of our criticisms and enable us to see that at least in some things our interpretations may be wrong,—not willingly, but because they are on a wrong basis. And even such a possibility should not discourage us, for the Bible, as a whole, is the most wonderful Book that the world has ever known or seen. For centuries and centuries it has been read and studied by saint and sinner. On its interpretations we have had written, by the wisest of men and the most assiduous and thorough students, scores of commentaries, and volumes by the hundreds of thousands, on exegetical studies and interpretations, and the end is not yet. For as God, in the creation of this world, so arranged that its rich stores of man's essential supplies could be opened and utilized as required by his needs,—the silver, the gold, the iron, the coal, the oil, the electricity, —and endowed him with the sense of quest, of search, and of genius to find, we had new conditions which demanded new relations, applications and means to ends, so has it been with the spiritual world. We continue to have our old world and other worlds revolving around their fundamental and God-established centers, but during the centuries have come many changes that have called forth new means and applications to make man's relations to life, and conditions incident thereto, desirable, and what God is pleased to have them be.

So it has been with the spiritual world. We have the same God kingdom, the same general laws, but in the process of the development of this kingdom many changes have come and gone. These changes have made necessary new conditions, new relations and new applications, and yet the great fundamentals continue to be as they were of old. The great principles whereby a child is begotten of God,—made a child of grace, and an heir of heaven, remain the same.

Have faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God and the sin Redeemer, be baptized as the symbol of cleansing from sin, and receive the Holy Ghost to comfort, lead and direct in the new life unto the complete salvation in the eternal kingdom. These are truths so universally accepted that there is no need of criticism in reference to them.

But there are things written in connection with the Christian activities, in the days of the writing of the New Testament Scriptures, especially in the epistolary writings, that are proper subjects of Biblical criticism and a careful study of the basical conditions on which their true interpretations depend. To us there can be no such thing as verbal inspiration,—only the principles have we by inspiration,—as in our language we do not have the same words as were used in the originals. But we do have the principles, as expressed in the Hebrew and Greek, given to us in English words, as nearly as it was possible to do so by the translators, so that Biblical interpretation and criticism, as a whole, requires a wonderfully wide field of investigation, and we should exercise great charity towards those who differ from us in things that are not clearly given as fundamental principles.

The Universal Church Idea.

On the principle that the Creator is greater than the created, it logically follows that God is universal. If this law could be reversed,—the possibility established that the product could be greater than the producer,—then the universe, as the product of God's creative genius and power, might be, or it might become, greater than its Creator; insomuch that it could not be said that God is universal, for his works have outgrown him. But not so. The nature of things is eternal. So God must always remain larger, even infinitely larger, it may be said, than his works; and every interest in the wide, wide, world must find its consummation in him.

Here is the foundation of the universal church idea. It's in the very nature of God. It can not be otherwise, because it accords with his nature. With him it is thoroughly settled as the outgrowth of an eternal law. God's universality moulds and crowns every act and purpose of his being.

The Bible is planned on the universal idea. "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." Victory! Ultimate triumph, universal dominion, of right over wrong! The possibility of universal escape from the dominion of the serpent! God chose Abraham to be the father of a great nation. Why? That he might bless Abraham's seed? No, fundamentally, not so, but that Abraham's seed might bless all peoples, and kindreds, and nations. Rather, through Abraham's seed, that God might bless all the nations of earth. The big end of the promise to Abraham was, "And in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed."

When the seed of Abraham came and offered himself a ransom, was it for a few chosen ones? Did he die for any particular race or nation, to the exclusion of the rest of mankind? Or was his atonement universal, as underlying the very foundation of the universal church? Certainly. Centuries before Jesus offered himself in atonement for the race, Isaiah, in prophetic vision, as though it had already been done, cried, "The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." Notice, "The iniquity of us all,"—not a select few. Having the same idea, Paul said, "He died for all," also that "he should taste death for every man." See? It's clear and plain.

The universal atonement idea and the universal church idea go hand in hand,—the former making possible the latter and the latter growing out of the former.

In the further development of the same idea, Jesus commissioned the apostles and their successors to go and teach all nations (Matt. 28:19). Mark puts it this way: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature" (Mark 16:15). The Revised Version says, "Preach the gospel to the whole creation." Matthew says, "All nations." Mark says, "Every creature," "The whole creation." What could be broader than "all nations"? What could be more personal than "every creature"? How tremendously emphatic does Jesus' last and great charge to the church make the universal church idea!

And in the further development of the same idea, the invitations of the Gospel are to all who will come. First, the Gospel is to be preached to all; then all who feel "poor in spirit," and who feel "heavy laden,"—that is weighed down with the burden of sin,—are invited and urged to come. Then, in closing the New Testament record, so as to give the broadest possible sweep to the spirit of invitation, it is said, "And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." "Whosoever will," let him come, and bid him God speed. Let no one stand in the way.

As to the coming, it is left to the will of the individual. God's plan is universal. The atonement is universal. The invitations are universal. But in the last analysis the individual, with the facts before him, must choose, of a willing mind, to come and be saved.

Now, with the universal church idea fully settled from Jesus' point of view, what shall be said of his people? It is obvious that Jesus makes the church the chief instrument in working out his plan.

Since the church is to be instrumental in working out God's plan, it is important, first of all, that she understand the scope of her mission. It should be clearly known that her activity in spreading the Gospel and saving men is not confined by racial or territorial limits. On the other hand, it should be clearly understood that her mission is world-wide. As Jesus was possessed of the universal church idea, so should that idea possess his people; and as he sacrificed and agonized to make possible its accomplishment, so should those to whom its accomplishment is entrusted labor and sacrifice and suffer, that the ends of the earth shall be made a part of the kingdom of heaven.

Plans should be laid on a large scale. The universal church idea places on the shoulders of men the biggest undertaking in the world, and it should be planned on the same big scale. Let there be big, universal plans laid, and then let them be worked with wisdom and zeal, with unfaltering faith in victory and ultimate triumph. If it must be said to the shame of the church that the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light, let the children of light profit by their examples. The wise worldling takes into account, first, the "lay of the ground," and the requirements to meet it. Then he plans and works accordingly, and you know the result. Why should not the church do likewise? Much depends on understanding fully what you are expected to do, and then planning accordingly.

Methods of application in matters of applying principles of Gospel teaching, where the Gospel itself does not outline the method, should be on the same universal scale. The Gospel is a universal Gospel; it's for all. And Jesus has very wisely left matters of application largely in the hands of the church, that the methods employed to put into practice and carry forward the teachings of the Master, might be made to meet the conditions of the nations and the ages. It is well for the nations, having the Gospel, to bear this fact in mind. As to the laws of England, the great Gladstone used to say, "Make it as easy as possible for the people to do right, and as hard as possible for them to do wrong." Certainly this is wise. It is wise in things spiritual as well as in things temporal. It is certainly very unwise to labor to make matters difficult of application,—more difficult than the law itself contemplates. Let there be no letting go of truth and principle, but let there be methods of application in keeping with the truth to be applied, and also in keeping with the conditions of the nations and the age. Let us be wise, and go forward, and be doing!

Let the old mother churches be well cared for and well worked. They are the strength of the undertaking. But let it be understood that they must reach out. It is not enough that they maintain themselves. Let them plan constantly to reach out into new fields. Brethren should be elected to the ministry with the view of meeting the universal need. They must be trained for service, and the church should share in it and the burden of the work, if she would share in the glory of the reward. Let everything be done in plan and method and effort in view of the universal church idea! This is the King's business; it is our business; and it must take precedence over everything else.

District Meeting Minutes.

During the fall months the House printed the Minutes of twelve of the District Meetings, held in different parts of the Brotherhood, and special efforts were made to bring out these Minutes in good shape, and to do the work in the least time possible. The Business Department has favored us with a record, showing when the copy was received from the clerk of each District, and when the printed Minutes were billed out. The time required to bring out the Minutes, after securing the copy, varies from six to fifteen days. In one instance eighteen days were required, but in this case some delay was caused on account of some copy adjustment. The copy for some of the Minutes reached us in fine shape, and in others not so good. Occasionally a day or two was required to adjust the copy and get it in good form for the printers. But there was no unnecessary delay upon the part of our workmen. Some of the District Clerks were a little slow about getting their manuscript to us, but for this we, of course, are not responsible. We shall be glad to do printing for all parts of the Brotherhood, especially would we like to have the privilege of printing the Minutes of all our District Meetings. Our price may not be as low as some of the local printing plants, where cheap labor is employed, but we do good work. Then, too, it should be some satisfaction for our patrons to know that whatever profit there is goes into the Mission Fund, and from this fund a number of the Districts receive money to aid them in carrying on their mission work. The more the Brotherhood helps the House in her work, the more the House can do in the interest of the principles we teach. It hardly seems fair for a District to call on the General Mission Board for money to carry on mission work, and then send its church printing elsewhere. We are in shape to do good work, and we do good work, and kindly suggest that all of our Districts, as well as all of our schools, confer with the House regarding any printing they may have to do.

Number of Ministers Chosen.

Bro. Edgar M. Hoffer is very much interested in the ministers of the Brotherhood, and can repeat the names and addresses of hundreds of them. He has kept a careful record of all the ministers elected and reported through the Messenger, and now informs us that during the year just past 108 were chosen. Twenty-five of these were elected in Pennsylvania; thirteen in Ohio; twelve in Indiana, and the same number in West Virginia. A number not tabulated, were chosen in other States. Fifty-two were advanced to the second degree, and fifty-eight were ordained to the eldership. According to the published reports, fifty-five ministers died, thirty-five of them being elders, and fourteen were over eighty years old. The youngest minister to pass away was thirty-one, and the oldest one was eighty-eight. Nine did not reach the age of fifty, and eight were in the ministry more than a half century. If the report regarding the number of ministers chosen be correct, it simply means that only about one congregation out of eight held an election for a minister during the year. What will the other seven do this year? We suggest that they look out from their number faithful brethren of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost, and able to teach others, and call them to the ministry. We are certain that this would be pleasing to the Lord.

Your Address.

The importance of writers giving their address with every communication, sent to a business house, is shown by an occurrence within the last few weeks. We received a letter from a sister regarding matters involving hundreds of dollars. She sought advice that we are in a position to give. Her letter contains neither postoffice nor State, but in the body of the communication she mentioned a city that we thought might possibly be her address. We addressed her at the city named, in the State where we thought she might possibly reside, but the letter has been returned unclaimed. At this point the matter must be dropped, and the sister will wonder why we fail to answer her letter. Probably not a day goes by that the House does not receive letters with either the name, postoffice or State of the writers omitted. It is simply amazing how careless some people are in this particular. Some of them may have written before, and think that we should still remember their address. Some think that because they are receiving the Messenger each week, we should certainly know their address and be able to determine their names by their handwriting. Considering the carelessness there is, regarding matters of this sort, it is a marvel that business houses make as few mistakes as they do.

Our Sunday-school Lessons.

This year we are favored with a splendid series of Sunday-school lessons, beginning after the death of Solomon and continuing until the end of the Old Testament record. We shall do well to give these lessons the closest possible attention, and not only study the lessons themselves, but read up thoroughly on the intervening events. As a rule, we do not know enough about the Old Testament, and some of the writings of the old prophets are not as interesting to us as are the different parts of the New Testament. It is a mistake to conclude that the Old Testament is of no value to the Bible readers of the present dispensation. The Old Testament was the only Bible Christ and the apostles had. On the day of Pentecost, when 3,000 were converted, Peter took his text from one of the books of the Old Testament. All of the scripture quoted by Stephen in his wonderful sermon will be found in the Old Bible. In fact, the New Testament can not be understood, as it should be, without a good knowledge of the Old. The real purpose of the Old Testament is to lead us to Christ, to prepare us to understand Christ and comprehend his mission on earth. In view of these considerations, we urge all Bible students to take special interest in the lessons of the year, so as to prepare themselves for better work in the Master's vineyard. It might be well for the ministers in all of our congregations to call the attention of the members and others to the importance of studying the Word of God as a whole.

Accessions for 1910.

Bro. John H. Topper, of Butler, Ind., is a careful reader of the Messenger, and for 1910 has kept a record of the conversions reported in our columns. He writes us that the number baptized is 6,037, and that 361 were restored to fellowship. In the eyes of some this may be a small increase, and yet it amounts to something. It means that an average of about seven converts have been added to each congregation in the Brotherhood. This, however, is not as good a showing as Bro. Topper reported for the year previous, when he gave 7,418 as the number baptized. We felt at the time that his estimate was rather large, and thought possibly that he might have failed to keep track of some of the duplicating in the news reported. But since there has been less of this duplication during the last twelve months than usual, it has been much easier to keep the record; hence it would appear that the report for 1910 is about as correct as could be expected, though it is a few hundred less than the most conservative report for 1909. We are glad for the interest that our brother has been taking in this feature of our church work.

The Sensible Elder.

We have a real sensible letter from an aged elder. He says that he is seventy-five years old, that he has preached the Gospel and looked after the Master's flock for many years, but now feels to rejoice because a young elder has been chosen to relieve him of the great responsibility. There is nothing about the letter to indicate that the aged preacher is jealous of the young preacher, or that he mistrusts him in the least. He has occasion to rejoice that the Lord has raised up another to take care of the flock. It is a pleasure to receive a letter like this. It shows that the Spirit of God is in the heart of the aged father and is making of him a bright and shining light. We need more aged elders of this class,—men who are willing to turn their work over to men strong enough to give the church the active service that it so greatly needs. Many of our churches are suffering for the want of an active leader, and they must continue to suffer until they can be placed in care of men who are in a position to put life and spirit into every department of church work.

The Botetourt Church, Va.

A correspondent writes us that the Botetourt congregation, Va., at this time numbers 680 members, and that, during the last year, sixty-three were added to the church by baptism, by letter, and by restoration to membership. There were only seven deaths, and eighteen received letters and located elsewhere. The encouraging feature about the work of the congregation is that only three were expelled. We have known congregations of one-third the membership to expel twice as many in the course of a year. The expulsion of even three in a large congregation is painful enough. But the workers in the Botetourt church believe in saving all the members possible. We are told that during the year 335 sermons were preached at different points in the congregation,—290 by the home ministers, and forty-five by visiting ministers. In other congregations, however, the home ministers delivered 404 addresses, making for them 694 sermons during the year. This would indicate that the preachers in the congregation are by no means idle.

NOTICE TO THE CHURCHES OF THE NORTH-EASTERN DISTRICT OF OHIO.

The Home Mission Board expects to build a house of worship in the city of Akron. The action of the Board received the sanction of the District Meeting. Upon the recommendation of the Board a solicitor was appointed to canvass the churches of the District, for the purpose of raising at least $6,000. Of this sum $1,325 was raised at the District Meeting. The said solicitor has now begun the canvass of the District, and the churches are hereby advised to be in readiness for him.

By order of Chairman of Board,
Apple Creek, Ohio, Jan. 4. R. M. Moomaw, Sec'y.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

The First Church of the Brethren of Kansas City, Mo., met in council Jan. 5. Bro. Jesse Mohler, of Warrensburg, Mo., being present, opened the meeting with prayer and scripture reading, and also assisted our elder, Bro. G. W. Lentz, in disposing of the business brought before the church. One was received by letter. It was decided to choose a deacon, Bro. T. C. Nininger being elected and duly installed.

Jan. 1, 1911, the Christian Workers decided to send $11 to the church at Nevada, Mo., to assist the members in their work at that place. It was also decided to donate the Christian Workers' collection of the first and third Sundays in each month to World-wide Missions. The remaining collections, after defraying the incidental expenses of the Christian Workers, are to be sent to the Nevada, Mo., church.

The members in Kansas City are doing some very diligent work, and ask an interest in the prayers of God's people everywhere, that much and lasting good may be done to the honor and glory of God. T. C. Nininger.

OLD FOLKS' HOME OF IOWA.

The Trustees met at the Home Jan. 4, at 1 P. M. All three Districts were represented. The management of the Home is in charge of Bro. H. H. Smith and wife, who are giving satisfaction to all concerned. The stock and farm are in good shape.

The inmates seem satisfied and happy. At present all are well. Just lately two were removed by death,—Sister Fanny Alsbaugh, of the Iowa River church, and Sister Mary Murray, generally known as Grandma Murray, who will be missed on account of her genial and happy disposition. She was eighty-seven years of age and suffered much for the last year on account of a broken hip. There are still twelve inmates left in Home.

The farm (80 acres) does not supply sufficient means to make the Home entirely self-supporting. The trustees are in hopes that the friends of the Home and the inmates will not forget them in their donations.

To all of the three Districts, especially, we make an earnest plea for immediate help in the way of money contributions. The elders of the respective congregations are hereby asked to see to it that their members have a chance to contribute to this noble and worthy cause.

Dallas Center, Iowa, Jan. 7. C. B. Rowe, Secy.

SCRAPS FROM NEW MEXICO.

The Anti-Saloon League and the W. C. T. U. protest against the constitution written by the delegation of New Mexico, to be voted upon the 21st inst., for the reason that it entirely ignores the temperance cause, although the temperance people had 10,000 petitioners begging for a clause to be inserted or written in the constitution, to lessen and control the whiskey traffic, to some extent at least. But they got nothing,—scarcely a hearing,—and one of the great political parties in the convention, since it was written, has protested against it, for different causes. Many will vote against it.

At this time we are having cold weather. It is two degrees below zero this morning, but we have had but little moisture since September.

The members here are in union and alive to their responsibilities,—willing to do what they can to forward the cause of Christ.

We like the Messenger more and more. The articles in the last number of the year, Dec. 31, by Brethren S. Z. Sharp and G. A. Shamberger, deserve reading. They inform us why we are not larger in number. But may we not hope that, when placed in the balances of rightcousness, we will then not be found lacking there?

Buchanan, N. Mex., Jan. 3. Samuel Weimer.

SOUTH ST. JOSEPH MISSION.

We assembled in council Dec. 30, with Eld. I. H. Crist in charge. Considerable business was disposed of, such as reports of officers and the election of officers for another term. It was decided to elect Sunday-school officers for six months, instead of one year. Sister Maude Deardorff was elected superintendent of the Sunday-school; Bro. C. E. Newton, trustee and church treasurer. Besides these there was not much change in officers for 1911.

We decided to have our love feast Jan. 20 at 7 P. M.; also a called council Jan. 19. Bro. James Hardy, of Kansas City, Kans., is now holding an interesting series of meetings for us, which is well attended.

There is a good deal of sickness among us, and, as a result, we have had three deaths since the first of the year. Work here is very scarce and men are walking the streets in search of employment. We are kept very busy, trying to provide comfort for suffering mothers and children. The recent cold wave caused us to distribute about all of our surplus bedding. E. N. Huffman.

502 Kentucky St., St. Joseph, Mo., Jan. 6.

FROM THE FRUITVALE CHURCH, CAL.

We met in council Dec. 31, with Eld. M. E. Andrews presiding. Bro. Andrews was retained as elder. Bro. Jesse B. Weaver was chosen superintendent of the Sunday-school for another year; Bro. Amos Reed, secretary. Sister Addie Brown is to be president of the Young People's Meeting for six months, and Sister Jane Webster, secretary.

Bro. J. Harman Stover, of Butte Valley, who is building a home at Corning for a sister, has ten days off, while the plastering is drying. He will spend that time with the Fruitvale church. Yesterday, after a long day's journey, Bro. Stover preached his first sermon for us, taking for his text the words from the Book of Genesis, "Where Art Thou?" Judging by the first sermon, his hearers will all know where we are before Bro. Stover leaves us, and we know there will be an ingathering of souls and a reviving of the Fruitvale church. The impression impressed upon our minds were the words from Matt. 25: 40-45. The writer was chosen church correspondent and Gospel Messenger agent. Ella R. Webster.

Bangor, Cal., Jan. 3.

FROM BELLEFONTAINE, OHIO.

On Christmas Day the church at this place was greatly impressed with the work done by the children. Recitations and songs were given in such a way as to bring rich blessings. All was done in the spirit of true service and we older ones were encouraged to greater enthusiasm in the Master's work. At the close of the children's efforts, Bro. E. P. Yoder delivered a well-prepared and impressive Christmas sermon to the children, which was well received and much appreciated. A treat was then distributed to the four smaller classes, as well as to our cradle roll babies.

New Year's Day was again the scene of special services. After the regular Sunday-school session had closed, the officers and teachers for 1911 were called to the front, and an impressive consecration service followed. Our elder, B. F. Snyder, delivered the address, and each one was made to feel the burden of responsibility, as Bro. Snyder impressed the charge, as given by Paul to his spiritual son, in 2 Tim. 4: 1-5. We are now organized for church and Sunday-school work of the year, and ask an interest in your prayers that the work may prosper, and that all may be done to the honor and glory of God.

203 Water Street, Jan. 3.

FROM MEDICINE LAKE, MONTANA.

Our church met in council at the Beverly schoolhouse Dec. 31. Eld. J. E. Keller presided. The attendance was good, and the business was quickly disposed of. Two letters were received and read. We now number fifty members, and a few have not handed in their letters.

The church elected officers for one year: Bro. J. E. Keller, as elder; Bro. Mow. clerk; Brethren Robert Cookson, L. M. Williams and Harris Clark, trustees; Bro. David M. Mootheart, treasurer; the writer, church correspondent and Messenger agent. We also elected officers for the Sunday-school. Bro. L. M. Williams is our superintendent; Sister Harvine Cookson, secretary.

A Mission Band for boys and girls has been decided upon. Sister Margaret Swank is superintendent. The Mission Band children planted and cultivated vegetables, raising produce to the amount of $15, to be applied to various missions.

We have an evergreen Sunday-school. Last Sunday the weather was twenty-five degrees below zero, but we had a good attendance,—scholars from three years up to fifty-nine.

We had a well-arranged Christmas program for the children. After the program, each child received a little gift, which all of them seemed to appreciate very much.

Enterprise, Mont., Jan. 2. Katie E. Keller.

FROM PAYETTE VALLEY, IDAHO.

Our Bible Institute, ably conducted by Bro. Ellis M. Studebaker, of Chicago, has just closed. Those who attended the sessions had a feast of good things, and were much inspired in the study of the Word. On Christmas morning he preached a missionary sermon in the Fruitland house, and in the evening at the Payette house. An offering for the General Mission Board was taken at each place, which amounted to $91.80. Our Thanksgiving offering, of $15, will be given to the District Mission. Bro. David Betts, of Boise Valley, who appreciates the value of the Bible Institute, came to Payette to enjoy the school with us. He preached a Christmas sermon for us in town on Christmas morning. On Christmas evening, prior to the preaching hour, our Sunday-school pupils rendered a well-prepared Christmas program, after which the school and all present were treated to candy and oranges. About 150 were present. Yesterday Eld. J. C. Neher, of Nampa, preached for us in Fruitland. He and his wife spent New Year's Day with friends here.

Payette, Idaho, Jan. 2. S. J. Kenepp.

FROM BEATRICE, NEBR.

We met in council on the last afternoon of the old year, Dec. 31. We had an interesting meeting, with a great deal of business done in a short time. We rejoiced to learn that our committee had secured Bro. Sollenberger as our pastor for another year. We also elected him as our elder. Other officers were chosen as follows: C. H. Price, superintendent of Sunday-school; secretary, Elsie Price; superintendent of home department, J. E. Young. The writer was chosen Messenger correspondent. Instead of electing officers for the Christian Workers' Meeting, as usual, we appointed a committee of three to have full charge of the meetings for three months.

I was much impressed with a New Year's motto I heard, last Thursday, at a meeting of the Christian Women's Board of Missions. Dr. Scattergood is the author. Here it is:

"Speak a shade more kindly than the year before.
Pray a little oftener, love a little more.
Clear a little closer to the Father's love,
Life below will liker grow to the life above."

Beatrice, Nebr., Jan. 7. Allie Eisenbise.

FROM ONEKAMA, MICH.

Dec. 18 we closed a series of meetings here, conducted by Bro. J. Edson Ulery. Brethren Sellers and Riley also assisted. The spirit of all the meetings was splendid, and we feel that much good will result. One accepted Christ and was baptized, and another will be baptized later. Several are under conviction and need our most earnest prayers.

On Christmas Day, at 7:30 P. M., we held our Christmas services by the Sunday-school. The true spirit of Christmas prevailed all through the services. We had decided that there was to be a giving Christmas, that is, each pupil was to give whatever he could, of clothing and provisions, all of which was to be sent to the less fortunate children of Chicago. Great interest was shown by the pupils in obtaining their various contributions.

At the close of the service each class was called upon to bring their contributions to the front. The happy expressions on the faces of the children truly proved that it was "more blessed to give than to receive." A collection was taken up, which paid for the sending of the things to Chicago. There were two barrels full of provisions. A treat of candy was given to each pupil of the Sunday-school. Jan. 1 we had an attendance of fifty-one. We hope to keep increasing during the year.

Box 88, Chief, Mich., Jan. 5. Hattie Hansen.

FROM WASHINGTON CITY, D. C.

Our special program for the children on Christmas morning was particularly interesting. Nearly all of the scholars in the primary and intermediate grades took an active part.

At the last regular council, held on Monday evening, Jan. 2, much business was pleasantly disposed of. Reports were submitted by the pastor, missionary, church treasurer, and several committees. During the year just ended the pastor reported that 990 visits were made. An interesting report was submitted by the missionary, Sister Luhi E. Sanger, as follows: Visits in homes, 3,094; hospital visits, 31; cottage prayer meetings held, 7; number of Sunday-school scholars secured, 46; home department scholars added to roll, 7; new names for cradle roll, 35. The Children's Sewing Class, conducted by Sister Sanger, held 23 meetings, with average attendance of 8. They made 33 articles; also one comforter, which was donated. The Missionary Society was granted the privilege to hold six meetings per year on Sunday evenings, preceding the regular preaching services, taking the place, on such evenings, of the Christian Workers' program. We are arranging to have Eld. Isaac Frantz with us during the year for a two weeks' series of meetings. Since our last report, seven letters of membership have been granted. Mrs. D. E. Miller

Fruita.—On the evening of Dec. 18 our District Sunday-school Secretary, Bro. Homer Wenger, conducted a Sunday-school Institute, giving many good suggestions in regard to the work. Christmas morning, after preaching services, all were treated by members of the S. S. The evening a well-arranged program was rendered, consisting of music and recitations. Our True Christmas spirit was manifested all through the exercises, leading us away from the modern Santa Claus idea. Dec. 31 our District Council was held and all attended at this place. Many helpful hints were suggested. In the evening an enthusiastic Missionary meeting was held. Sister Bunice Horning, of Conference convened. The day was a busy one and had to be lengthened by a night session. NEBRASKA.

Afton.—Our series of meetings came to a close very suddenly and unexpectedly. We were greatly favored with beautiful weather during the four weeks in which Bro. D. G. Wine labored in the Afton church. Eight had indicated their willingness to accept Jesus, and about that number were looked forward to the New Year's day services with anxious hearts. But God willed, however, we should be in a cold, blizzard. Thermometers marked from twenty-four to thirty degrees below zero, and our meeting appointed for the 1st had to be abandoned. The church, however, has been much built up by the meeting held. Bro. Wine is a faithful laborer in the Word. After the third week of our meetings we had our love feast. At a recent council meeting Bro. Geo. Minnick was chosen elder for the coming year; Sister Edna Correll, president of our Christian Workers' Meeting; Sister Elsie Foster, secretary. Bro. Services Jan. 1 and 2,—and, as some of our members were sick, we did not have as large an attendance as we should have had. However did his work faithfully and well. We had four sessions each day. During the Institute we studied the following subjects: "Holy Spirit," "Ephesians," "Communion," "Prayer Veil," "Anointing," and "The Covenant Texts." Williams.—Our short notice in a former Messenger brought many letters of inquiry concerning the land in this valley here, but only one brother has bought and settled here, and we still regret to say that he is not a member of the church. To carry on the work, as our two ministers here are now quite aged,—seventy-five and eighty-seven years,—we are in need, respectively. We expect Bro. J. Harman Stover to teach our school, but we have no place for him to board, and fear to hear from those who are willing to do a good work for the Lord. There will be no trouble to build up a good church here, for right living is the rule of the people in this climate. CORRESPONDENCE

A NEW SANITARIUM.

The erection of a sanitarium and hospital is a proposition which is being promoted by a number of Brethren in Central Kansas, and will probably be of vital interest to the entire church at large. The committee appointed for the consideration and development of this project have organized, and have already done active work. The place of location is to be McPherson, Kans.

It was unanimously agreed to incorporate for not less than forty or forty-five thousand dollars. A building is to be erected as soon as sufficient means are guaranteed, a considerable amount of which has already been pledged.

A board of directors, elected by the stockholders from among representative members of the church of the Brethren, a physician, a matron, and a nurse, is to be a member of this church. A nurses' training school is to be established for the special benefit of our sisters and those preparing to do mission work. This course is to be made more extensive in every way than is now to be given by efficient physicians chosen from the medical staff of the institution. No one brings more cheer and consolation into a home, stricken with sickness, than a thoroughly trained nurse, carrying out the insructions of a capable physician.

This institution is to fill the capacity of both hospital and sanitarium. All acute and chronic diseases will receive attention and proper treatment. Surgeons and specialists from Hutchinson, St. Joseph, Kansas City and Newton will be associated with the medical staff. A large majority of the physicians of McPherson and surrounding territory have pledged their influence, sympathy, and financial support. This institution will be open alike to all patients and all honest, honorable physicians.

This project has been in contemplation for more than a year. Our Brethren could not well support a more worthy institution. They have long felt the need of it, the Church of the Brethren, being probably the only church of recognition which has not experienced the advantage of having such an establishment for the care of the sick and unfortunate. Christ was constantly ministering to the sick. Shall we not follow his example?

The interest and sympathy of the entire Brotherhood is invited to cooperate in this enterprise.

Members of committee: F. P. Detter, McPherson, Kans.; F. J. Price, McPherson, Kans.; W. C. Heaston, McPherson, Kans.; J. N. Dresher, McPherson, Kans.; J. D. Yoder, Conway, Kans.; D. M. Eller, Larned, Kans.

NOW IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Our work at Ft. McKinley closed on the evening of Dec. 17, after having preached nineteen sermons. As a visible result of the efforts of the Brethren there a sister was baptized on the 11th, and a brother the following Sunday, Dec. 19. My stay among the Brethren was pleasant, and I shall ever remember their hearty cooperation and kindness shown me.

This congregation has lost quite a few of the fathers and mothers in Israel during the past year, but the younger workers are being bold of the work and are upholding the "Banner of Christ" successfully.

From here I came to Beech Grove in Darke County, beginning on Sunday, Dec. 18, and closing on the evening of Dec. 29, giving three sermons each evening. Several day meetings took place. It was the general expression of all that these meetings closed too soon, but on account of former promises I was obliged to leave for home.

A few, we know, were counting the cost and our prayer is that they may yet give their hearts to God and unite with the church. The ministers at Beech Grove are Eli Moses Hollinger and Andrew Petry. Bro. Hollinger is in his eighty-third year, but is quite active, filling his appointments and is doing good work. Bro. Petry is young, but is giving able assistance. At their last council meeting an effort was made to elect another minister, but they failed. This is to be regretted, for conditions are such that they may be without the needed ministerial help a very short time.

During my nine weeks' stay in Ohio I preached 71 sermons and visited in 182 homes in four different congregations. The experience has been helpful, to me at least, and I am well repaid for the assistance rendered.

Arriving home Dec. 30, and spending a few days over New Year pleasantly at home, I came to Little Swatara (Union house) and began a series of meetings Jan. 2, to continue indefinitely. John C. Zug.

Lebanon, Pa., R. D. 2, Jan. 3.

PRAIRIE CITY, IOWA.

Our council was held Dec. 10. We had a pleasant meeting. Eld. I. W. Brubaker presided. It was the time to elect officers for the Sunday-school and the Christian Workers' Meeting. Sister Nora Alexander and Bro. Carl Elrod are our superintendents; for the Christian Workers' Meeting, Bro. Chas. Colyn and Bro. Earl Brubaker were chosen presidents.

Letters were granted to Bro. I. W. Brubaker and wife, and their daughter, Sister Reba. We regret very much to have these worthy people leave us, as they have been identified with this church for several years, and have done much for the upbuilding and growth of the church. We will miss our dear sister in many ways, but particularly in the service. They go from here to Grundy Center, to take up the work there. Our best wishes go with them.

Bro. W. L. Buckingham was unanimously chosen as our elder. With him and our dear Sister Buckingham we are left in good hands. They have been with about three years, and have been a great help in our church, in their consecrated lives.

One dear young sister has been buried with Christ in Christian baptism. This sister is an example to many who are in the church today. The fashions of the world she has all laid aside,—her jewelry too. She worships the Christ. It was no cross for her to lay it all aside. Her face radiates with light, she sang a solo in the Christian Workers' Meeting the same evening, "And Shall I Go Back into the World? Oh No, Not I." Her attitude in dress gave evidence of the inward and outward determination to stand firm for Jesus. Jennie Alexander.

R. D. 2, Monroe, Iowa, Dec. 30.

FROM CHICO, CAL.

It seems as if California is a paradise for many people during the winter months. Here we find climatic conditions better than in the North and East. I found the weather mild,—more like spring than winter. The farmers are still hauling in various kind of vegetables, fruits, etc., making it seem as though we were in the midst of spring and summer.

This is a beautiful country, and very productive. Some of the large ranches are being subdivided into small tracts, giving many an opportunity to get a piece of land, which will make them fine homes, and also afford an independent livelihood, besides an ample income.

We have a fine church building here in town, which will be dedicated about March 1. At that time a series of sermons will be given us by Bro. Lehman England, of Lordsburg. The membership, as yet, is small, but the prospects are bright for a strong church. Several families will move here in the spring, which will be a great help to us. Our Sunday-school is well attended. The average attendance is about sixty, and a good interest is manifested.

One thing we are sorry for is, that so many of the parents stay away and send their children. This is a very objectionable practice, not only tolerated here, but at many other places.

Chico is a flourishing town of about 15,000 inhabitants. Some of them worship at the different churches, but many go somewhere else to stay a few hours on Sunday. This is a good mission field for a loyal, wide-awake minister. If any members in any part of the country expect to locate in California, come to Chico before deciding to locate elsewhere. We need you here, as the field is large, and the workers few. Wm. R. Kindig.

MISSIONARIES WANTED

You don't have to go to India or China or Africa and endure privation and suffer hardship to be a missionary. You can do the best kind of missionary work right at home, and you won't need any preparation or previous training either. All you need to do is to use a little of your spare time and a little of your surplus cash.

One of the best missionaries to the home that we know of is the Gospel Messenger. It preaches several sermons each week and every person that reads it, besides containing interesting bits of news and timely articles on up-to-date subjects.

This paper does not have the circulation that its worth deserves; possibly the reason for this is that a good many people do not know of its value, and thus are not aware of the benefit they are missing.

OUR PROPOSITION IS THIS

We will offer the Gospel Messenger for only 50 cents a year if sent into homes where there are no members of the Church of the Brethren. This fact of course is to be mentioned when sending in your orders.

Why not take advantage of this special offer and BE A MISSIONARY? If each present subscriber would send in but ONE subscription we would double our list, and the good derived could not be estimated.

Will You Be a Missionary?

A Twentieth Century Allegory.

Mr. World and Miss Church-Member

By Rev. W. S. Harris.

It is a forcible allegory, somewhat after the style of Pilgrim's Progress, but in no sense an imitation of it. Fathers and mothers, it is the book that you should get for your son and daughter, and at the same time read it yourself. You will be eager for the church after having read it. It illustrates vividly how Satan lures the church member, step by step, from the pure Gospel, till finally he is lost forever.

Illustrated by 18 full-page drawings, the work of Paul J. Krafft.

Mount Zion.—The members of this congregation have great reasons to rejoice because of its successful year. We have been the means, through the power of God, to do much good in the Mount Zion congregation during the past three years. Two churchhouses have been built and 283 people have applied for church membership. All of them received Christian baptism, except fifteen who are still awaiting the rite. The prospect for the future is quite encouraging. The District Meeting of the Brethren District of Virginia will be held in the Mount Zion house, Page Co., Va., April 13 and 14.—Martin Rodhgin, Luray, Va., Jan. 7.

Organ Cave.—Jan. 7 Bro. A. T. Pursley, of Botetourt County, Va., came to us. He remained over night and held three very interesting meetings, while with us. People from different denominations came to hear the Gospel which he preached in the Word forcibly.—William Motzler, Organ Cave, Va., Jan. 9.

Pleasant Valley.—We met in council Jan. 2, with Eld. S. D. Miller presiding. Quite an amount of business was attended to. Four letters of membership were granted. Brethren D. M. Wright and D. A. Cline are the superintendents of our Sunday-school for this year. Brethren H. P. Gaster and H. F. Miller are the leaders for the Christian Workers' Meeting for six months.—Ruth E. Williams, Mount Sidney, Va., Jan. 9.

Services were held in the Pine Bluff schoolhouse. We had very good and inspiring sermons which were well attended. The writer, being isolated from the church, feels much encouraged by these meetings.—Mary Crist, Box 43, Clifty, W. Va., Jan. 10.

Maple Spring.—We began a Bible Term on Christmas Day, and closed on New Year's Day. Eld. C. D. Bonsack, of Union Bridge, Md., was with us. He took his period with the other home teachers.—Brethren Mahlon Weil, Jacob S. Rose, Seymour Hamstead and Washington Pike.—during the day, and preached for us each evening. Besides the work of the teachers each day, Eld. C. T. Pike talked twenty minutes on the subject, "The Church in Apostolic Times." Many queries, a recitation and an essay were given each day, with aftother twenty-minute period by various speakers. These instructive meetings will long be remembered. Visits from other congregations and other Districts were present. One was reclaimed. Bro. Bonsack installed Brethren Marshal Wolf and W. L. Teets, newly-elected ministers, to the first degree. We are still having very good meetings, conducted by Bro. James Hardy, of 306 Baltimore St., Kansas City, Kans. Bro. Hardy is a very plain speaker and is not slow about pointing out the truth. As this mission has been in need of sound doctrine, we are now getting some plain, forcible lessons, which are giving us much strength. We have had a good number and good attendance, and already nine precious souls have been added to our number by baptism. All but one are of mature age.

We have made many calls in the homes, and we find much sickness and many cases that are always appeals to us for help, because of a lack of work and illness. It is not often that we find our members suffering, and mothers weeping for want of food, but we find it here. We know of congregations in which all are in good circumstances, with plenty and to spare, but here we are in the midst of want and distress. Some of the brethren and sisters know of our needs and have helped us a little, and for all we know they have had a hand in helping to win souls to Christ among our meetings. Pray for the work in St. Joseph, that it may be the means of winning many souls for God's kingdom! E. N. Huffman.

TO THE CHURCHES WEST OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

I wish to announce that my health has improved, and that I can well endure the surrender of my time in the homeland to those churches desiring my services.

I am ready to visit all churches, in the territory outlined above, who may call, and are close enough together not to make the expense too great.

It would be well for churches, desiring my services, to correspond with near-by churches, to see if they also desire these meetings. I like to give about four lectures on China at each place. Part of them will be illustrated with stereoptician pictures, if so desired. All calls should be sent to me as below, as soon as possible, so that the itinerary can be completed. Geo. W. Hilton.

DISTRICT MEETING.	LOVE FEASTS.
April 13 and 14, Northern District of Virginia, at Mount Zion house, Page Co., Va.	California. Jan. 23, Reedley. Texas. Jan. 28, Kenedy.

PROHIBITION. IS IT RIGHT?

Yes! says Samuel Dickie, President of Albion College, Albion, Mich.

No! says David Rose, Mayor of Milwaukee, Wis.

In a pamphlet of one hundred and twenty-five pages is contained a full report of the speeches on both sides, by these distinguished gentlemen, in two debates, each of the debates was held in Milwaukee, Wis., March 26, 1909, and the other in Chicago, April 30, 1909.

Of President Dickie Judge Tarrant, Chairman of the meetings, says: "The affirmative of this question will be maintained by a gentleman of learning and ability, who enjoyed the honor of the chairmanship of the National Committee of the Prohibition Party for a period of twelve years. He is a distinguished educator and orator, and has brought to the study of the question involved all the talent and power which he possesses."

In introducing Mayor Rose he said, in part: "Throughout the country he is known, not only as our mayor, but as a great orator. Indeed, it has been asserted that his efforts at the national conventions of his party and at their assemblies have rarely been equalled or excelled."

Any one desiring to read the strongest arguments that can be produced on both sides of this great question can do no better than to send for this pamphlet.

AROUND THE WORLD

The International Sunday-school Convention for 1911.

Last year's convention at Washington aroused attention throughout the United States, and those of our Brethren who attended the gathering were much impressed by its far-reaching importance. This year's convention is to be held at San Francisco June 20-27, and it is expected that at least 10,000 delegates and other workers will be in attendance. The Sunday-school is a mighty factor in the world's evangelization. It has well been said that it is the largest and best organized army that ever marched under one banner for the Christian conquest of the world.

Growing Intemperance Among American Women.

Recently one of the financial leaders of Wall Street, referring to the strictly abstemious habits of his daily associates, so far at least as drink is concerned, expressed himself as follows: "A man, these strenuous days, must have the right use of his head on Wall Street. While the drink habit is decreasing more and more among men, it is, unfortunately, increasing rapidly among the women of the leisure class." The remarks just quoted are so generally confirmed by others, who have given the matter considerable attention, that there is surely abundant reason for alarm. When the mother of a family can stoop so low as to place herself on a level with the average saloon habitué, the hope of the race is seriously imperiled.

The Future of the Nation.

When a man like Senator Frye, who has known the intricacies of public affairs for many years, voices his anxiety for the future welfare of the republic, we may well ponder his words. In a recent speech he said: "I have begun to despair of the republic," basing his fears upon the open and undisguised corruption so lamentably permeating the political body. Only recently further evidences of brazen and undisguised bargaining in votes have challenged public attention. The authorities of our land,—we are glad to say,—have taken prompt cognizance of the crooked ways of the political demagogue, and it is altogether likely that there will be an early change for the better. At any rate it is well, in this time of special need, to remember in our prayers, those in authority, that due wisdom be given them to administer the affairs of the nation.

"Let All the People Sing!"

Some of the most influential English ministers are troubled because "quartettes and soloists are destroying congregational singing." They insist that the question is a momentous one, because nothing can take the place of the uplifting and cheering strains that waft the heart from the narrow confines of earth to the very gate of heaven, as the congregation, with one heart and one voice, breaks out in a rapture of song. Dr. Dale, of England, fittingly says: "There is unbounded power in the hymns sung by the entire congregation. No other part of the worship can draw believers so closely together as the unison of their voices in sacred song." In the early centuries of the Christian church much attention was given to the song service, in which all most heartily joined. Well might Paul impress upon the congregations of Christ's believers of, his day this important part of worship, entreating them to "teach and admonish one another in psalms and hymns, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord."

Missionary Progress in Japan.

There is being enacted, in the "Land of the Rising Sun," a transformation at once suggestive and far-reaching. The condition of things, at present, is a marvelous parallel to the condition of classical time's when Christianity grappled with old Rome. Then, as the same veneration of the Emperor and love of country, but there is also the same breaking up of the old system under the pressure of new ideas, with the possibility of intellectual and moral wreck resulting,—agnosticism, naturalism, libertinism. Great men,—like Count Okuma and others,—look on amazed. They realize that a new era is upon them, and wonder whether the new men will drift, for evidently they have lost their anchorage. Buddhism is effete, Confucianism is unprogressive, so the future of Japan is dependent upon Christianity. The church of Christ must, in some way, inspire Japan with an elemental faith in the Prince of Peace. The people must be led to see that, in loving entreaty, "he would draw all men unto him."

A Religious Campaign for North America.

Recognizing the fact that there are 3,000,000 less men and boys than women and girls in the churches of North America, there was recently organized, in Chicago, the "Men and Religion Forward Movement." Its promoters aim, by further organization, to cover Canada and the United States in one, comprehensive evangelistic campaign. Undoubtedly some good will be accomplished by an effort of this kind, though it is to be regretted that the popular revivalists in their monster meetings, do not always measure up to Paul's injunction, "Preach the Word," nor do they declare "all the counsel of God."

How Kansas Protects the People.

Wild-cat corporations are not likely to prosper in Kansas. The State bank examiner announces that his department is ready to secure all possible information about corporations, the shares and bonds of which are offered for sale. Already thousands of dollars have been saved to the people of the State by the prompt disclosure of crooked corporations, and it would seem that other States might well follow the good example of this flourishing western State. Then, too, the thought occurs to us that many who claim to be Christians could well and profitably invest at least a share of their funds in the "Bank of Heaven,"—an institution that is absolutely safe and pays the highest dividends.

Mohammedan Activity in Northern India.

The recent organization of Mohammedans, for an effective propaganda of their doctrines in Northern India and elsewhere, deserves serious attention because of the exceedingly active campaign that is contemplated. The association was founded at Delhi under the name of "Nadwet ul Ulema," and has for its aim the publication of "(1) a correct translation of the Koran,"—evidently one best suited to their purposes; "(2) a strong and forcible defense of Islam against the attacks of its European adversaries." It will readily be seen that a real struggle is to be entered into by the followers of the prophet, and any one who knows the intense zeal and blind fanaticism of the average Moslem, is fully aware of the result likely to follow. For any missionary who comes in contact with the forces of Islam, the new movement will mean redoubled efforts and never-ceasing vigilance, but the "Lo, I am with you" is Christ's never-failing assurance of ultimate victory.

America's Feverish Unrest.

Our Canadian neighbors, instead of envying our riches and power, are pointing to the United States as a fearful example of many evils that the Dominion may well avoid. While ours is the richest country in the world, inhabited by the most enterprising people of history, and can boast of the most marvelous industrial development, we are said to be the most unquiet and dissatisfied. Extravagance, overcapitalization and the crooked deals of high finance and politics are ruining the country,—so we are told by the Canadian correspondent of the London Times who makes use of the opportunity to warn the people of Canada, lest they fall into the same deplorable condition. Sometimes it is well "to see ourselves as others see us," but we should not forget to apply needed remedies. "Provide things honest in the sight of all men," is a scriptural injunction that would go far, if fully observed, to restore business to safe and conservative channels, and reduce the nervous tension so painfully evident.

Practical Value of Missions.

Occasionally opponents of missions advance the claim that mission schools undermine the constitution of native children,—that their heart and mind are weakened at the expense of the rugged health previously enjoyed. Commissioners appointed by the South African Federation of States have thoroughly investigated this matter, and report that the charge is altogether wholly erroneous. In practically every case there has been a change for the better. Cleanliness, good morals, and plain, nourishing food have done much for Africa's children at the various mission schools, and with religious training they are likely to be a power for good in the future. We are also assured by the commissioners that leprosy is disappearing before the advance of civilization. In districts where the population is chiefly Christian, and where orderly conditions are established, it is dying out, while in the uncivilized, heathen districts, where the people live amid filthy surroundings, and subsist on poorly prepared food, the disease is undoubtedly spreading. In Africa, as well as elsewhere, mission work proves its value by its fruits. "Godliness is profitable in all things."

Threatening Plague in Manchuria.

Bubonic plague, at present prevailing throughout Manchuria, is threatening to become an international danger unless foreign control is speedily made available. Chinese authorities are unable to cope with the disease. Ignorant themselves, they will not permit European and American physicians to carry out needed provisions of prevention, or possible cure. We have, in the conduct of these officials, a forcible illustration of the danger of ignorance, when it stubbornly refuses to make use of proffered remedies. A prophet of old made the sad and mournful plaint, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." It might be said, with equal truthfulness, of thousands today who willfully and deliberately close eye and ear to the reception of knowledge so freely presented to them.

Millions of Children Not in Sunday-school.

One would scarcely believe that in this land of Bibles and religious privileges more than 8,000,000 children are not under Sunday-school influences. According to a report of Rev. David O. Downey, secretary of the Sunday-school Board of the Methodist church, this surprisingly large number of young people, between the ages of five and eighteen years, are not found in the Sunday-schools of either the Roman Catholic or the Protestant churches. Over 1,000,000 children in the States of Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Washington and Oregon,—two-thirds of the child population of those States,—are not enrolled in the Sunday-schools. New York has 250,000 children as yet not reached by religious influences. Among the colored children of the nation 3,000,000 are outside of the Sunday-school. These are figures that should cause serious thought. Every congregation of the Church of the Brethren may well look to its own field of labor, to see if the children are all found in the Sunday-school. As far back as in the days of Moses the value of imparting religious truths to children was fully recognized, for the ancient lawgiver tersely says: "Teach them diligently to thy children."

Another Gift for Humanity's Welfare.

The Research Institute at Washington,—specially organized for the discovery and application of knowledge pertaining to man's welfare,—has just received $500,000 more from its founder, Andrew Carnegie, which makes a total of $25,000,000 donated by this liberal giver. The institution will now be enabled to make most extensive researches along various lines, and much benefit to humanity will doubtless be realized. At Mount Wilson, Cal., an observatory was established by the institute, and here Prof. Hale has been doing some important work, discovering thousands of heavenly bodies not hitherto known. A new telescope, far more powerful than any yet known, is now under construction, and, when completed, untold possibilities will likely be revealed to the eye of man. The study of the starry firmament has always been of intense interest to man. It is said that no astronomer has ever given serious thought to God's mighty handiwork in the heavens without being deeply impressed by the power and majesty of the Great Creator who is able to fling legions of heavenly bodies into space and keep them in their orbits. Well might David say, after a contemplation of the starry firmament, "The heavens declare the glory of God."

Rebuilding of Pompeii.

So much praise and financial encouragement has been bestowed upon the rebuilders of Pompeii, that the city's complete restoration has recently been decided upon. Not only will private houses be restored to their pristine freshness, but the great public buildings, the forum, and even the city's walls, are to appear in their original state,—just as they were before the sable mantle of ashes and lava hid them for centuries from the eye of mortal man. Archæologists have been busy at Pompeii since 1861 and up to the present high half of its streets have been laid bare. Many of the buildings have already been fully restored, and afford a fair insight into the life of luxury and ease that prevailed in the fated city before the great eruption of Vesuvius sealed its doom. The House of Vettius, the founder of the house of the Vettii, has been so completely rehabilitated that every detail of the palatial residence appears in its original beauty. And yet, the marble statues, the beautiful frescoes, the sparkling fountains, and the many other attractions, are but mute witnesses to the fact that the life of luxury and ease, indulged in by the wealthy Pompeiians of old, met with a sudden and unexpected end,—a lesson that needs to be remembered in this pleasure-loving age when too many are "lovers of self, rather than lovers of God."

Help Somebody.

SELECTED BY MARY M. COLAN.

Do a kindness for your neighbor
Every time you can;
Give a greeting to the stranger,
He's your fellow-man;
Break your box of alabaster;
Thus your kindness show:
Scatter seed of fellow-feeling
Everywhere you go.

If perchance you meet a brother
Fallen in disgrace;
He was once some mother's darling,
Held in fond embrace;
Tell the wayward one of Jesus—
How he loved him so;
Tell it out with joy and gladness
Everywhere you go.

If you meet a fallen sister,
Take her by the hand;
Point her to the home up yonder,
Blessed Beulah land!
Do by her as Jesus taught you,
While on earth below;
Raise the fallen, cheer the fainting
Everywhere you go.

Help the heathen in his blindness,
Teach him you're his friend;
Throw the lifeline of salvation,
Hold the other end!
Draw him out of superstition,
Land him safe and sure
On the Rock of Ages shield him,
Evermore secure.

The Fate of the Jews as a Nation.

BY JAMES A. SELL.

ABRAHAM, the lone Chaldean wanderer, became the founder of the Hebrew nation. His history reveals many interesting incidents. In the beginning, even before a son was born, promises of future greatness were made by one who holds the destinies of nations in his hands. Between the promises and their fulfillment lay captivities, prisons, exiles and slavery.

Jacob, who bore the mantle of his distinguished ancestor in perpetuating the race, and building up the nation, with a broken heart gave up his beloved son, Joseph, as dead, only to find him afterwards possessed of royal honor and power, to save the entire family when wasting famine had deprived them of all their resources. Though he drank deeply the bitter cup of bereavement, the slow development of years showed plainly the overruling of Providence. The close of his life was serene, but left his children,—the germ of the future nation,—in a strange land, remote from the fulfillment of the promise made.

As the years passed by, and sons and daughters came into the families, the rod of oppression lay heavily upon them. Their condition seemed hopeless. They groaned in their bondage, and their cries called to heaven for deliverance. A deliverer appeared in helpless infancy, floating in a little barge all his own. In this little ark lay a leader, statesman, warrior, poet and lawgiver, unequaled by none in the history of the world. In his helplessness he was watched over by his sister. Cared for in his early life by his mother, he was later adopted into the royal family of the enemies of his people, and educated in the schools of the world's most profound scholars.

But the extravagance of wealth did not spoil him. Worldly honors did not harden his heart, neither did worldly education turn his mind and soul away from his downtrodden people. He cast aside the robes of royalty, and left the palace of princes and nobles to enter upon a work for which, in the wonder-working and sovereign power and wisdom of God, he was designed and brought up. He entered upon his work and after a trying experience of forty years' duration, led his people to the border of the promised inheritance. Here his work closed, and he surrendered to a foe whose stroke is irresistible. The great, wise, patient and strong man died in full view of the place of promise, but he could not enter. "And no man knoweth his sepulcher unto this day."

When Moses reached the climax of his achievements and glory, and his body found a resting place in the land of Moab, "over against Bethpeor," the host of Israel was not far from the Promised Land, but the turbid Jordan rolled between, and the place was in the possession of bitter foes. Joshua, who, in all the trials of the tedious journey, stood firmly by the great leader and who rose above all others by his inherent greatness, now took the helm of leadership in his own hands. Spies were sent out to view conditions and note the strong and weak points affecting military operations.

Here occurred one of those little things so common in the history of this great nation, which, in the chain of God's providences, counts so much in the final consummation. A harlot concealed the spies, and, because of her kindness, "perished not with them that believed not," but afterwards became the first convert to the Jewish faith, the ancestral mother of David, and thus, in the end, of our Lord.

Their enemies were subdued through many hard-fought battles, and the land became theirs both by conquest and inheritance.

After a prosperous sojourn of many years, in which God's promise to Abraham was verified, and of which history records the most interesting and sterling events, they at last fell into the abominable sins of their idolatrous neighbors. When they heeded not the warnings of messengers and prophets, God, as a punishment, sent their enemies upon them. Nebuchadnezzar, with a mighty army, invaded their country and waged a warfare that ended in almost entire extermination. Those who escaped the edge of the sword were carried captive to the Chaldean country, from the place of the nativity of their distinguished founder who, at the call of God, started on a journey not knowing "whither he went," to become the founder of this nation.

This is known in history as the Babylonish Captivity. Here, as exiles in a strange land, with their national existence destroyed, their religious privileges circumscribed, their magnificent temple in ruins, and the priesthood buried under its rubbish, they sat by the rivers in heart loneliness, hung their harps upon the willows, and wept when they remembered Zion.

Their condition now was dark and doleful. They were in the bonds of slavery, as their fathers were in Egypt. Darkness was upon them. Dark forebodings confronted them, and a still darker future awaited them. But a merciful God still saw and pitied them. His prophets were sent with promises and messages of comfort, predicting a return to their own beloved land once more.

After a sojourn of seventy years in a strange land, they began to see the dawning of a better day. God put it into the heart of a heathen ruler,—Cyrus, king of Persia, not only to permit them to return to their own country, but to assist them in rebuilding their temple. This interesting event was expected and hailed with pleasure, because it was predicted by the prophets. It was the burden of the poet's sweetest songs.

This return from hostile lands and taking up their abode in their own beloved home, forms an epoch around which cluster sweet and sad and sacred memories. The nation again rose to greatness, but finally became subject to the Romans, whose proud empire extended over the whole eastern world.

When Christ came, the Jews expected in him a deliverer from the Roman yoke. Failing in this, they rejected him, and put him to death. "He came unto his own, and his own received him not," and as a result they again lost their country and nationality.

Today the Jews are a scattered, rejected, persecuted and yet a numerous people. What are their hopes or destiny? Who knows? Are there any prophecies, as yet unfulfilled, to give them hope? Many Bible students see in the prophecies of the Old Testament a promise that they shall again return to Canaan, possess the land, rebuild the Temple and become a prosperous nation. But how are we to distinguish between the promises that refer to the return from the Babylonish Captivity and those that refer to the present dispersion? How is it to be known with any degree of certainty?

Hollidaysburg, Pa.

A Devout Worshiper.

BY A. G. CROSSWHITE.

JUST across the Rio Grande from El Paso, Texas, to the South, is a Mexican city with a name which is hard to spell or to pronounce, unless you do like everybody else,—call it "Würrez" and go on. It has a fine customhouse, postoffice and other public buildings, but most of its 11,000 inhabitants are content to live in adobe (sun-dried brick) buildings, as their forefathers did, 2,000 years ago.

Bull fights are engaged in as freely as in the days of Maximilian and the chimes ring out from the tower of the old Spanish cathedral, Guadeloupe, as in days of old. We visited this Catholic shrine of worship a few years ago and carried away a memory that is hard to describe to others.

The first impression, on entering, is disappointment. The interior is by no means in keeping with the exterior, for it appears to be a place to stand rather than to sit. True, a few rough seats are arranged around the walls, each having the accustomed foot rest or kneeling place, while prayers are offered or mass is said.

Passing in front of the gilded altars, and on into the right transept, our attention was riveted upon a large bronze image of a patron saint, who was unconsciously receiving the devotions of a bronzed Mexican worshiper. He was kneeling at first, then prostrate, then crossing himself, and with rapid gyrations, uttering prayers that produced no effect whatever upon the countenance of his dead father.

Louder and louder he prayed and the tears came hot and fast, but no loving arms were extended to him,—probably no such thing was expected,—but still he lingered. If he saw us watching him he made no demonstration, neither did time seem precious, for we grew tired of watching the poor, deluded soul and walked away, leaving him to work out his own problems. Ephraim "joined to his idols" was our first and last thought.

When it is understood that this whole country is given over to priestcraft and gross immorality, the cause of such superstition and hero worship becomes a burning question. They are our border neighbors and the light from our altars should easily shine across the river to them, but does it?

We inquired of some, who rather favored the heathenish custom of bull-fighting in this city, why the Government permitted such bloody, cruel scenes, and on the Sabbath at that. The prompt reply came that the people of the States support the practice, to a great extent, and that the boxes that rented highest were nearly all held by Americans, who brought their whole families and spent many of their Sundays there.

Many have been watching, with nervous anxiety, the movements of the "Mormons" in trying to get a foothold down there. This human curse is even more to be deplored than the cruelty to animals and must be stamped out at any sacrifice. The religion of Jesus Christ is the only remedy; and our self-sacrificing brethren, who are first on the scene, must be liberally supported, both by our prayers and our money. May the Holy Spirit push the work!

Palestine Modernized.

BY W. R. MILLER.

MUCH could be written on the new condition of things everywhere present and apparent in the Palestine of today. Agriculture shows many signs of improvement; modern plows, wagons, etc., are not uncommon in many localities, especially those places where German and Jewish colonies are located. Then there are the modern schools, and in these schools, perhaps, are the most hopeful signs. It may be said of the American school at Beirut, that there are accommodations for some nine hundred young men. I never looked on a more impressive sight than a four o'clock chapel service, where above seven hundred splendid young men from fourteen different countries, sang gospel songs together, listened to the reading of the Bible, and engaged in prayers in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. Mohammedan and Jew, Greek and Protestant, Armenian and Coptic, Abyssinian and Arab, publican and sinner,—all sat together in this religious service.

All branches are taught in the English language, for the reason that many of the languages represented in the school do not have adequate textbooks, so the English text was adopted and all students, as a result, in a little while speak English fairly well,—some fluently. Schools are located for boys and girls at Jerusalem, Ramallah and Nazareth, and, perhaps, at other places. Schools for girls in this country are certainly innovations, especially since girls are considered of so little importance,—as mere chattels or slaves. It is regarded as a calamity when girls are born in a family.

A railroad from Damascus to Mecca (the birthplace of Mohammed), thirteen hundred miles long, is in operation. There is one from Beirut to Aleppo and Damascus, another from Haifa through the plains of Esdraelon to the Sea of Galilee, and on eastward to the road south from Damascus, and lastly a road from Jaffa to Jerusalem. These are all in operation today. Then the Germans are building a road from Constantinople to Aleppo, which will be finished in the near future. Another road is also projected from Damascus to Baghdad on the Tigris River, some six hundred miles, and from Baghdad to the Persian Gulf, about three hundred miles south of Baghdad. Should these last-named two stretches of road be built, it will be possible to go from London to India by rail, with the exception of five days' sea voyage through the Persian Gulf and the Arabian Sea. This will also open up large and valuable tracts of agricultural lands in the Euphrates Valley, the Turkish Government having already employed one of England's best engineers, Sir William Willcocks, to look into the irrigating of the splendid wheat lands of the Euphrates Valley.

But the most vital question to the Bible student, it seems to me, is not so much the modernizing of the country, but the vast number of Jews added to the country's population each year, which fact is very apparent to those who pay visits to Palestine from time to time. Four years ago there were but few Jews around the Sea of Galilee, excepting those in Tiberias; today there are three colonies north and west of the south end of the sea. And what may be said of this district can be said of many places. I am told that there are now thirty-four Jewish colonies in Palestine proper, all of which seem to be prosperous, and growing with each year's influx, which is estimated at about ten thousand. There are more than one hundred thousand Jews in these colonies and cities, principally in the City of Jerusalem, which, from best authority, approximates nearly sixty thousand. Fully ninety per cent of the business of this city is in the hands of the Jews, which is clearly demonstrated on Saturdays, when nearly all business houses are closed, as the Jews are exceedingly orthodox, and strictly observe their Sabbath. They have many schools for both boys and girls, and their children are well educated, especially in the languages. One Jewish professor told me that they teach their children at least five languages. Any evening during the week, one may go north and west of the city to the New Jerusalem, which has sprung up in the last few years, and see the army of Jewish children returning to their homes from school. Two things are impressed on the mind, viz., that the Jews believe in schools, and that there is no "race suicide" among these Jerusalem Jews.

To very many Bible students this great influx of these interesting people to their own land and into the very city to which their Messiah came and was rejected by them signifies that in the economies of God we are in the budding time of God's own Son returning to this very place; making Acts 1:11 living, angelic words, though spoken more than nineteen hundred years ago, and here I repeat them, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." I know that this interpretation will not suit those who have figured out that the return of the Jews to the favor of God is spiritual, rather than literal and physical. If this be so, then the holding of the Jews in separation and distinction through the most wonderful, remarkable, and unique history of any people, known in the world's history, has no significance and meaning, many prophecies are unintelligible and meaningless, and the return of many more Jews to Palestine today, than were carried into the Babylonian captivity is only an incident in this people's history; having no Biblical significance. Then there are those,—friends of the literal restoration of the Jews to their land, to their Holy City, and the favor of God,—who believe that soon Christ will come again, that "a nation shall be born in a day," and that the Jews will be the missionaries in the New Dispensation. Being educated in all the languages of the world, they would be peculiarly fitted for the great work in which the Gentile world has so signally failed, viz., "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Whichever of these theories is correct, I am not in a position to say, but the fact stands out prominently that the "remnant,"—God's own chosen people,—are returning to Palestine in large numbers, and occupying the land.

A sketch of our ten days' horseback trip through Philistia will be included in my next article.

The "Call" to Preach.

BY O. S. VANIMAN.

RECENTLY I came across the following from the pen of Rev. Lewis G. Wilson. It certainly contains food for thought. I would like to submit it to the GOSPEL MESSENGER readers, allowing each to draw his own conclusion:

"The current discussion concerning the lack of young men for the ministry reveals the fact that we are dealing with a complex and many-sided situation. The problem which is presented is not one which yields to simple solution, like the improvement of the economic conditions of the ministry. It and its corollaries are related to the whole fabric of society, Catholic and Protestant, orthodox and heterodox. The ministry is replenished and the pulpit is reinforced from the social aggregate; but if society contains little or no material for the making of ministers, the pulpit must go a-begging.

"The character of any age is determined not so much by the thoughts as by the desires of the age immediately before it. To have a great school of artists, there must appear a company of men and women who yearn for the creation of the beautiful. To have a generation of great theologians, there must first arrive a group of Monicas, Jeanne Le-Franc, and Esther Stoddards.

"In short, society furnishes what is truly desired by its members. To account for the falling off in any profession or 'calling,' it is pertinent to ask if anything has been 'called' for. There are natal and prenatal reasons why so few young men care to enter a profession which finds its greatest satisfaction in 'things not seen.' The fathers and mothers of the last thirty years, perhaps, have not been longing for ministers. Too many have been praying for fortunes, luxuries, pleasures, freedom to indulge in each new device for amusement, exemption from responsibility, superficial titles, decorations and society favors. And the type of the modern young man,—dapper, sophisticated, well-groomed, luxurious and selfish,—is the answer to such prayers.

"To have a Christian minister for a son was once the almost unspeakable glory of the average mother. To have a son who may turn out to be nothing but a minister is, all too often today, to have made a mess of it. 'What a pity! Poor woman, how happy she would have been if Charles had tried the stock exchange!' The actual desires of one generation—desires that are cherished by parents and cultivated during the adolescence of their offspring—determines, far more than most people realize, the general character of the succeeding generation. If there are not enough ministers, one reason, at least, is because there are not a sufficient number who have heard any 'call' to become ministers from the world that has created them."

Christ as a Pastor.

BY JOHN W. WAYLAND.

"I am the good shepherd." John 10: 11.

IN all, there are a hundred or more names and terms employed in the Bible to designate the Son of God; but there seems to be one that he himself uses in reference to himself with special feeling of appropriateness. He speaks of himself as the Son of Man, the Bread of Life, the True Vine, and the Light of the World. All these terms are true, strong, and deeply expressive; yet it is with particular earnestness and tenderness that he dwells upon his character and offices as the Good Shepherd. It is not as the Great Teacher, the Great Orator, the Great Preacher—though he was all these—that he presents himself to us; but it is as the Good Shepherd, the Good Pastor.

As the Good Shepherd he says of himself, "I know my sheep." What a desirable and helpful acquaintance! So well does he know them that he is able to call each one of them by name. What a power for enlisting sympathy and stimulating service! And he is known no less intimately by the members of his fold. "I am known of mine," he declares. How many pastors are able to measure up to this standard? Those who can do so are possessed of a wondrous secret,—the secret of power with men. The pastor who can take the hand of each member of his flock, look each one steadily in the eye and call his name with sincere confidence,—that pastor has a great power for helpfulness and leadership. No greater secret has ever been learned for Christian service; and this one has been learned, whenever learned, from Christ, the Great Teacher, the Good Pastor.

"I am the door of the sheep," says the Good Shepherd. He is the one by whom the heavenly fold is entered. Without him no man can enter fully into the Father's presence. "I am the way, and the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." And again he says: "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."

The good shepherd gives his life for the sheep, if necessary. Christ, the Good Shepherd, actually did this. In doing so he proved that the welfare of the flock is his chief concern. Not wealth, not honor, not material interests, but the flock: this is the good shepherd's joy and crown. With such intimate acquaintance existing between the pastor and the individuals composing his flock—he knows them as individuals, not as groups—it is but natural that mutual affection should grow strong. The average pastor has to do, and ought to do, a great deal more living than dying for his people; yet mutual acquaintance and mutual love make either living or dying the natural and proper thing, according to circumstances.

"And other sheep I have," declares the Good Shepherd, "which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd."

Likely we are some of the "other sheep." How much we owe to the Good Shepherd! Had Christ been satisfied with the people of his own race, humanly speaking, where would we all be today? If Christ had said, "Israel is enough," how should we find favor with him? The good pastor may have a large congregation and love it, but he still, if he has the Christ spirit, is longing to lead other souls into the Kingdom. No congregation, no church, no denomination ever gets large enough, or ever gets all the people in it who are worth saving, if it is permeated with the Christ spirit. "We are the people," and we alone, is not a declaration to be made in the presence of the Good Shepherd. The "one fold" is not made to fit one class or one nation; but all clases and all nations must come into it. The "one shepherd" is not a Jew nor a Greek nor a barbarian nor an American: he is the Son of Man, the Savior of the world. Progress toward heaven means progress in charity and unity of spirit, if not in organization. If men of different names hate one another on earth, it is hard to see how they will love one another in heaven. The love of the Good Shepherd for the "other sheep" not only explains his "Go ye into all the world," but it also explains his coming into the world. Had not his love been broad enough to include the "other sheep," it would not have been strong enough to save us—supposing now that we are "the people," and not the "other sheep."

The Good Shepherd of the sheep "leadeth them out." In the fold may be safety and ease, but service may be outside. Food and strength may also come in the process of "leading them out." The figure here is difficult to adjust to the fact. "Leading out" does not mean to the Christian leaving the church, but it means direction and guardianship so far as Christ is concerned, and it means obedient service so far as the follower is concerned.

And "when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them." The Good Shepherd does not drive; he leads. He does not go one way, while the sheep go another, but he goes before and shows the way they are to take. His going before means more than the words he speaks, however potent these may be. Going before is a sign of the good shepherd; going before means a life given to the flock; going before is the only successful way. It is the way of the Good Shepherd.

BY C. ALBERT HOFFMAN.

WHILE riding on an elevated car in Chicago, my manner of attire attracted the attention of the trainman. When we came to a place where there were no stops for a few minutes, he sat down by my side and inquired to what organization I belonged. I told him the Church of the Brethren. He was a man interested in religion and wanted to know the faith and creed of the church. I began as best I could, but I had not said many words until he said, "Something like the Dunkards." I told him that that was it exactly. He then gave me his opinion of our blessed Fraternity. He said that he had known our people for years, and admired and highly respected them.

I was on my way to the dedication of the new building of Bethany Bible School and I had taken the wrong car. He very kindly and in a Christian way told me how to get there. Of course, I wondered to what church he belonged and upon inquiring I was a little surprised when he said he was a Roman Catholic. He did not seem to care because I was a Protestant, for he begged of me to pray for the people who had to work on Sunday and were not permitted to attend church services. As I left the car, he grasped my hand in such a way that there was a feeling and warmth expressed that it has not been my privilege often to enjoy in greeting our own brethren and sisters. From what I had been taught and what I had heard concerning the Catholics, I hardly expected such kind treatment from one of their number. I gained a lesson from this. We should exercise more love towards all with whom we come in contact. Things are accomplished by genuine Christian love which otherwise would never be accomplished.

Now comes the part of my story that is not so pleasant. Not long ago a certain person made this statement to me, "I used to think that the 'Dunkards' were pretty good people, but since I have lived among them so long, I have found that they are no better than any other people." The saddest part of it is that this person is not a Christian, and, I believe, fails to make a profession largely because of the wrong kind of fruit which some of our members have borne.

But some one may say, "Smaller things than that have kept some persons from coming into the church." But I believe we can count people by the score and even by the hundred, who do not accept Christ because of the ungodly lives of some professing Christians. While there is no good reason why people should reject the church, simply because there are some hypocrites in it, yet, didn't you find things looked differently after you were in the church from what they were befpre? Some buildings look entirely different after you are on the inside of them, from what you judged they might be while looking on them from without. Didn't Christ teach that "by their fruits ye shall know them?" Then, when church members bring forth such fruits as "envyings," "strife," and "hatred," even towards each other, how can we expect the soul that is getting tired of sin, to turn to the church for comfort, when it sees the works of the flesh manifested by those who claim to be bringing forth the fruits of the Spirit? They have a reason for not looking to the church.

But isn't there something wrong with the church that allows the works of the flesh to be brought forth by its members? Gal. 5: 21 teaches that those who do the works of the flesh shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Should the church keep such persons in the fold, and try to make them believe that they can go to heaven, while others, who might be saved, are kept from salvation? What is the remedy?

BY MINERVA METZGER.

IT is almost three months since I left the homeland. Many and varied have been my experiences since then. Five weeks were spent in travel on land and sea, the rest in my new home. My voyage was very pleasant, except one day on the small Japanese boat, coming from Japan to Tientsin. The Yellow Sea was very rough, and all but one of the eight passengers had rather unpleasant feelings about meal time. Nor was I alone on the voyage. He who has promised to be with his children was very near. Others, on the same boat, were going to the same land, for the same purpose,—to lead these poor, benighted ones into the Kingdom of Light and Life. There were thirty missionaries on board. A few others had started alone. God gave us to each other, and we had some very spiritual, quiet hours together. Each evening, as others gathered for the card party, the dance, or some other worldly amusement, we went out to the prow or stern and there, alone with the Father, talked of heavenly things, prayed and sang together. How sweet the fellowship of Christians!

> "Blest be the tie that binds,
> Our hearts in Christian love.
> The fellowship of kindred minds
> Is like to that above."

In the cabin opposite mine was a Chinese girl, who had studied two years in America. She was very intelligent. Her pure, simple life and her faith in God showed what the blood of Jesus Christ can do for these despised people. Her father toiled many years before there were any visible returns. For twenty-eight years he went out into the village each day, through all kinds of weather, telling his people about Jesus, before there was even one convert. Now Christians are counted by the hundreds there. Often, as it grew dark and the storm raged, the mother would gather her little ones around her and pray that God would bring her husband safe home. "Faith of our fathers, holy faith!"

How very impatient we are for results! Sometimes we almost give up in despair, thinking that all our efforts are in vain,—the people will not believe. We forget that God's ways are not our ways and that he has a part in the saving of souls. We need only do ours,—not his, too. We are commanded to go and preach. Unto us is given "the ministry of reconciliation."

We have many evidences of what God has done for his people. We know that his promises are sure. Oh, for the faith of Abraham! What evidence did he have, when called to leave his country and go to the land which God would give him? It was Livingstone who said that the time would come when in those wild African towns men would have a convert for every sermon. He had none after all his efforts. Some one must break the sod, some one must sow the seed. It must have time to grow, but by and by comes the harvest and some one will gather in the sheaves. "Let us work as if all depended on us and trust God as if all depended on him." Twenty-eight years the earnest Chinaman worked before there were any converts, but now there are hundreds.

The first stop our boat made was at Yokohama. Here, in company with the Lutheran missionaries, we went ashore and visited several places of interest. Entering a temple, we took off our shoes. It was the first heathen temple a few of us had ever seen. The structure is very beautiful. Two small boys live here and are being trained for the priesthood. With great courtesy they escorted us from room to room.

Next we visited a girls' school, where many girls are given a Christian education. A Bible school has been organized, giving four years' instruction after the regular school course is completed. The next morning, in company with the American consul's wife and a few others, we left the Minnesota, going across to Kobe by rail. This gave us an excellent view of Japan. All day long we looked out upon the rice fields and the mountains. The fields are very small. Here may be a small patch ready for harvest, another still green, another a few inches high, another just peeping out of the ground, another is just being planted. Every nook and corner is tilled.

For a long time we had a fine view of Fuji-yama, the sacred mountain of Japan. Its snow-covered peak glistened in the sun like many diamonds and pearls, while clouds, like a fine veil, hung upon its shoulders. By leaving the boat at Yokohama we caught the Yeiko Maru, getting to Tientsin a week sooner.

On the morning of Oct. 12 we reached Tientsin. Bro. Crumpacker was there to meet me. While I enjoyed the water, yet I was very glad to put my feet upon terra firma again. We spent two days here getting supplies, before starting inland, a journey of a day and a half. A few years ago it took several weeks. China is slowly progressing in civilization. Will hers be a Christian one?

The first day was indeed very different from anything I had ever experienced. We were the only foreigners in our car. All day long the other passengers stared at those strange beings,—foreigners in their peculiar clothes. One old man crept up doglike, and looked us right in the face. To me it was not a very pleasing sight,—smoke, dirt, and ignorance. Both in China and Japan everybody smokes. In Japan men and women smoke cigarettes, here the long pipe. One hopeful old woman, who attends our services, persists in making the air blue. Pray for her; only Jesus can help her. She is very much interested, saying she likes our doctrine, and that it is good.

Again the Lord came to me and plainly showed that it is worth while to teach such as these. Out from among them came one who had given his heart to God thirteen years ago. His whole being was so transformed that you forget nationality. He is a bright star in the darkness. He speaks very good English. During the Boxer trouble he was very closely pursued, but the Lord saved him for further usefulness. We must hasten to tell the story and lead many to the Father.

Now Sister Horning and I are comfortably settled in our new home. She works among the women and girls, while my task is a daily grind at the language. The women think it so strange that Sister Horning can speak their language, and strange that I can not. One woman wanted to know if I was deaf and dumb. "Praise God for his wonderful works into the children of men." May he bless and prosper the church at home that so faithfully remembered me on my long journey alone, yet not alone. It is good to be alone with the Father. He has many things to tell his children which they can not hear when burdened with so many earthly cares. The message to me was the "EVERY" in Philpp. 4: 19, "My God shall supply EVERY need of yours according to his riches in glory in Christ Jesus."

More About the Whale.

BY GEORGE D. ZOLLERS.

THOUSANDS of people and others have heard me relate the story of the whale from my viewpoint, and as my experiences have taught me. Now I will corroborate the narrative by giving the testimony of another whaleman, to show that my delineations, as previously given, are correct. I quote here, in substance, the testimony of A. P. Hyde of Biddeford, Me.:

Some have doubted and even denied that a whale can swallow a man, owing to the smallness of the whale's throat. Let me give my experience. Aug. 1, 1864, I sailed from New Bedford, Mass., on the Bark Favorite, to the South Pacific Ocean, on a sperm whale voyage. Off the coast of New Zealand we struck a large sperm whale. He went down and came up again with one jaw on each side of the boat. I stood in the boat, half way down his mouth, the same as you would stand in a doorway, and I had a good, square look down his throat. I did not stop to measure it, but my imagination ran to such an extent that the throat looked large enough for two men to pass in side by side. We finally succeeded in pushing our boat loose, but it was a hairbreadth escape, and convinced me.

Had every skeptic, who doubts the Jonah story, seen what I did, he never would have doubted the swallowing capacity of the whale. The next time I did not fare so well, for it bit the boat in two. When I saw those long rows of teeth over my back, ready to take me in, I left the boat in a hurry, but none too soon, for those teeth came down and killed the man behind me, and hurt all the rest of the crew.

I had just gotten far enough away from the boat, when the whale straightened himself out on the water, right under me, and so I had a ride on his back. I was very much frightened at the time. He was the wildest creature that I ever rode without a saddle or bridle. We caught him, however, and I have one of his teeth now, to remind me of our short acquaintance. This whale yielded eighty-five barrels of good sperm oil. While this does not prove the whale's swallowing capacity, it indicates that he had a body large enough to take in ten or more at a time, and stow them all away.

The whale feeds on a large fish, or "squib," as it is called. Sometimes, when we lanced a whale, it made him sick at his stomach, and he vomited up pieces that were, seemingly, as large as two men. So we come to the conclusion that if he had a throat large enough for such large chunks to come up, he had one large enough for them to go down.—World's Crisis, Dec. 14, 1910.

In addition to the statement by Mr. Hyde, as quoted, I would say that I never was in as imminent danger of being ground to a pulp, but at times I had to struggle for quarters, when in close contact with the powerful tail of the whale, which moved and plunged with mad velocity. I have also been with the boat's crew on the back of a live whale, when it darted with swift revolutions. It was the biggest thing that I ever rode, and that, too with the least system in its locomotion. It was an aimless, pell-mell, hair-raising charge.

Wallace and I, occasionally, call to mind the various disasters experienced. He came perceptibly nearer being dispatched than I. Had it not been for the assistance of a Portuguese, whom we denominated "Long John," who was an expert swimmer, he says he "would have gone down into the fathomless home of the fish." Wallace was a brave and well-fortified seaman, and had many narrow escapes.

Now, after the lapse of many years, we can refer to the thrilling events of the whaling days with a good deal more composure, by the side of our baseburners, than when going through the actual experiences. At all events, the preachers from a "whale college" have a unique experience. The vessel, with its grease and oil, and untouched by the saving Gospel of Christ, was little better than a floating hell. Nearly every foul utterance was made still more hideous by the devil's grammar. That two preachers, by Love Divine, came out of such a conglomerate collection of thirty-five people, is a good showing. The same proportionate output elsewhere would fill the world with preachers. Thank God for whales and whale catchers, and the varied experiences on the ocean wave!

A Forgotten Command.

BY E. R. MILLER, M. D.

"Be not drunk with wine, . . . but be filled with the Spirit" (Eph. 5: 18).

HERE are two commands. The first is a negative command: "Be not drunk with wine." This command, I believe, we, as a church, come as near keeping to the letter as any people on earth. But how about the second command? This is positive: "Be filled with the Spirit." Is not the positive command as important as the negative? If we keep the one, should we not also keep the other?

When I contemplate the awful fact that, after two centuries of labor, we, as a church, have less than a hundred thousand members, I am made to wonder on which side of Pentecost we are living. We may have the Spirit, and I trust we have; for Paul says, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his" (Rom. 8: 9). And again: "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost" (1 Cor. 12: 3). But some one has said: "To have the Spirit is one thing, and to be filled with the Spirit is another thing."

"Egypt always has the Nile. But to have the Nile is one thing, and to have the Nile's overflowing, is another thing. Egypt waits every year for the Nile's overflowing. It is the Nile's overflow that is Egypt's salvation. And to overflow, it must first be filled." "It is the Christian's overflow that is the salvation of the world; but in order to overflow there must first be a filling."

The apostles at Jerusalem were anxious that believers be "filled with the Spirit." "Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that the Samaritans had received the Word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John: who when they were come down, prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost" (Acts 8: 14, 15).

Ananias came to the blind penitent from Tarsus, and said: "Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost" (Acts 9: 17).

This is possibly the only recorded deed of this man Ananias in the New Testament; but to open the eyes of one blind sinner, and to be the means of him being filled with the Holy Ghost, is that not a deed worthy of Divine record? Possibly many of us do not have that much to our credit. But this incident marked the beginning of a life that has proven to the world, ever since, that he had not only "received the Spirit" but was filled with it.

When this same Paul came to Ephesus, what was the first and most important question? "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" "And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them" (Acts 19: 2-6).

How about those who "sit in Moses' seat" today? Are they as anxious that believers "be filled with the Spirit" as were the apostles of old? Has the church a better plan now? Have we improved upon the apostolic plan? I fear that the results do not so indicate. Some one has said that "the churches are filled with bones, very many and very dry."

When a boy I used to sit by the fireside on the old homestead, and listen to the details of the all-day "Church Meeting." In those days it was not an unusual thing for a number to be disowned from the church. I believe it was more frequent then than now. A rehearsal of the deeds for which they were disowned was interesting to me. I remember that I was impressed with the fact that it must be a very difficult matter to remain in the church, or a very easy matter to fall from grace.

Were not these people converted when they came to the church? Possibly some were not, but certainly many were. But where was the Paul, or Peter, or John, or Ananias, to go to them, as new converts, and see that they were "filled with the Spirit"?

Why were Paul and Peter and John so anxious that their converts "be filled with the Spirit"? Was it not that they were filled with it themselves, and, knowing the joy and blessings it brought to them, were anxious that all men might come into possession of the same? I wonder why pastors and preachers today do not manifest the same anxiety over their young converts that the Apostles did. Is it because they are not "filled with the Spirit" themselves, and therefore cannot speak of the blessings to others? Or has the apostle's command to the Ephesian brethren been forgotten? O, for more Spirit-filled pastors and preachers and teachers!

In GOSPEL MESSENGER of Dec. 10, 1910, Bro. W. B. Stover has an article entitled, "Those Children," which furnishes food for much meditation. In the same issue of the paper we find these words from the pen of one of wide experience: "If we had saved all our children for the church during the last two centuries of her history, we would number over a million today, instead of less than a hundred thousand.

If fathers and mothers were "filled with the Spirit," would not the overflowing mean the salvation of the children in the home? If pastors were "filled with the Spirit," would not the overflowing mean the salvation of their flocks? If the churches were "filled with the Spirit," would not the overflowing mean the salvation of the community?

Why are we not all "filled with the Spirit"? The promise is ours. "Then Peter said unto them, Repent and be baptized, every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call" (Acts 2: 38, 39).

Some one has said that the well, on the curb of which Jesus sat and preached that wonderful sermon to the Samaritan woman, while his disciples had gone to the city to buy meat, has gone dry because of the rubbish which has been thrown into it. Suppose the rubbish were all cleaned out, might not the water flow again as pure and sweet as when it slaked the thirst of the Son of Man, or when, as the Samaritan woman said: "Our father Jacob drank thereof and his flocks and his cattle"?

If our hearts are filled with rubbish, it must first be cleared away before we can "be filled with the Spirit." A well is a great blessing to any community, but it is the "rivers of living water," flowing from thousands of Spirit-filled Christians, that help to save the world.

How often shall we be filled with the Spirit? The disciples had been with Jesus for about three years, and we believe they had "received the Spirit." Yet, on the day of Pentecost, they, with the others,—one hundred and twenty in all,—were "filled with the Spirit" (Acts 1: 14; 2: 4). Peter was there among them, and was filled with the rest, yet we find that when he and John were cast into prison, they "prayed and the place was shaken, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost" (Acts 4: 31). Peter was there and he was filled again. The Nile overflows once a year; but I am wondering if many of us overflow once in a lifetime. What will likely happen to the individual or the church that does not overflow? And there can not be an overflowing, until there has first been a filling.

Brethren, we have not been as active as we might have been, or ought to have been, may we not trace our deadness to an overvaluation of the letter and a corresponding neglect of the Spirit? "The Spirit giveth life." It is time for us to wake up. The Spirit of God alone can wake us. Therefore, with the deepest reverence for the church of my grandfathers and great-grandfathers, the church in which I was cradled, I am reminded of the text from which my sainted father loved to preach: "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light" (Eph. 5: 14).

DISTRICT MEETING OF TEXAS AND SOUTH-WESTERN LOUISIANA.

Our District met at Roanoke, La., Dec. 27 for Sunday-school Meeting; Wednesday, the 28th, for Ministerial Meeting, and Thursday, the 29th, for District Meeting proper. Eld. J. A. Miller, of Texas, was chosen delegate to represent us on the Standing Committee at our next Annual Conference. Bro. K. G. Tennison, of Weatherford, Texas, was chosen as alternate. At our love feast, Dec. 30, about sixty communed. The sisters broke the bread and passed the cup. During the meeting many fine and inspiring talks were made. Five brethren and two sisters from Texas were with us during our meetings.

Bro. C. P. Rowland closed a series of meetings with us, after preaching thirty-six sermons. There were two accessions to the church by baptism. From here he went to Jennings, La., 80 miles east of us, and is still there. So far one has applied for baptism. He expects to close his meetings there Jan. 14.

It is a hard proposition for our Brethren to reach the Southern people, especially in the towns, on account of the lodge affiliation. Most towns and much of the country is a hotbed of Masons, and most of the ministers of the popular churches are Masons. Few Masons want to hear the plain teaching of the whole Gospel. "How long, O Lord, how long?" J. I. Miller.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' TOPIC

The Boy Jesus.

Luke 2: 40-52.

For Sunday Evening, February 5, 1911.

I. "The Child Grew."—(1) "Strong in spirit, filled with wisdom" (V. 40). (2) He "increased in stature"(V. 52).

II. His Family Life.—(1) The family—its members (Matt. 13: 55, 56). (2) His attainment of mother (V. 51; John 19: 26, 27). (3) A student of nature. (a) "The fowls" (Matt. 6: 26); (b) "grapes" and "rain" (7: 16, 25); (c) "foxes" (8: 20); (d) the "harvest" (9: 37); (e) the "mustard seed" (13: 31); (f) "leaven" (13: 33).

III. His Religious Life.—(1) Attendance at church feasts. (a) By his parents (Luke 2: 41); (b) himself (Luke 2: 42; John 2: 13; 5: 1; 7: 10). (2) He was often in his "Father's house" (Luke 2: 46, 49; John 2: 14-17; 10: 23). (3) A Bible student—(a) "It is written" (Matt. 4: 4, 7, 10); (b) "of old time" (5: 21); (c) "have ye not read" (12: 3, 19; 4: 21; 16; Mark 12: 10; Luke 6: 3).

Note.—(1) The mother of Jesus was a devout woman of rare culture—hence an intelligent student of the prophets. (2) Jesus was a child of the church. His parents were devout members, and as soon as he was old enough he took upon himself the covenant promises. He regularly attended the church, and paid money into the treasury. He sent Peter to get a piece of money out of the mouth of a fish to pay the temple tax (Matt. 17: 27). He strongly commended the widow who cast her two mites into the treasury (Mark 12: 41).

PRAYER MEETING

The Privilege of Giving.

1 Cor. 16: 1-9; 2 Cor. 8: 1-15.

For Week Beginning February 5, 1911.

1. The Larger Outlook.—The true Christian looks away from himself to others. He feels the needs of humanity. Jesus taught that the effacing of self leads to a glorious work for others. He gave because he loved, and proved his love in the giving. The life-blood of the church is evidenced by the gifts of the people. The true Christian is cosmopolitan in the scope of his enlarged vision (Titus 2: 11-14).

2. The Example of Christ.—"For your sakes he became poor" (2 Cor. 8: 9). Christ willingly left the glory of heaven and his own riches to save a dying world. To learn to give, Paul says, "Know the grace of Jesus." This knowledge leads to cheerful giving (2 Cor. 9: 7).

3. The Obligation of Giving.—Looking at Christ's willingness, we see at once that he, as our Elder Brother, recognized the brotherhood of man,—a fact that we, also, must fully incorporate in our lives. Perishing souls,—no matter of what nation or clime,—are the all-sufficient appeal to the means within our reach (Luke 6: 38).

4. The Spirit of Giving.—"A willing mind" (2 Cor. 8: 12). Paul says this readiness to give should be "first." Most of us count our money "first," and then decide, perhaps, that we are very poor and have nothing to give. The gospel way is to have a willing mind to give with, remembering that only thus there can be adequate giving (2 Cor. 9: 6).

5. The Measure of Giving.—Fourfold dimensions: (1) According to our prosperity; (2) continuously; (3) proportionately among the various gospel needs; (4) by all,—equally, "As the Lord hath prospered" (1 Cor. 16: 2).

6. The Results of Such Giving.—Paul refers to the admirable system in the giving of the manna, "He that had gathered much had nothing over; and he that gathered little had no lack." God's purpose in giving unto us "all things richly to enjoy," is that all should be blessed. The church is to go out into the world with the gospel message, until the uttermost ends of the earth are touched by its power (Matt. 28: 19, 20).

HOME AND FAMILY

Open the Gates.

BY MARGUERITE BIXLER GARRETT.

Fling open the gates of Paradise,
O guardian angel of light,
Fling open the gates of Paradise,
Flood my soul with music tonight—
Music that dashes and splashes,
Music that thunders and crashes
Into and into each vibrating part,
Striking the innermost spring of my heart—
Music with glorified grandeur replete,—
Grant me one moment of fullness complete.

Fling open the gates of Paradise,
O guardian angel of light,
Fling open the gates of Paradise,
Flood my soul with music tonight.
Music that lingers and blesses,
Music that calms and caresses—
Whispering peace, like vespers of old,
Shimmering forth from celestial of gold—
Music with sanctified sweetness replete—
Bathing my being with rapture complete.

The Home in Bethany.

BY WEALTHY A. BURKHOLDER.

THERE are times in the lives of all people when they wish to retire to some secluded place and rest. There are homes where we feel we can shut out all curious, public gaze, and, in the congenial company of those who reside there, spend a season with profit and pleasure, none daring to intrude.

Such are resting places along the way and may be made scenes of rest and relaxation, as well as spiritual and mental improvement. Such a home was the one at Bethany whither the Master often resorted.

It was not a mansion, as we call mansions today, although we are told that it was the best in the village, and was thronged with guests coming and going all day and all the week. The first we know of Bethany it is named as the evangelist's as the home of the family that Jesus loved. This family consisted of Lazarus, Mary and Martha. The two sisters were of very much attached to their only brother.

One wintry day the Master had been spending some time in retirement on the eastern side of the Jordan, but wished to go up to Jerusalem to the feast of dedication. He and his disciples, after climbing the steep ascent of the mountain path of the plains of the Jordan, entered the door of the little Bethany home and were heartily welcomed.

It seems that Martha was the leader of the two sisters in the matter of preparing entertainment and refreshments. No doubt she felt glad that she could administer to the bodily wants of him whom she dearly loved. Martha's first thought was to care for her guests, but let us not blame her too much, when we know it was love that prompted her to show her devotion in this respect. She knew that Christ had traveled over the steep and stony road and was tired and hungry. No doubt she felt that she would first provide for his temporal wants, and then listen to his gracious words with more earnestness and restfulness. Her motive was surely kind, even if she did fail in being as gentle as was possible to be. The circumstance brought out the different characters of the sisters in contrast with each other. Both were glad for the visit of their Master, but while Martha was perhaps too much absorbed in providing elaborately for his physical wants, Mary was so much absorbed in the teaching of her Lord, that she sat down at the feet of the Great Teacher, and quietly listened to his profound words. Perhaps Martha was like many women today, who spend too much time in the preparation of meals. A more simple meal would often give more time for spiritual improvement, and, at the same time, satisfy all physical wants. Too much serving has a tendency to distract the mind and not prove restful to the body.

It is distinctly said that Jesus loved each member of this family, and he did not blame Martha for trying to provide for the temporal wants of her guests. He would, however, have her do it less elaborately and more quietly. He would suggest that there be less of the hurrying she may have manifested on the occasion.

So of our lives. Some of us serve while others have a different field of labor, but what is needed is faithfulness to the work at hand. Our work is most always what lies nearest, and when love to God and man prompts us, no work is drudgery.

The true philosophy of life is to accept the situation in which we are placed and make the best of it uncomplainingly. There are those who may fill higher positions. We need not envy them, but rather let us be true and faithful to the work assigned us.

Heart service is wanted by the Master in all the avenues of life. There is entirely too much shallow, sham work in the world, and such can not stand the scrutiny of an All-seeing Eye. Trials and troubles come to all, but sometimes it takes talent of the highest kind meekly to bear and pass along the path of duty, singing with gladness.

Mary and Martha represent two phases of Christian character. One is quiet and contemplative, the other more aggressive and active. The same is true today. There are times when it requires force and decision to sit still and wait, when we know work ought to be done. Let us remember that if we want to administer to those in need, either in sympathy or in any other way, it must be done cheerfully and lovingly, although it may require the giving up of our own comfort and wills, often. The Master's work is not always in the easy and conspicuous places, but we should try to say cheerfully and resignedly:

"I will go where you want me to go, dear Lord,
I will say what you want me to say."

C., paid $4.50 to help the poor; total collection for the year, $16.45; received for coverings, $17.67; received for work done, $11.50; total receipts, $65.53; expenditures, $65.98; amount in the treasury from 1909, $10.46; amount in the treasury at present, $7.06. The following officers were elected for the year: Sister Kate Glick, president; Sister Mary Click, vice-president; Sister Ada Wagner, secretary; Sister Mollie Click, treasurer.—Delphia S. Click, Beaver Creek, Va., Jan. 14.

OGANS CREEK, IND.—Our Sisters' Aid Society held eleven meetings during the year. The average attendance was six. Our work consisted mostly of making children's clothing.—Dan Dorsey, Jr., Wanda, Ind., Jan. 14.

SPRING, KANS.—As we had quite a lot of muslin, percale, underwear, etc., given us, and not in our town, we only sold out for material $6.14. We made seventeen garments for children and one bed comforter. Twenty-two garments and two comfort tops were donated. Besides helping the brethren at home,—we sent a box to the Kansas City Mission Dec. 15, containing ninety-seven garments and one bed comforter. We organized with the following officers: Sister Sallie E. Carl, president; Sister Henrietta Lichty, vice-president; Sister Metta B. Kreider, secretary-treasurer. We meet for sewing on the second Thursday of every month.—Metta E. Kreider, R. D. 1, North Manchester, Ind., Jan. 13.

ROARING SPRING, PA.—During the past year the sisters, by holding weekly sewings, three of which were all-day sessions, succeeded in making and selling enough goods to make payments on the Mission House so as to lose for the year on building, $70; carpet for the new church, $85; total for the year, $155. With an attendance of twenty on Wednesday, Jan. 5, the following business was effected: After Scripture reading and prayer, a program took place for the year 1911, with Sister Susan Replogle, president; Sister Mary Hershey, vice-president; Sister Lydia Brumbaugh, superintendent; Sister Charlotte Hershey, assistant superintendent; Sister Elizabeth Barnett, secretary; Sister Minnie Furry, assistant; Sister Catharine Hershey, treasurer. The sisters agreed to be held every two weeks, all day, until summer, when they will be held weekly by the afternoon.—Elizabeth Barnett, Secretary, Roaring Spring, Pa., Jan. 11.

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO.—Our Sisters' Aid Society met Jan. 4. The following officers were elected: Sister Ella Smith, president; Sister Mary Roof, vice-president; the writer, secretary-treasurer. During the past year, from April to January, we held seventeen meetings, with an average attendance of ten. In this time we made two quilts, one bed comforter, and made children's clothing. We sent a box to the Brethren's Home, and one to Chicago, which was filled with boys' pants and waists, underwear, stockings, prayer coverings, comforters, and a number of rugs; collections amounted to, donations, $15.64; sold two quilts, for $2 each; spent for material used, and underwear, $21.44; balance from last term, $4.40; balance in the treasury, $18.12. A new bed comforter was donated to the society by the members. Our regular time for meeting is every two weeks, on Wednesday, at the home of the president.—Ruth Dresher, R. D. 2, Springfield, Ohio, Jan. 14.

LINVILLE CREEK, VA.—During the past year we met twenty-four times, with an average attendance of sixteen. The year was a busy one for the Sisters' Aid Society, during which was organized in 1909. This was due, in a great measure, to the earnest efforts of our sister workers. Interest in the work has grown, as well as the number of workers. We spent two days in quilting, besides various kinds of work. The sewing society is furnishing funds to educate a poor Hindoo girl, and collected in the amount of $40 we gave $25 of this fund. Total amount of collections, $22.03; amount in the treasury at the close of the year, $13.35. We met with a social session at the Orphanage and Old Folks' Home. The officers, for the year 1911, are Sister Sarah Zigler, president; Sister Ella Kline, vice-president; Sister Ida Miller, secretary. We close the year's work with the determination that we shall do still better during the coming year.—Ida Miller, Secretary, Mossy, Va., Jan. 4.

CERNANDOAH, PA.—Our Sisters' Aid Society closed another year's work. We held twenty-one meetings during the year, with an average attendance of 6. We used during the year, 437 yards of cloth, 144 yards of outing and 97 pounds of cotton. Out of this were donated to us 50 lbs. of cotton and 100 yards of cloth. We made 103 comforters and 23 comforts. We received from dues $19.88; for goods sold, $71.63. Received from Sunday-school collection for the year, $15.79. This makes a total of $111.90. We paid for a carpet $15.29; for the church basement $8.10; more for a stick stove, $8.00; for six months' support to a native school in India, $10. Two months' support to the Child Our Special pledges $50 and two Sunday-school classes each $5. For goods to sew, $43.64. We have more work than we can do for regular meetings, and have an appointment in the evening and sew. We believe that these Aid Societies are a part of the church, and should be given the right to work.—Mrs. Lambert in Sister Anna Swigart; secretary, Sister Annie Snyder.—Anna Swigart, 6611 Germantown Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 12.

NORTH MANCHESTER, IND.—It is our custom to reorganize every six months. The present officers of our society are Sister Lucinda Cutrell, president; Sister Mesalonice, vice-president; Sister Sophia Lehmer, superintendent; Sister Lucinda Cutrell, secretary-treasurer; Sister Lavina Neher, director. We also have four committees,—"Soliciting," "Selling Quilts" and "Auditing." This gives work to a number of sisters. During the year we held twenty-four meetings, with an average attendance of twenty-five. Our principal work consisted of making quilts, comforts, carpet, clothespin aprons, bed sacks, and for the coming year, some general sewing. General collections amount to $12.39; solicitors received cash, $5.45; for work done mostly, $11.60; received, $34.69; money received for the year, $63.93; donations received,—wearing apparel, bedding, etc., 116 articles; carpet rags sewed and unsewed, quilt blocks, patches, etc.; for relief work, food and clothing for eight families at home, twenty-one yards of carpet for a poor sister; also paid $1.93 tax for the same sister; for help to Bible work, for a sister in college, $15; for the support of one child in orphan's home, $18; furnished a room in the young men's Dormitory at the College, valued at $25; paid for the room; balance of money not paid for material, furnishing room at the College, relief work, etc., we have a balance on hand of $8.16, to commence with the present time.—Lavina Brower, Secretary, North Manchester, Ind.

☞All business and communications intended for the paper should be addressed to the BRETHREN PUBLISHING HOUSE, ELGIN, ILL., and not to any individual connected with it.

BRO. GEO. L. STUDEBAKER is engaged in a series of meetings at Nappanee, Ind.

BRO. J. W. LEAR, of Cerro Gordo, Ill., is holding a series of meetings at Elkhart, Ind.

BRO. ERNEST SHERFY held a series of meetings at Ramona, Kans., and five applied for membership.

FIVE came out on the Lord's side during some recent revival work at Essex, Iowa, by Bro. A. P. Simpson.

THE revival at Juniata Park, Pa., conducted by Bro. D. M. Adams, closed with nineteen making the good confession and receiving baptism.

AT Pleasant Hill, Va., Bro. L. C. Coffman delivered ten addresses, and six made the good confession. Four were baptized and two await the rite.

BRO. J. E. MILLER, of Mount Morris College, spent one day at Elgin, last week, in a meeting with the other two members of the Gish Committee.

DURING the late revival service in the Union church, Ind., conducted by Bro. Manly Deeter, five were enrolled for the kingdom of our Lord and Master.

A SERIES of meetings was held in the Palestine church, Ind., by Bro. D. M. Byerly, and six were received into fellowship. Two others await baptism.

BRO. C. M. SUTER, elder of the Franklin Grove congregation, Ill., left last week for California, where he may spend a few months, enjoying the best of the land.

BRO. H. A. STAHL, under date of Jan. 19, writes us that he is in a glorious meeting at West Brownsville, Md., with ten accessions and others near the kingdom.

BRO. J. F. APPLEMAN writes that he is still in the evangelistic field. At present he is holding a series of meetings in the Gravelton house, near Nappanee, Ind.

BRO. C. W. GUTHRIE, now of Chicago, has been a very sick man, and while improving, is still confined to his room, but says that he is not too sick to read the MESSENGER.

OUR correspondent reports an excellent Bible Institute at North Manchester, Ind., and some fruitful evangelistic work. Eleven were induced to accept Christ as their personal Savior.

BRO. D. E. ROYER, Waynesboro, Pa., says that he and others would be pleased to receive information concerning the country in which Brethren are locating and building up churches in Canada and Central Oregon. Possibly some Brethren residing in these sections can give the information desired.

BRO. T. F. IMLER, of Ridgely, Md., recently submitted to a very critical surgical operation at the Episcopalian Hospital in Philadelphia. He was kept under the influence of ether about two hours. We have word regarding him, two days later, at which time he was resting comfortably, with favorable indications.

AFTER reading "Our Saturday Night," Bro. D. E. Miller, our agent at Washington, D. C., writes that he is going to see to it, that a copy of the book gets into as many homes in the city as possible.

WE are often requested to give special notices two or more insertions. We regret that such requests can not be complied with. Space in the MESSENGER is valuable, and one insertion of a notice is all that should be expected.

AFTER visiting only a part of the schools in the East, Bro. Galen B. Royer returned to Elgin last Sunday morning. He came home on account of the illness of his wife, whom he found quite weak, but her condition is improving.

BRO. D. L. MILLER has for some weeks been suffering from an attack of bronchial pneumonia and lumbago, but when last heard from he was improving. On account of his sickness he had to give up his course of illustrated Bible Land lectures in Mount Morris College.

AFTER page 55 of this issue had already been printed, we received a card from Sister Ruth Dresher, requesting us to state that her report of Aid Society, on the page referred to above, should be credited to Donnels Creek, Ohio, instead of Springfield, as there given.

AT Timberville, Va., we have a large congregation, said to number about 500. During the past year there were twenty-nine accessions by confession and baptism, nine restored to fellowship, and fellowship withdrawn from four. By the icy hand of death three were removed.

IN Chicago a building is being erected for Sunday-school Extension, No. 2, and may possibly be ready for use in March. It is built on the combination plan, —part can be used for mission work, and the rest may be rented. The income from rental will help materially in meeting the expenses of the mission. A report of the work will be found on page 62.

BRO. JAMES M. MOORE, who has returned to his home at 3407 West Van Buren Street, Chicago, writes that he greatly enjoyed his Bible Institute work among some of the churches of Iowa. He speaks especially of the encouraging attendance at South Waterloo, where we have one of the largest and best equipped congregations in the West. The church has had eighteen Bible Institutes, and the good results may be easily seen.

IN 1 TIM. 5:19 we read: "Against an elder receive not an accusation, but before two or three witnesses." By this we are to understand that it requires at least two witnesses to sustain a charge against one who is an elder. One is not sufficient. If two members testify to a wrong that an elder has done, the case can be tried before the church. If there is but one witness, and no circumstantial evidence, the case may be ruled out on the ground of what is quoted above.

WE have a letter from Bro. J. M. Blough, written aboard his ship in New York harbor on the evening of Jan. 18, his vessel having reached the harbor too late for the passengers to be landed. He reports a very stormy voyage on the Atlantic, but stated that those in his company were well. His plans were to go from New York to Huntingdon, Pa., to assist in the special Bible Term. After that he will proceed to Johnstown, Pa., where he may be addressed at 41 Sell Street. Sister Brubaker goes to her people at Nappanee, Ind., where she will remain and rest for a season.

THIS week we are doing the unusual thing by having the Financial Report of the General Mission Board appear on the Round Table page. This we do on account of the pages set apart for correspondence and church news being crowded. Reports from the churches have been cut down as much as possible, and yet some of the longer ones must be held over. Still we are not complaining. We are simply reminded, by the abundance of matter received, of the kindness of a host of faithful correspondents who keep us well informed regarding the work of the churches in all parts of the Brotherhood. For this we are grateful.

SISTER NORA E. BERKEBILE, of 637 South Corona Street, Denver, Colo., writes that her husband is getting stronger, and she thinks that a few more months of Colorado air will work wonders with him. He sleeps on a veranda when the mercury is twenty degrees below zero, and is anxious to regain his health, so he can return to his work. He and his wife feel that the Lord has called them to the India field, and nothing will please them so well as resuming their labors among the people who have learned to appreciate their efforts to help them to the higher plane of living.

MISSIONARY solicitors, sending in mission funds, and persons wishing to write concerning matters of interest to the General Mission Board, should always address their communications, "General Mission Board, Elgin, Ill." A number, knowing Bro. Galen B. Royer personally, write him direct, and these letters must be forwarded to him, when from home, and he must return them to the office. It would greatly facilitate prompt reply, always to address the Board, on all matters pertaining to its work, and only write Bro. Royer when the subject matter is personal. Bro. J. H. B. Williams, the assistant secretary, is well able to answer promptly, if mail is addressed to the Board.

WE assigned an important subject to one of our scholarly essay writers, and he tells us that he wrote four articles on his subject before he could produce the one he was willing to have appear over his signature. We like these painstaking writers. They always say something that is worth reading. Work of this sort tends to raise the literary standard of a journal, and this thing of putting more work on what appears in our columns from week to week, is what has been raising the standard of the MESSENGER. Some of our observing correspondents tell us that the paper is growing better every year. This is not the result of any special editorial genius. It is the result of well-directed hard work and plenty of it.

"WAR AND PEACE" is the title of a splendid book by Bro. Jacob Funk, Wichita, Kans., that has just been brought out by the House. Bro. Funk has put years of hard work on this treatise, and as a result he has given the public a book that is a credit to the peace principles that he so ably and earnestly defends. The work reads well, the arguments presented are forcible, and the array of facts, brought together and presented in good form, are certainly of great value. Our people have long stood opposed to war, have contended most earnestly for the principles of peace the world over, and since we have a valuable book, ably treating the subject of peace, they should not only purchase the volume themselves, but they should see that it finds its way into the hands of others. The work contains nearly 200 pages, is well printed and neatly bound in cloth, and will be sent postpaid for seventy-five cents.

WE have a long letter from Bro. O. C. Caskey, 3435 West Van Buren Street, Chicago, telling about mission work in which he and a few others are engaged at the Cook County Hospital, where 1,700 patients—enough to make a town—were cared for when he visited the institution. Our people are welcomed at the hospital, and are shown every courtesy. They were assigned to ward 24, and had pleasant interviews with a number of the patients, who are here on account of some injury. Many of them have taken a liking to our literature, and call for papers. Bro. Caskey says that the MESSENGER is greatly appreciated, and he feels sure that if it is freely distributed it will accomplish good. He therefore urges some of our generous patrons to send money to the House, to be used for the purpose of supplying him with papers for the patients in this hospital. If the money is sent us we will see that a number of papers, fresh from the press, each week, are placed in the hands of our brother for the purpose designated by him. We are sending hundreds of copies of the MESSENGER into other cities and now we would like to respond to the demand in Chicago. Where the MESSENGER is distributed among outsiders, in this way, it can be had for fifty cents a year. When remitting for the work in Chicago, let it be so stated in your letter.

The Best Method.

THERE is a call for the best method of preparing for the ministry, and the very best way of doing the work of the ministry. Hundreds of young brethren, who have been called to work in the Lord's vineyard, are getting ready for active service. They mean to devote their lives to the preaching of the Gospel and the saving of souls. They realize that theirs is a higher calling and that they should be well prepared for it. Many of them are without much preparation. Some of them have a good common school education, while others have taken some college work, but this is not all they need, nor is all they need along this line. They need to study the Bible. They need to understand the church of which they are members, as well as some other churches. They may need instruction in languages, as well as in certain lines of history. They should know how to think and how to arrange their thoughts for practical use. They must know how to say things, and how to make their talking count. Into this a hundred and one things may enter. But who can tell our young ministers about the best methods? This should be told by those who have had enough preparation of their own to be worth telling. Let us hear from some of our good thinkers.

It is one thing, however, to prepare for the ministry, but quite another to do the work of the minister of the Gospel. We have a thousand or more ministers who would be glad to read a few good articles on the subject. We have reached a time when earnest men are seeking the best way of doing things, and, as much as possible, they seek advice of men who have had considerable experience. They want to know how they can accomplish the most for the Lord and his cause, and they understand that the very best way is never too good for a noble cause. These earnest men are looking to the MESSENGER for advice, and now we are wondering who can and will help them.

A Square Deal.

ONE of our readers in Tennessee says that he regrets the stand the MESSENGER takes against organized labor. For the information of this correspondent, as well as others, we wish to state that, for those not members of the Brethren church, we are not opposed to organized labor, or any other organization that operates within the limits of law. From our viewpoint they are worldly institutions and are intended for secular ends. So long as secular organizations do not overstep the bounds of law, and do not violate the Golden Rule, we have nothing to say. But when they engage in lawless acts, destroying the property of others, and interfere with the just rights of others, then we claim that it is our privilege, as well as our duty, to oppose the wrong and contend for the right. What we are here saying applies to the rich capitalists as well as to the laboring classes. The men who are rich, and have behind them the influences of money, have no right whatever to crush labor and make slaves of men and women merely because they must toil for their daily bread.

The Golden Rule is intended for the rich as well as for the poor, and the conditions that permit a few expert financiers to pile up great fortunes at the expense of the poor laboring people, is decidedly wrong, and, in some manner, should be righted. The MESSENGER deplores these conditions, and means to discourage any measure having for its purpose the protection of the dishonest capitalists in their wrong-doing. But while opposing sin in high places, we must not lose sight of the fact that the laboring classes may also overstep the bounds of justice, and interfere with the rights of their fellow-men. In the matter of making a living and enjoying Christian and civil liberties, every man should have a square deal, whether he be rich or poor, whether he is associated with organized labor or not, whether he belongs to one church or to another church. Let each man and woman have a fair chance in life. Let the Golden Rule apply to all of them alike!

Our members are instructed not to enter any organization, be it secular, literary or moral, that interferes with their religious duties. Then, on the other hand, those organizations should not interfere with their God-given rights. Our laboring people ought to be permitted to earn a livelihood without becoming members of labor organizations. That should be their privilege. This is according to the Golden Rule. If others find it to their interest to become associated with labor or business organizations, that is their privilege. This, too, is according to the Golden Rule. It means a square deal for all parties.

Here is where the MESSENGER stands, respecting matters of this sort, and in contending for right principles we sometimes find it necessary to denounce the unlawful methods of the rich. Then, on the other hand, we occasionally deem it proper to say something in opposition to the course pursued by the laboring classes. Our policy is to contend for the right, for the square deal, for the Golden Rule.

The Unfair Comparison.

ONE of our careful readers thinks that some of our contributors may be unconsciously weighing the Brethren church in the balance and find her wanting. Judging from the comparisons made with other religious bodies, has prompted him to suggest that a little more care be exercised.

So far no fault has been found with the doctrine we preach, or with the general moral and religious standing of the church as a body, but it is thought that, considering the good start we had in America, in the early part of the eighteenth century, we should number nearly 1,000,000 instead of nearly 100,000. All must admit that this is good reasoning, but it may not be good philosophy to insist on our growth keeping pace with the leading denominations, for the reason that the conditions are not the same.

Ours is a select body, made up of a called-out people. Our members have been called out from the world. Some of them heard the call and came out from other religious persuasions. They are a separate people. They are not of the world, neither are they supposed to do as the world does. They are not even supposed to do many things that the popular denominations do in addition. Our aim is to move on a higher plane, so far as loving God and keeping his commandments is concerned.

In our plea for primitive Christianity we have established a standard that cuts out thousands who might otherwise be with us. If we wish the membership of the church to reach the million mark before the close of another generation, we must either greatly increase our evangelizing efforts, or lower the standard. To lower the standard would mean to surrender our claim in the interest of apostolic Christianity. In the sight of all thinking people it would mean to surrender the charter under which we have been doing business for the Lord for more than two hundred years.

Viewing the situation from the numerical point of view, suppose we apply to other religious bodies the test that we apply to those who enter the Brethren church. Suppose we remove from any one of the large denominations all the members that belong to secret societies; all those that believe in war; those that attend theatres, dances, or the Sunday Baseball games; those that take active part in politics; those that belong to clubs and play cards, and those that violate the Gospel by wearing costly array and adorn their persons with gold and other ornaments! Remove all of these from any one of the large denominations, and there would probably not be enough left to form a religious organization half as large as the Brethren church. Let all the large religious bodies cut out the men and women who would be affected by the points named and there would be a startling falling off in numbers. Then go a step farther, and cut out all who for baptism received sprinkling or pouring, and how many would you have left in some of the denominations that now number their communicants by the millions? Probably they could not show a membership of 100,000.

Is it fair to compare a small body of select members with the larger bodies, composed of people who, in their doctrines and manner of living, do not measure up to the standard we have set for the members that compose our Fraternity? Most assuredly not. The comparison is not a fair one.

Instead of comparing ourselves with the popular denominations, the better way would be to compare ourselves with the Book, and ascertain whether we measure up to the standard which God has set for his people. If we measure up to this standard, and will do our duty, we can rest assured that the Lord and the Holy Spirit will look after the numbers. Nothing will help us to increase in numbers like living up to the Gospel standard, remaining faithful to the principles of the church, and contending earnestly for the faith once delivered unto the saints. Then, on the other hand, nothing will diminish our number and destroy our influence in the world for good, like an attempt to model the Brethren church after the popular churches of the day.

Our plea is a good one. The possibilities of the Brethren church are marvelous, if we keep our full Gospel plea in mind. Possibly we may need to improve some of our methods, but we do not want to think of neglecting our plea or surrendering our charter. We are in the world, not to be moulded by the world, but to mould the world. Our mission is to convert the world and not permit the world to weaken our moral and religious force for good. Whenever all of our people, as one man, turn their faces toward the New Testament, and away from the worldly influences and charms, we are going to see a move in the interest of the Gospel order of worship and living that will startle the world itself.

The Mind of Christ Jesus.

MIND is the central force in all unions, be they good, indifferent or bad. The more the various minds can be made to harmonize, the greater will the unions be, both in numbers and power. The better the minds are, that are thus brought into harmony one with another, the greater that power is for good, and so contrariwise. The power that is a resultant of a union of minds is colored after the integral parts, composing the unions, whatever the different shades of such unions might be.

In this world we have all kinds of unions, from the smallest to the very largest that may be named or thought of. In our subject, as we now think of it, we begin at the home,—the best human institution with which the Lord has blessed this our world.

And how is the home instituted? Where and with what does it begin? When of the Lord, it begins with the mind and in the mind. And that such a home may have a proper, worthy and hopeful beginning, there are three essential things required,—knowledge, thought and action.

The home begins with the marriage relation. And that this may be entered into wisely and with proper and righteous purposes, it is necessary that the parties should have a full knowledge of the marriage institution, their relation to it, to each other and of each other.

Love is the basic principle, and without a very personal knowledge of the life, disposition, character, wishes and purposes of each other, there is little upon which love can develop, feed and grow.

To get this knowledge we need time, observation, and very careful thinking. If the knowledge that is attained is satisfactory to both parties, confidence is awakened, the affections are enlisted, and we have a love that is intelligent, affectionate and Divine. Under such conditions, the husband cleaves to the wife, and the wife cleaves to the husband, and we have them as one flesh and one mind,—a complete union in feeling and in purpose, a nucleus from which grows the true and Christian home; because like begets like and every addition to it receives the impress of the foundational principles, and, therefore, becomes like them as naturally as every new branch becomes like the stock from which they grew.

Having the desirable information and the careful and satisfactory thinking, we are now ready for the sane and judicious action. We may have ever so much knowledge, and pursue a most thorough course of investigation, and yet accomplish but little or nothing, unless we make practical that which we have learned and thought out. This is done by making love active and practical in every phase of the home life. There is nothing in this world so fully in harmony with God's will and purpose as a love-centered home.

We don't need to discuss the character of the religion of such a home. The home that is thus made by God, sanctioned by his Son, and sealed by the love of both, and by the love of each other, is as near being born of God as it is possible to be. Both being of God, that which is born of them comes into this new center of living with a life so nearly like theirs that it naturally becomes a living part of that from which they grew. This is God's way of building up homes, and it would always work right were not the way defeated by those who are to do the building. It is a sad commentary on the waywardness and weakness of the human kind that they should so readily estrange themselves from a loving Father's way, and pursue ways that always bring to them disappointment, misery and a final estrangement from the God that so loved them that he willingly sent his Son for their salvation and eternal good.

God's plan of centralizing the minds of men and women in the home life was and is to lead them into the larger and greater center, the church of Jesus Christ, which was to enlarge and grow after the same manner in which the home was to enlarge and grow, by harmonizing their minds with his own Divine mind, making love the basic principle. "Let that mind be in you which was in Christ Jesus."

That was a mind of love. And as we were made to learn of this mind, to become like it, it was and is still necessary that we get knowledge, exercise thoughtfulness and become active in doing. That our minds may become like the mind of Christ Jesus, we must get a true and thorough knowledge of him. This we can get by prayerfully studying his life. As we learn this life, we find it was a life of love in the highest and purest sense. And because of the character of this love,—for sinners and for us,—we are impelled to desire to have the same mind that he had. This starts us to careful thinking, and the more we think about him the more we are drawn toward him. His love constrains us to action, and we accept him as our Friend, our Savior and our Redeemer. We forsake all and follow him. He becomes our Guide and Example. We are born into the kingdom, and thus become his children. And in this way we grow into his likeness,—become like him,—and gradually have in us the same mind that was in Christ Jesus.

The institution of the church of Jesus Christ is a Divine one,—is a growing one. Those of us who have learned to know the mind of Christ are to aid in enlarging it by teaching all men and women everywhere the mind of Christ, that they, too, may learn to know and love him by having their minds so changed as to be in harmony with his mind.

As our homes can be enlarged and made homes of peace, of love, and of growth, by having our minds changed and developed into minds of love, so it is with the church of Jesus Christ. We must be born again,—born by the mind and love of Jesus Christ, live the new life, and continue unto the end in his service. At last he will receive us unto himself.

Great Military Expense.

FAIRLY reliable reports show that for military purposes Great Britain spent, in 1910, $100,117,517; Germany, 1909-10, $88,000,000; France, 1909, $86,580,000; Japan, 1909-10, $37,450,000, and the United States, 1908-09, $124,794,798. These are great sums to be spent on armies, navies and fortifications in times of peace. It is hard to understand why governments that are on neighborly terms with each other, should think it necessary to make preparations to defend themselves in case of war. It would seem that two nations should be as capable of keeping the peace as two neighbors. To say nothing of the great evil of war, the burden on the people is enormous, and in some countries it is becoming almost unbearable. As regards sentiment, the masses are opposed to war. They prefer to live in peace and go about their duties unmolested. It is only those high in official positions who favor war preparations. There is something about military honor that fascinates the ruling class, and this, too, in spite of the fact that they know that war is barbarous, and belongs to the uncivilized rather than to the cultured. Those at the head of all governments ought to be able to understand that this is an age of peace, and that there is a better way of settling international disputes than by resorting to arms. But light is coming. War must disappear, or the nations of earth will become bankrupt. They can not always stand the terrible strain. In this democratic age the people will soon demand fewer military preparations and greater preparations for peace. The time was when kings ruled, but we are fast approaching the period when the masses will dictate to those in authority what is desired, and this, as much as anything else, is going to lead up to the era of general peace.

Those Abandoned Farms.

IT is said that in New York there are over 600 abandoned farms in good condition, that may be purchased for the value of the buildings only. The young people have gone West and the parents find it necessary to dispose of their property, since they are not able to look after the farms themselves. Why could not a number of our people in the East look into this matter, purchase some of these farms, and lay the foundation for several churches in the State? This would be mission work for certain. True, there may be plenty of good openings in the West, but why send all of our spare workers West to build up churches, when there are such fine opportunities in the East? The mission of our people is to establish churches all over the world, and especially in this country, where there is one common language. This they can do while making a good living and educating their children. Those that can be spared from the large congregations, and have a desire to change location, can settle in groups, wherever good openings can be found, begin religious services, organize, build meetinghouses, and thus lay the foundation for strong religious communities. We have been doing a work of this kind for years, but most of our efforts have been in the West. Since there are good openings in the East, there is no good reason why we may not avail ourselves of the opportunity of taking possession of many points in the New England States. We would like to hear of our people in the East getting their heads together and paving the way for a few more State Districts. We should like to see the time when each of the New England States would apply for recognition at Conference.

Scientific Methods.

NOT long since a Boston lawyer told the railroad managers that he could show them how to save one million dollars a day in operating their roads. In order to bluff him, some of the companies asked him to name his price for his services, as he was the man they were looking for. He proposed to give them a few lessons without any cost whatever, and then called their attention as to how the brick masons, by scientific methods, reduced the necessary motions in the laying of brick to such an extent that it now requires no more labor to lay 2,700 than it formerly required to lay 1,000. The loading of pig iron also was referred to, scientific study of methods having increased a laborer's work from twelve tons to forty tons, and caused no greater weariness. He told the railroad men that if they would make a study of scientific methods, as applied to their business, they, too, could accomplish more with less outlay, and in this way save the amount of money he had named. We have been wondering if we, as a people, have the most scientific way of doing things. Do we make use of the best methods? Can we not accomplish more than we do, and yet work no harder? Can not the preacher adopt better methods of collecting data and perparing his sermons? Can he not adopt better ways of delivering his addresses? Is it not possible for everybody to adopt better methods of doing most things? We once heard a woman say that her way of having less work to do was not to make work. Then she instilled the same principle into her household. We knew of a family where there did not seem to be much to do in the home of mornings, for the reason that all the children, as early as possible, had been taught to dress themselves, and put their own rooms in order. A wise man finds it easy to exclude the evil from his mind, for the reason that he makes it a rule to think only about the things that are helpful. There are a thousand ways in which one can improve his methods. Who can tell us about some of them?

Not Under an Apple Tree.

SOME of our Sunday-school students, in a certain part of the Brotherhood, are not of one mind regarding the place of Christ's birth, and have referred the question in dispute to the MESSENGER for a decision. Some of them maintain that his birth took place in a manger, referring to Luke 2:7, while others think that the child was born under an apple tree, and cite for proof Songs of Solomon 8:5, where we read: "Who is this that cometh up from the wilderness, leaning upon her beloved? I raised thee up under the apple tree: there thy mother brought thee forth: there she brought thee forth that bare thee." What is said about the incident under the apple tree is emblematical, and certainly does not refer to the birth of Christ in a literal sense. The tree is the emblem of paternal love, and the one referred to may be said to have been awakened under the outspreading branches of love. See the American Revision, where the poetic form is clearly and beautifully presented. It is not said in Luke 2:7 that the babe was born in a manger, but that after his birth he was laid in a manger, because there was no room for him in the inn. The birth took place in a comfortable enclosure, where animals were housed for the night, and the manger was found to be a very convenient place to lay the child.

Officering Sunday-schools.

WE are asked to suggest the best method of officering Sunday-schools among the local churches. We suggest that the superintendent, secretary, treasurer and chorister be elected by the church, assembled in council, several weeks before they are to enter upon their duties. A very satisfactory way is to vote by written ballot, the ballots to be read openly, and the one receiving the majority of all the votes cast to be declared elected. The one receiving the second highest number of votes for superintendent, might be announced as assistant. Let the church select by ballot two or more members, who, with the superintendent and pastor, or elder, shall constitute the Sunday-school Central Committee, or Sunday-school Central Board, whose duty it shall be to appoint the teachers and the librarian, and assist the officers in directing the Sunday-school work. The treasurer should be required to make quarterly or semiannual reports to the church, and his books should be audited at the end of each year by a committee of three, appointed for that purpose. There are other and possibly better ways of officering Sunday-schools, but observations and experiences would prompt us to suggest the above.

Saving the Eyes.

SOME one who must be the fortunate possessor of splendid eyesight crowds thirty-four lines of fine writing on a postal card, and then expects us to strain our eyes to read what he has to say. To crowd so much matter on a card, costing only one cent, may be economy in the sight of some people, but it is not the kind of economy that is admired by busy men, who, in close, mental application, must use their overworked eyes fourteen out of every twenty-four hours. It is of no use to pass matter of this sort out to our printers, for they would positively refuse to put it into type. It would be too hard on their eyes. In these days, when paper is cheap and postage is reasonable, there should be no occasion for crowding lines and words so close that they can not be read with some degree of ease. Eyes are of too great value to be destroyed in this manner. We can decipher illegible writing, wade through bad spelling and poor grammar, but deliver us from the writing where three lines occupy the space that should be given to one.

FIRST CHURCH, AKRON, OHIO.

On Saturday before Christmas we were able, by the aid of several churches of the District, to give the children of our Sunday-school a Christmas dinner. We have an enrollment of seventy-five in our Junior and Primary Departments, sixty-three of that number being present. It was a pleasing scene,—to many little folks enjoying their meal together. In addition to this, we handed out thirteen baskets to poor families, in the evening. On Christmas Day we had exercises appropriate for the day, by the children. At the close of the service one dear young lady decided to follow her Savior. Several others seem to be near the kingdom, but are not quite willing to give up all for him. Our average attendance at Sunday-school for the year 1910 was sixty-four. Our missionary collection amounted to $124-10; Sunday-school collections, $121.70. Our council meeting will be held Jan. 21.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

The Christmas just passed, was a very busy and happy one for us, here at the Mission. The sisters of the Woodland church sent a box of provisions. By-donations received from other churches we were able to give assistance to ten families. We gave to each one a substantial Christmas dinner and some help otherwise. From this we helped seemed very grateful, and we surely thank every one who made it possible for us to help these people.

On Sunday afternoon we had our Christmas exercises, and although it was very stormy, we had forty-five present at the services. Our interest and attendance are steadily increasing, for which we praise the Lord.

One thing worthy of mention is the willingness of every one to give. Our Sunday-school pupils come largely from families of the laboring class, very few of whom own their own homes, yet our contributions average over three cents per member. Lelia M. Culler.

A RIDE TO GAZA.

On the morning of the outbreak in El Kerak, in which a number of our party, including my brother, were so deeply interested, I was in Beersheba,—leaving at the same hour that marked the beginning of the firing in Kerak,—for an all-day horseback ride to Gaza. A missionary, Mr. Jagr, living at Hebron, and several ministers of Jerusalem, were going down to Beersheba, and through some of the Philistine country, on an evangelistic trip. Having the opportunity, two other ministers from the United States and myself joined the party, for the purpose of study and information to be gathered. Our trip was very pleasant and profitable. This part of the country has been without rain for some years, but having been blessed, recently, with some nice showers, the Bedouins in this section were making the most of the opportunity to get their grain sowed. Hundreds of camels were seen everywhere, hitched to plows. The plains of Beersheba and Gaza are a wonderful stretch of country, and a trip across them was a rare treat indeed. T. A. Eisenbise.

FIRST GRAND VALLEY CHURCH, COLO.

Another year has rolled around, and the First Grand Valley church in Colorado is still striving to hold up the banner of King Emmanuel.

In looking back over the work of the year, we have some very important events to chronicle. Feb. 11 the new District, which was formed of Western Colorado and Utah, held its first District Meeting in the First Grand Valley church.

Following this came a series of meetings, conducted by Eld. Salem Beery, of Deheque, Colo. As a result of these meetings, five souls put on Christ in the holy rite of baptism. Bro. Beery is an earnest, devoted servant in the Master's cause. In March we were favored by a visit from Eld. D. L. Miller. He gave us two very interesting talks, which were much enjoyed by all who heard him. How much we would enjoy to have him give us a full course of Bible Land talks!

Our mission point in Grand Junction is still growing, and we hope greater work will be accomplished, as from now on the mission work in the city will be under the immediate care of the District Mission Board.

Our Heavenly Father has cared very tenderly for his flock here during the year. Not one has been called away by death, and there were very few cases of sickness.

May we all endeavor so to labor for the Master, that we may have his continual care over us!

BRETHREN'S HOME, CARLISLE, PA.

The Brethren's Old Folks' Home is located nine miles south of Carlisle, six miles west of Mount Holley Springs. The Home was established Sept. 14, 1908. We now have six helpers, nineteen guests and several boarders in the Home. This two-story brick dwelling, 40 x 105 feet, is comfortably heated by hot water, and contains twenty-eight rooms. This Home was dedicated June 18, 1910. On that date we received nearly $300, for which we are very grateful. We have also been visited since then by many brethren and sisters, who very cheerfully donated to the noble work of this Institution. We are getting along very favorably; though we are not quite out of debt yet. However, I am of the same mind as I was when the Home was first established,—that in course of time the Home will become self-supporting.

We have public preaching every two weeks at 2:30 P. M., and Christian Workers' Meeting every Sunday evening, with but few exceptions. We farm sixty acres and raise a good deal of produce on it. D. E. Brown,

R. D. 5, Carlisle, Pa., Jan. 14. Steward.

HARRISBURG, PA.

Our records for the year ending Dec. 31, 1910, show that our Sunday-school, with A. H. Hoffer as superintendent, sustains a prosperous Mission school. Bro. A. H. Maugans is superintendent of this, assisted by a corps of earnest workers. A home department of sixty-seven members is sustained with Sister Lizzie Eshleman as superintendent. A cradle roll of 58 members is superintended by Sister Ella Brindle.

The amount contributed by the school for missions and benevolent purposes was $42.72, and the total offerings for the year were $171.34. The average attendance in the main school was 102.

The efficiency of the schools is maintained by monthly teachers' meetings and a teacher-training class, consisting of ten members, conducted by Bro. H. D. Widder.

Our newly-elected superintendent is Bro. A. L. B. Martin who, we believe, will be greatly assisted by the efforts of our home missionary, Sister Bertha E. Homer. May God bless our efforts more this year than ever, that we may reap souls for his harvest! Elton Peterman.

THE WINONA, MINN., MISSION WORK.

The first Tuesday evening in December we met for quarterly council. As Bro. P. W. Albert is going to leave, he resigned his office as clerk and church treasurer. Bro. Silas Wiltrout was chosen in his place. The following Sunday-school officers were chosen: Superintendent, Martha H. Keller; secretary and treasurer, Belle Thompson.

On Friday evening, Dec. 23, the Sunday-school gave a very interesting Christmas program, after which the children received a treat.

Dec. 25 Bro. J. S. Zimmerman, of Bethany Bible School, began a series of meetings, which lasted two weeks. On account of the cold, stormy weather the attendance was not so good. Four confessed Christ and were baptized,—a young father and mother, their son, twelve years old, and a young man eighteen years of age.

At the close of the meetings a love feast was held. Bro. John Wirt, of Lewiston, officiated. We want to thank all who have so generously remembered the Winona Mission this winter by remembering us with clothing and money, as well as by their prayers.

KANSAS CITY, KANS.

Last evening we held our quarterly business meeting. Three sisters were restored to fellowship. Sister Clara Nininger was elected Sunday-school superintendent; Sister Clara Funderburg was elected president of the Christian Workers' Meeting. The writer was chosen elder in charge for the year 1911. Three members of our Mission Board were with us. They have made some changes in our work, placing all the church services, except council meetings, at our Central Avenue church, in charge of Brethren O. R. McCune, W. P. Strole and Dr. Yereman. They are to divide the work between themselves, and the right to call on their help the writer, when they need his help and he is not otherwise engaged.

The writer takes the supervision and pastoral work at our South Side Mission, part of the time assisted by Sister Crist and Sister Barker, who are living in the mission property and in charge of the "rummage" department, and assist in the work. The Board also employed Sister Elizabeth Postma to assist in the work in the vicinity of the Central Avenue church.

At our South Side Mission we have a membership of thirty-four, with a Sunday-school of over 100, a weekly prayer meeting, Christian Workers' Meeting, and preaching every Sunday evening.

Our work is among the people of the packing house and manufacturing district. Hundreds are out of work, and even with more help than we have ever given before, there is much suffering for bread, clothing, bedding, and fuel. We are very thankful for your donations received, and ask your prayers and help in our struggles.

THE CHILD RESCUE SOCIETY IN KANSAS.

I am taking this method of calling attention to the needs of our Society. In addition to being in need of money successfully to carry on our work, we are at this time short on applications for children. Any one reading this notice, who would like to take one of "these little ones" into his home, in the name of the Master, or who can put us in communication with homes that would like to "receive one such little child," will do us a great favor by communicating with us early.

It is a noble work to relieve the needs of the orphans, and to start them in the pathway of right while they are in their innocence. It is certainly better properly to train them while young, than to arrest and punish them, and then support them in prisons, after neglect and sin have done their fatal work. The Lord has promised great things to those who deal out their "bread to the hungry," and that "bring the poor that are cast out to their houses," and cover the naked (Isa. 58: 7; also Matt. 25: 34-36).

We are working hard and doing all we can to gather in these little unfortunate ones, but we are greatly hindered because of the lack of funds and homes. We must have both, or the work must suffer. I will gladly correspond with any one who may be interested. E. E. John.

McPherson, Kans., Jan. 3.

FRUITA, COLO.

On New Year's Day we had a strong sermon by Eld. Frantz, urging new resolutions and a higher Christian life. One dear young brother entered the fold by baptism. At our quarterly council, presided over by Eld. S. Z. Sharp, new officers were elected for the year as follows: Bro. A. Gump, church clerk; Sister Anna Hertzler, chorister; Bro. Harold Pates, president of the Christian Workers' Meeting; Bro. Daniel Horning, Messenger solicitor; Sister Nora Hufford, church correspondent. Bro. J. A. Austin had previously been elected superintendent of the Sunday-school; Sister Pearl Horning, superintendent of the home department. Three letters of membership were also read.

Last Sunday evening our young people rendered a special program in the Christian Workers' Meeting, in which a letter from one of their number, Sister Emma Horning, of Ping Ting Chou, China, was read, which was very inspiring. Many prayers were offered in her behalf and the other missionaries. Addresses were given by the leader and others in behalf of our own mission in Grand Junction, Colo. Subscriptions were taken by our young people for the benefit of this mission, which amounted to $55.70. One young brother from this church goes each Sunday to work in this mission. Some of our young workers subscribed as much as $5 each, expecting to earn it by picking fruit. Nora B. Hufford.

Fruita, Colo., Jan. 9.

PING TING CHOU, CHINA.

At this date, Dec. 3, winter is on us, and the fields are covered with a beautiful mantle of snow. Several days ago about five inches of snow fell, and it still lies where it fell. The cold winds blow, making a walk very fresh and bracing, and the fireside very comfortable. The men go about the streets in heavy padded clothes and furs. Their shoes and storm hoods are also well wadded. The women do not venture out much, these cold days.

In the forenoons we are still studying on the language; then we teach several women and children who came to learn to read. We hope it is the beginning of a proper girls' school for next year. Most of the mothers will not trust their children with us yet. Many say it will not do for girls to learn any thing beside what they can learn. Several, however, have asked us to teach their girls, and they are proving that girls can learn. They think that boys should go to school, and most of the men can read. Pray that the way may open for a girls' school, next year, and that the Lord may be glorified through their lives.

To one home I go twice a week to teach the mother to read. She is as eager and as anxious to learn as a child when it first starts to school. She is not very well, and has her first baby, two months old, but she has her lesson good each time I come. We usually take Bible pictures along and talk about them and teach about our religion. The husband is very anxious for her to learn. At first he doubted if she could learn, but when I assured him that she could, he was very much delighted and now helps to teach her. He is also much interested in the Bible. The last time Sister Metzger and I were there, he got down a Gospel of Matthew that had been given to him, and read four chapters of it to one of his friends that was there. He explained much of it as he went along and seemed to understand pretty well. He is not counted a good man among his neighbors, but such Christ came to save, and we pray that the Holy Spirit may cleanse his life and show his people what the power of God can do. As he was reading about the temptation of Christ, his friend asked me if we had the devil in America. Do we? Sister Crumpacker Has been doctoring the dear little woman for some time, and she is feeling much better. They think we are very wonderful people.

The next day we stopped at a home to give the children some of the small Sunday-school cards that some of the home friends so kindly sent us. They think these cards are wonderful and are exceedingly anxious to get them. When we went into the house we found the mother sick in bed. We applied some of our simple remedies, for which she was very grateful. I had been in the home once before but then she was a little afraid of "the foreigner." This time she had had heart more of us, and was very friendly. She asked us to come often. I staid with her and talked quite a while, telling her why we had come to China. She asked all kinds of questions. She wanted to know what relation Crumpackers and Sister Metzger are to each other. Have the father and mother, brothers and sisters? Didn't I get very homesick so far from home? When could I go home again? How old was I? How much money did the Government give me for coming here? What kind of food did we eat—and who cooked it? Who was our gatekeeper?

These questions she asked, and many more, all of which I answered as best I could. On telling her that our friends were in here, and not the Government, she said that they gave us the money to live here and help her people; she said it was very kind of us to come, and very good of them to send us. She said that when we go home we must thank you very much for all your goodness to them. Pray that the light may fully come in that home, and that they may truly know our message.

Thus our days are spent among these people, showing them the way to Light. Emma Horning.

Notes From Our Correspondents

As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country

CALIFORNIA.

Covina.—Our church met in council, Eld. D. A. Norcross presiding. Eld. Norcross was elected as our pastor for the coming year. All officers for the year were elected. Bro. Layman was chosen chorister; Bro. J. F. Eberwein, Sunday-school superintendent; Sister D. B. McVey, president of the Christian Workers' Meeting. We have many things to interest and our energies, and expect this to be one of the most prosperous years in the history of the Covina church.—Mrs. D. B. McVey, Covina, Cal., Jan. 11.

Huntington.—Our church met in council Jan. 7, with our elder, Bro. J. W. Beardorf, presiding. Seventeen letters of membership were received. Oct. 1, 1916, we commenced with 130. Now our total membership is 139, five of whom have been baptized during the last quarter. Sister Myrtle Julius was elected pianist of the Christian Workers' Meeting and Sister Artaline Garvey, secretary-treasurer. We decided to organize a teacher-training class, a series of lectures being conducted by Bro. S. P. Sanger, closed on Sunday evening. Two accessions at the Christian Workers' Meeting and we greatly strengthened and encouraged.—Myrtle M. Julius, R. D. 3, Box 1, Huntington, Cal., Jan. 11.

Imperial Valley.—Our church met in council Jan. 14, with our elder, Bro. M. Gillett, presiding. Sunday-school officers were elected for the year. Bro. O. E. Gillett is our new superintendent. We also reorganized our Christian Workers' Meeting, with Sister Lottie McCall, president, and Sister Zetta Stephens, secretary.—Minnie Gillett, Holtville, Cal., Jan. 15.

Sacramento Valley church met in council Jan. 3. Our elder, Bro. Hiram Forney, of Chico, was with us. Three letters of membership were received. COLORADO

Bethany church met in council Jan. 11, with our elder, Bro. B. E. Kesler, presiding. Church officers were elected for the current year as follows: Bro. B. E. Kesler, elder; Bro. D. H. Akers, clerk; Bro. Alfred Troyer, treasurer; Sister Ida Yoder, Messenger agent; Bro. Alfred Troyer, writer; and myself, solicitor, to collect District Mission funds. Our Building Committee was elected an additional solicitor for our church-house, amounting to $114. Trustees were elected. Our preparations will begin in the near future. The work on the building will be pushed as rapidly as possible. We are rejoicing in the hope that we will soon have a churchhouse of our own. We have very little to report from our locations made by our dear brethren and friends. We are still in need of a comfortable means to warm the church, but we shall also be very glad to welcome any members who may wish to locate among us, to help build up the Church in this part of the great West.—Pearl Kesler, Riverbend, Colo., Jan. 16.

McClave.—Jan. 1 was the time to organize our Sunday-school, but on account of the weather being stormy, not many were present, so the organization was postponed for a week. Bro. L. H. Cline was elected as superintendent. Bro. L. P. Greenwood is Secretary of the Christian Workers' Meeting. The regular council was held on Saturday. Bro. W. D. Harris was chosen to fill the vacancy left by the death of our deacon, for us this summer. One was received by letter. Our little band of members here is getting scattered, and our services are all very well attended. The council meeting was presided over by our elder, Bro. W. D. Harris.—Elsie Harris, McClave, Colo., Jan. 17.

Notice.—The District Mission Board of Western Colorado and Utah decided, at their last meeting, to make a call for a resident minister and wife for the Grand Junction Mission. This point demands an earnest, wide-awake, conscientious brother, whose wife can and will take hold of the Sunday-school and other features of city work, and make them a success. Under such conditions a fair remuneration would be allowed by the Board. In answering send references. For further information address Bro. A. A. Weaver, R. D. 2, Grand Junction, Colo., who is chairman of the Mission Board.—R. Horn-baker, Secretary, R. D. 1, Grand Junction, Colo., Jan. 17.

CUBA.

Omaja.—Christmas Day dawned fair and beautiful, minus the cold and snow. How joyfully we wended our way to the church where, amid the beautiful and fragrant tropical flowers, we listened to the old, old story of our Savior's birth. Afterward, young and old, were presented with some gift, in remembrance of God's great gift to the world. In the evening we again met in Christian Workers' Meeting. A special program was rendered, which was well attended, and enjoyed by all present. Last night we closed a ten days' series of meetings, conducted by Bro. Kreider. Seven souls, small young boys,—came out on the Lord's side and were buried with him in baptism. How our hearts rejoice to see the children come to Jesus. May the year 1911 find us more zealous in the work of the Master like him each day.—Emma B. Kreider, Omaja, Cuba, Jan. 11.

FLORIDA.

Fort Lauderdale.—Lately my wife and I came to Southern Florida, expecting to locate at Miami. After looking over the country, we decided to locate at Fort Lauderdale, which is called the "Gateway of the Everglades." We purchased a tract of the Florida Fruit Lands Company, In the Everglades, which is now nearly drained, and in March we can have a splendid title to it. Fort Lauderdale is a new town. We found Bro. J. W. Dillon and wife here, and on Christmas eve Bro. John L. Kuns and wife came from McPherson, Kans. Other members are coming soon. Fort Lauderdale is equal to Southern California, and we would be pleased to have any Brethren who are thinking of locating in Florida to bring that they may decide to locate here.—This is a prosperous town. A fine clean element. The Sunday-school and Sabbath is respected by all.—C. H. Slifer, Fort Lauderdale, Fla., Jan. 3.

IDAHO.

Weiser.—Dec. 3 Bro. E. M. Studebaker and family, of Bethany Bible School, Chicago, came to us. He preached the Word with power on Sunday, both morning and evening. Jan. 2 we commenced a Bible school at 9:30 A. M., with devotional exercises; 9:50 A. M., "Bible Doctrine and Distinctive Plea," by Bro. E. M. Studebaker; 10:35 A. M., "The Epistles of Paul to Timothy;" 1 P. M., "The Doctrine of the Holy Spirit;" 2 P. M., "Missionary Work of the Church;" 7:30 P. M., "Missionary Work of Sunday-school;" 8 P. M., "Bible Doctrine." All these were good meetings. We surely enjoyed having Bro. Studebaker and his family with us. He closed his work here on the 14th. From here he went to Boise City, Idaho.—Sarah A. Burger, Box 477, Weiser, Idaho, Jan. 16.

ILLINOIS

Rockford.—The year 1916 for the Rockford Mission, closed with much encouragement. During the year six were added to the church by baptism. Several members moved in during the year, thus swelling our number. We now have forty members in the limits of territory. The average attendance for the Sunday-school for the year was seventy-eight. Every Sunday save one, during the year, the attendance was above the attendance of the corresponding Sunday the year previous. The church services too, and prayer meetings, are increasing in interest. Our Christian Workers' meeting was preached by all. The new year has opened up most encouragingly, and by God's help we are looking for still larger results. In spite of the inclement weather that January has brought us, the attendance has been good, and above that of last year in attendance. Sister Goldie Swartz is with us and helping in the work. Her presence and help are much appreciated by the church. The work in Rockford is good, and we shall try to press on in the Master's work.—P. R. Keltner, Rockford, Ill., Jan. 15.

INDIANA.

Camden.—Bro. D. L. Mohler, of Leeton, Mo., came to us Jan. 7, and remained with us until the 14th. Bro. Mohler. He gave us three lessons each day.—Bible reading and lectures in the evening. The subjects were "Lessons in the Sunday-school Lessons for 1911," and "The Parables and Bible Ordinances." The meetings were manifested during the entire session. We feel that Bro. Mohler was the right instructor for this place. We have organized a Christian Workers' Meeting, with Arnold Hoover, president, and Sister Ethel Wise, secretary. We have a growing, evergreen Sunday-school. Though we are few in number, we are striving to press on. Our elder, Bro. D. M. Byerly, for the upbuilding of God's kingdom.—Opal Hoover, Camden, Ind., Jan. 16.

Missisinewa.—Bro. Jesse Gump closed a two weeks' interesting meeting at the Center house, the house last Sunday night. One was baptized at our Union Grove house every day last report. We expect our District Sunday-school Secretary, Sister Emma Wise, to be with us next month.—Ruth P. Shoemaker, Sibleter, Ind., Jan. 15.

Plainfield.—This church met in charge of the Mission Board of Middle Indiana, they sent Eld. D. M. Byerly, of Hagley, Ohio, to conduct our series of meetings, to start on Jan. 7 and continued until the 16th. As a result of these meetings, 12 were baptized, and one was saved the nite. Sister Victoria Stonebarner, of the same address, was with us and conducted the song service, which added much to the interest of the meetings. Eld. Byerly apparently pleased all.—G. O. Bridge, R. D. 1, Reynolds, Ind., Jan. 18.

South Bethel.—Bro. Jesse Gump, Missionary.—Sister Mary Quitter spent Jan. 18 with us, giving us very interesting talks on India Mission. Bro. Gump preached two sermons. At Sunday-school she gave a little talk that so interested the boys and girls that they gave their pennies for her other talks. After the evening service they stayed to hear her sing a few Gospel hymns. We enjoyed having these elder people was just as intense. A number of them wished that they were in a position to give themselves for India's millions There is one thing sure, we will never forget the visit of an experienced missionary, whether mentioned or not.—that is in the joy of laboring for America's lost souls, for her to us because of their sacrifices but they are happier than the average American who has all the world can give them.—Ida Myers. The joy of ministry far exceeds the pleasure of self-gratification, and our visitors are full of the joy of ministry. Every missionary we have ever known is a verification of the fact that the Christian life is the sweetest service.—Cora V. Wise, R. D. No. 6, South Bend, Ind., Jan. 17.

Terre Haute.—I have been living in this city for some time, and so far have not found a church of our faith and practice.—My membership belongs in the near future. I am now in search of an earnest, God-fearing church where I can worship. I desire to what church this territory belongs, kindly write me? Also inform me in the near future concerning the same by giving the address of all such.—Rufus A. Robinson, 910 Sixth Avenue, Terre Haute, Ind., Jan. 16.

Union.—Our revival work at this place closed on Sunday night. Brethren Jesse and Stella Deeter were with us almost three weeks. Our progress was much retarded by the inclement weather, but the Lord was good to us and gave us five precious souls. Sister Deeter was with us every day, besides the good spiritual sermons, Bro. Deetg gave several Bible readings which were full of the Spirit. Sister Deeter is very interesting and instructive. Sister Deeter was instrumental in leading the song service, which was much appreciated. The church has been strengthened, and we all realize because of the ingathering of precious jewels. Our cottage prayer meeting, each Wednesday evening, is the means of development in prayer and which the church in general stands greatly in need.—A. Laura Appleman, Weymouth, Ind., Jan. 18.

IOWA.

Essex.—Bro. A. P. Simpson came in our midst Jan. 2 and commenced a series of meetings. Interest was manifested from to a crowded house, and had the best of attention and good order. The meetings were spiritual from beginning to end. We came to a close on the Lord's side. Four are families and one is a young lady. About eight or ten are almost ready to come to Christ. Are now wanting to do evangelistic work, will do well to write to A. P. Simpson, Mount Etna, Iowa.—Jacob Royer, Essex, Iowa, Jan. 18.

Kingsley.—Bro. W. H. Pyle, of Greene, Iowa, came to the Kingsley church Jan. 6. He gave us six sermons. The attendance was not as good as was expected on account of considerable sickness and cold weather, yet Bro. Pyle did not fail to do his part well. The services were held in town.—Phoebe Pott, Kingsley, Iowa, Jan. 17.

Scott.—Sunday-school met in council Jan. 8, with Bro. Peter Brower in charge. It was a very busy session. All the church and Sunday-school officers for the year were elected. Bro. J. O. Jennings was chosen superintendent of the Sunday-school, and Sister Ida Brower, secretary. Bro. Roger, president of the Christian Workers. Brethren Noah Harrison and I. S. Jennings were chosen as elders for the year, and with their wives, duly installed. The outlook for the coming year is encouraging. The Sunday-school is growing the best way last year. We baptized thirty-six and reclaimed one. We are praying that the Lord may give us more souls this year. We are also pleased to report all about well.—George W. Burgin, 107 South Moore Street, Ottumwa, Iowa, Jan. 18.

KANSAS.

Altamont.—We need some good brethren to locate in our congregation, where they are needed to help to work for the Lord and His cause. We have no resident minister, and We have a good churchhouse with a basement. The house is on a nice thirteen-acre tract two miles from a good little town, in which the county high school is located. We have a splendid Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Meeting. At present we have about twenty-five members. Land is worth from $35 to $60 per acre. We will answer all correspondence.—Address Sister Ida Hall, R. F. D. 1, Altamont. I am but I am interested in the church at this place. "Come over and help us."—Mrs. Ida Hall, Independence, Kans., Jan. 15.

Bethel.—Bro. D. B. Lybrook, of Oklahoma, Panhandle of Texas and Pecos Valley, N. Mex., will meet in regular council at Bethel, Kans., Jan. 21 at 1:30 P. M. in the Guthrie congregation, Guthrie, Okla. Any one wishing to present any business before this meeting will notify the secretary in due time.—A. J. Smith, R. D. 1, Argonia, Kans., Jan. 15.

Pleasant Grove.—Bro. C. D. Hylton just closed a series of meetings here at this place. Interest was good. "Preach the Word," which was strictly adhered to all the way through. The weather is inclement, so we did not have meetings during the last three nights. Bro. Hylton endeared himself to the hearts of the little folks. We feel to be especially favored in having Bro. Hylton with us. Bro. Hylton did just what a good many more of our ministering brethren should do, and that is to go into the destitute churches in the East, with from ten to twenty preachers,—change their locations often, and more can be reached and helped both spiritually and temporally. We should have been very glad to have Bro. Hylton locate with us, but the time was too late. Please read in No. 2, page 27, of the Gospel Messenger, what he has to say about the Pleasant Grove church. Right in line connecting it up with the "Old Paths" story of our dear Brethren who are wishing to change location, with the view of doing the Lord's work in the best way possible, have them locate with us.—J. A. Studebaker, R. D. 4, Lawrence, Kans., Jan. 15.

Protection.—There are now two families of the Brethren located here. We have no church organization as yet, but have preaching services, in the early spring. This is a fine section of country, and the valuable crops of alfalfa and corn may be grown. Alfalfa does quite well. As yet, land is cheap. We extend a cordial invitation to our Brethren to come and see for themselves. Address Sister Ida Hall, Protection, Kans. To any one desiring information about the country, I will gladly give it.—Mrs. Ida Hall, Protection, Kans., Jan. 15.

Kenton.—We have been greatly encouraged by a successful series of meetings held recently by Bro. Ernest Wampler, of Iowa. We had the Word preached in power and to by good-sized and attentive audiences. Five have applied for membership in the church and been baptized. Our Sunday-school is well attended. Bro. Alvah Becker, our reelected Sunday-school superintendent; Bro. Harry Long, Messenger agent and correspondent.—Lena Long, Ramona, Kans., Jan. 19.

MARYLAND.

Monocacy.—Our church met in council Jan. 14. We decided to have a missionary sermon preached at the different points in the congregation. Appointed Bro. Jesse Ebbert to take his place.—C. Pike, Detour, Md., Jan. 18.

Ridgely church met in council Jan. 13, our elder, S. K. Pike, presiding. Three letters were granted. The monthly Sunday-school collection amounted to $5.19. Our yearly collection was $9.56, which is to go into the home mission fund. The semi-annual collection amounted to $4.25, which is to go into the world-wide Missions. Jan. 16 the church convened in special council to call a minister to take charge of the work. Bro. Jesse Ebbert, K. Ziegler, who was duly installed. Eld. T. F. Imler, who has been under the hand of affliction, called for the elders and ministers to visit him and administer to him. Jan. 17 they were favored by having Bro. H. K. Ober, our District Sunday-school Secretary, with us. He gave us much helpful instruction.—Deborah King, Ridgely, Md., Jan. 16.

MICHIGAN.

Riverside.—Our church met in council Dec. 31. Sister Nettie Miller was elected as correspondent and Messenger agent. —Nettie Miller, Riverside, Mich., Jan. 17.

Woodland.—We are glad to report that two,—a father and his little son,—have chosen the higher life and have received baptism since the 1st of Dec. We have a splendid little singing class, which is being taught by Mr. S. U. Smith. Bro. A. J. Culler, of Manchester, Indiana, formerly of Landisville, Ohio, has promised to be with us in a series of meetings the last number of Feb.—J. J. England, Woodland, Mich., Jan. 17.

MISSOURI

Nevada.—We feel that the Lord is wonderfully blessing us. One more has accepted Christ, and was buried with him in baptism. Another one is about ready to be buried. Attendance is increasing at all of our services. The new year seems to be very encouraging.—Address all to J. J. England, Wood Street, Nevada, Mo., Jan. 14.

Pleasant Hill met in council Jan. 14. Eight were received by letter,—one of them a deacon. The solicitor reported $4.95 as being collected. Our Sunday-school is better now than it has ever been since our church house was built. Bro. Joseph Replogle is our superintendent. We reorganized our school on New Year's Day. Our elder, Bro. T. J. Simmons, is ill at this writing.—Elizabeth Lyon, Osceola, Mo., Jan. 16.

St. Joseph Mission.—We are still continuing our series of meetings with good success. Since our last report eight more have been baptized, making a total of seventeen. We have had some very bad weather for the meetings but have on the whole kept back a large attendance. A heavy storm of sleet has fallen, and there is about four inches of solid ice and snow on the ground, which makes walking very dangerous and many have been hurt from falls. We have never seen our region so destitute of food and fuel as they are now. We are facing sickness, poverty and distress on all sides. The city is trying to give relief, but it is not meeting all the demands. So far as our spiritual work is concerned, we will say that there is a decided improvement, and the outlook is good for a successful year's work. There is so much teaching to do, and so few of us to do it. We can scarcely do so much, and the rest is left undone. We shall be glad to correspond with some one who could furnish us two dozen second-hand "Song Praises" for use in our Sunday-school. Pray for us in St. Joseph.—E. N. Huffman, 502 Kentucky Street, St. Joseph Mo., Jan. 19.

NORTH DAKOTA

Bertiold.—We held a council meeting Jan. 14. Our elder, Bro. D. W. Shock, presided. Bro. I. B. Crumrine was elected president of the Sunday-school Workers' Meeting; Sister Ella Hoak, secretary-treasurer. Brother and Sister Hilton gave us a course of four lectures, which were very edifying and inspiring. We have a deeper knowledge of the work in Minot. An offering of $45.78 was taken.—F. J. Weimer, Bertiold, N. Dak., Jan. 16.

Kenmare.—Our church convened in council Jan. 14, with our elder in charge. The letter and query from other districts were elected for the year. Bro. J. C. Forney was retained as our elder. Bro. Swartz, secretary-treasurer.—Jennie Harris, R. D. 3, Kenmare, N. Dak., Jan. 16.

It was decided that our trustees purchase the last eight of the Bortz property for a cemetery. We also decided to apply the mission fun collected and the general balance of the year for the use of the new church at Akron, Ohio. The annual election of officers was held by ballot, resulting as follows: Bro. Charles Keim, member of the Center Board of Trustees; Bro. Grim, Lorain, Ohio, Jan. 16.

East Dayton.—Our Sunday-school scholars rendered a very appropriate program on Christmas evening, which was enjoyed very much by all. This is one way to encourage the latent talent of the little ones. In the absence of our pastor, Bro. J. W. Fidler, Bro. S. A. Bisenius, of West Alexandria, had the appointments, morning and evening, Jan. 15. This we much appreciated. Bro. Simons has regularly been added to the church by letter.—Elizabeth Grove, 261 Maple St., Dayton, Ohio, Jan. 16.

Mohican.—Bro. D. R. McFadden held a series of meetings at this place, closing Jan. 1, and organized a church of 15. While there were no accessions to the church, yet the members feel greatly encouraged and strengthened though his earnest labors and excellent sermons. Interest was good throughout the meetings. The attendance was good with the exception of the last week, when the weather was unfavorable and the roads were bad.—Lena Leaman, R. D. 6, West Salem, Ohio, Jan. 16.

Newton.—On New Year's morning Bro. E. S. Young began preaching. Jan. 16, a council continued until midnight. He preached eighteen sermons, besides giving us Bible lessons each evening before services. Four confessed Christ and were baptized during the meetings. Others seem to be near the kingdom. The members were strengthened and inspired to learn more of God's will concerning us. Our superintendent of Sunday-school worked during the summer and raised $18 for the Children's Sunday-school Extension Fund.—Mrs. Ida Pleasant Hill, Ohio, Jan. 17.

Notice.—This is to be interested in the Brethren's Home of Greenville, Ohio, especially the elders in charge of churches, and superintendents of the Sunday-school Workers' Meeting, will please note the following: Some of the schools are contributing very liberally, according to the appointment of the District Meeting of 1906. We urge that those that have not already done so take the matter up with their respective schools and see that it is to the children's credit as much as they will give liberally to help the poor, unfortunate and homeless children. We should like to raise $1,000 this year, in Southern Ohio. Send all funds to the secretary—A. B. Miller, Secretary and Treasurer, Pleasant Hill, Ohio.

Sidney.—The work here is progressing nicely. On New Year's morning we were buried in baptism, and on the same evening one more. On Monday evening a husband and wife were received into the church, making another young man. The next Sunday night his wife was received. Seven were received in all, the first week of the New Year. Our pastor, S. S. Smith, and wife have been with us for the last month. The members of that place in a series of meetings. Sister Lydia Baldwin, of North Carolina, is here to labor with the sick, and during their absence. The Lord blesses us in sending other ministers to us, for during the last year we have had only six.—Mrs. J. M. Brenneman, Sidney, Ohio, Jan. 15.

Williamstown.—Our series of meetings conducted by our pastor, Bro. J. J. Anglemyer, commenced on New Year's night, continuing until last night. Each evening, before preaching services, we studied the Book of Revelation, and we deemed to take an active interest. Considering the bad weather much of the time, the attendance and interest were very good. There were no accessions, but we pray that the good seed sown may bring forth unto us rich fruitage.—Mrs. J. W. Williamstown, Ohio, Jan. 16.

Wyandot.—Our church convened in council Jan. 14, with Bro. Joseph Robison presiding. Much business was transacted and all disposed of in a Christian spirit. Two letters of membership were received, and two members were received on their confession of faith. Our pastor is now having a series of sermons on the Ten Commandments which were very edifying. Last Sunday morning, Jan. 15, he preached on "Thou Shalt Not Kill," and much and meaning to us, which was very impressive. In the evening he talked on "Thou Shalt Not Covet," showing Jacob and the strong as well as the weak sides of Samson's character, making them applicable to each one of us. Our nominating committee are: Bro. Christian Workers' Meeting is Brace Miller, J. F. Showalter and Wilmer Keedy.

Heretofore each Sunday-school class chose their teacher, but by action of the members in council the teachers for the various classes are chosen by a committee composed of the elder, superintendent, assistant superintendent and two others.—Bro. Bruce Miller and Sister Minnie Rexroad. Bro. B. L. Dawson and wife, of the Washita church, Okla., presented their letters and were cordially received.

The past year has been a very successful one for our little band of Christian Workers, which has been presided over by Sister Cora Weaver. We are sorry that she is going to leave us, for she has been a faithful worker. Election of officers will be held on Sunday evening, Bro. Wilmer Keedy is president, and Bro. Raymond Rexroad, secretary-treasurer. We earnestly hope that success may crown our efforts during the present year. Our monthly collections are put into the fund for building a churchhouse in Hutchinson, which is needed badly. While the collection does not amount to very much at times, yet we want to keep the missionary spirit alive in our hearts.

IMPERIAL VALLEY CHURCH, CAL.

Saturday, Jan. 14, marks the dawn of a new era for the Brethren in the southern part of Holtville, in the Alamo district, when, in response to their call for a separate organization, they were duly organized and placed in working order.

The writer, assisted by Brethren L. M. Van Horn and J. S. Strickler, representing the mother church of the Valley, served as a committee to assist in the organization, and to arrange satisfactory boundary lines between the two congregations.

In order to save complications regarding the holding of their valuable church property, it was decided that the new organization retain the old name of the Imperial Valley Church of the Brethren.

This will necessitate the choosing of a new name by the members of the West Side, which will be announced in due time.

The new church begins her work in a commodious building, almost completed, with thirty charter members, among which number there are two ministers and two deacons.

Just preceding the organization we repaired to the water side, where one precious soul was buried with Christ in baptism.

The following church officers were elected: Elder in charge, C. E. Gillett; clerk, W. F. Gillett; treasurer, Robt. McCall; Messenger agent, Maggie Statler; church correspondent, Minnie Gillett; chorister, Lottie McCall. A board of five trustees was also chosen.

Regular services, consisting of Sunday-school, Christian Workers' Meeting and a mid-week Bible study, are now in progress, besides the regular preaching services each Lord's Day. W. M. Platt.

El Centro, Cal., Jan. 16.

FRUITVALE, CALIFORNIA.

We were blessed with beautiful weather during most of Eld. J. Harman Stover's ten days' stay with us in a series of meetings. Last night we held our Love Feast. On account of the heavy rains, yesterday and the night before, some of our friends and neighbors did not get to attend services last night, to see us celebrate the Lord's supper, as they had wished to do. We were sorry that a few of our dear friends did not get out to the love feast.

Through our dear brother's powerful, plain and touching talks, the church surely has been strengthened and built up spiritually. Some are under conviction,—yes, "almost persuaded." One lady remarked to me: "Such sermons are worth hearing. How inspiring and truthful! Our preacher in the city (San Francisco), who gets $9,000 a year, does not preach such Bible sermons as this man has preached to us."

Another woman also told the writer that she "believes we, as a church, live nearer to the Bible than any other church." When she was asked what there is yet, that she does not understand, she said: "The difference between the communion and the Lord's supper is not so clear to me as the rest is." We trust that the difference was clearly seen and understood last night.

We are glad to announce that our little band of sisters, for the first time, had the privilege and pleasure of breaking the bread and passing the cup, as the brethren do.

May the day draw near when the Church of the Brethren will have more strong men to send out to the hills, cities and plains, where souls are hungering for the Bread of Life!

ROARING SPRING, PA.

This church dedicated a new house of worship Oct. 30, 1910, and in the few meetings which followed, a revival spirit manifested itself in the confession and baptism of eight young persons, coming from our Sunday-school.

Arrangements had been made to have Bro. J. H. Cassidy to conduct a series of revival meetings for us, immediately following the dedication, but owing to the fact that the date of the dedication was deferred several weeks later than at first had been arranged, we were not permitted to have his services. So the pastor in charge tried to secure the service of another minister to conduct the meetings, but the members of the church realized that the harvest was ripe, from the fact that three young sisters had already applied for church membership and were baptized. The members unanimously insisted that our pastor in charge, Bro. O. V. Long, should hold these meetings as soon as possible.

With some degree of reluctance, yet with the weight of souls at heart, and the great interest he felt in the new field, Bro. Long took up the work. He preached to large and appreciative audiences in the evenings, and during the day his earnest personal work during the day, for three weeks. He spared no means to bring about the glorious results we yet realize from these efforts.

As a direct result from these meetings fourteen were baptized, the debt was reclaimed, while two still await the sacred rite. This makes twenty-eight accessions, since the dedication.

These latter range in age from sixteen to sixty-six years, many of them are heads of families. Others are promising young men and women, caring for parents and families at home. All bid fair to be useful in the Master's service, in this growing town.

The Sunday-schools have grown steadily at both houses. A home department and cradle roll have been added to the work of the new school, which are doing telling work.

A live Christian Workers' Meeting is also making itself felt in the new activity of the church. We pray that the good work of the Lord may go on and prosper, not only in numbers, but in spirit, that, when it shall be the Master's good pleasure to "gather his elect from the four winds," this church, with all other faithful churches, will be one glorious, united body,—the "Bride of the Lamb,"—prepared to enter the New Jerusalem, to sing God's praises throughout eternity. "The glory of the Lord shall endure forever: the Lord shall rejoice in his works."

Roaring Spring, Pa., Jan. 11. Elizabeth Bare.

EXTENSION NUMBER AT CHICAGO.

Our opportunities are going to be much greater this year than last, because the mechanical shop building, for which we have been praying, is soon to be ours. It may be a surprise for you to learn that it is under erection, and we hope to be able to occupy it by the first of March. We praise God for it, as it will mean so much to our work at this stage of its development.

It consists of three floors. The basement is to be fitted up for industrial purposes. There will also be one small flat to rent. The main floor will be the audience room, with five Sunday-school rooms, and the second floor will two seven-room flats to rent. A building of this kind is thought to be best adapted for our work. Besides affording a place of worship, it has a homelike appearance.

We are glad to see the interest manifested in it by everybody. It ought be of interest to us, because of the sacrifice our children made for it. It is customary for us to give our children a treat each Christmas. It was suggested to let the children say which they would rather do,—receive the treat or buy something for the new building. Without hesitation, every child was in favor of the latter. It gave us great pleasure to see this sacrificing spirit, so pleasing to our Lord, who will give them many blessings for it.

Many kinds of good clothing have been received, and if the givers could see the homes into which these things were placed, I am sure they would feel repaid for all they have done. There are many needy homes in Chicago, because of conditions which have been favorable, and it is these conditions we hope to better by your kind and the Gospel of Jesus Christ. You help us more than you realize. Not only is the home opened that receives, but others, looking on, see in it the true essence of the Christlife.

We are especially thankful for the ready-made garments, but we try to let nothing go to waste. The articles which we can not dispose of, we rip and make over into something we can use. You would be surprised to see the little dresses, coats and pants we made. The mothers of the neighborhood help us, and in that way we try to be a blessing to each one. They often take work home with them, and finish it during the week. The personal contact means so much, as we come in touch with the mothers in this way. We are glad for this open door of opportunities. Pray for us. Nora E. Holsinger.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

The second annual Bible Term of the District of Northern California was held in Empire church Dec. 26 to 31. The course of instruction comprised a study of the "Epistles to the Romans and Colossians," "The Life of Christ," or "Harmony of the Gospels," and "Church Government." Bro. J. F. Boyer, of Lordsburg College, handled the teachings of these epistles in a most faithful and impressive manner.

God's Divine plan, as portrayed in the Book of Romans, is a most wonderful field for thought and meditation for the Christian life. A practical side of the Book of Colossians appeals to both old and young. The study of "Church Government," as conducted by Eld. S. F. Sanger, in its various relations and practical applications, in our local churches, should help each one to see his individual responsibility in the church of Christ.

The course of instruction during this week was inspiring to all and the interest manifested by the young was indeed commendable. As a result of the work, a class was with evangelistic services each evening, a number gave their hearts to Christ.

The opportunity for Bible study, such as the annual Bible Term affords, is certainly most inspiring and uplifting to the spiritual life of the church. We would that the local congregation where it is held. Each one can well afford to sacrifice in other ways, that they may receive full benefit of the same.

And now the Bible Term arrangements may be completed early for another Bible Term, we ask that the churches of the District send in their calls for the same, and the committee will then be able to complete arrangements and announce the program as decided by District Meeting.

The work of our District has gone forward encouragingly the past year. The nucleus of more than one new church has been formed, and ministers, desiring location in the District, should note these. Chico, already organized, has need of a number of Brethren families to help the work along- Fresno, a most favorable opening for mission work, deserves special attention at this time. The Reedley congregation is looking forward in anticipation of new series of meetings, to begin Jan. 15, conducted by Bro. L. D. Bosserman. Our love feast is appointed for Jan. 28. D. L. Forney.

Burks Fork church met in council Jan. 14, with Bro. Joel Weddle presiding. Two were received by letter. The business was disposed of in a brotherly way.—Maggie Hylton, R. D. 2, Box 34, Floyd, Va., Jan. 18.

Chicago (Hastings Street Church).—Our regular quarterly council was held on Saturday evening, Jan. 14, and our love feast a week later. Both meetings were well attended and were a source of help to the church. Bro. E. E. Eshelman is preaching an excellent series of sermons for us on Sunday evenings. On Thursday evening of this month Sister Kitty Smith will tell her story to our Sunday-school children and their parents.—J. E. Keller, 1526 Hastings Street, Chicago, Ill., Jan. 21.

Beech Grove.—Two were received by letter at our late council meeting. Our Sunday-school took up a collection of $1.54, Jan. 15, for the Chicago Sunday-school Extension Fund. —Stella Shull, R. D. 38, Ingalls, Ind., Jan. 21.

Myerstown.—Bro. John Zug, of Elizabethtown, Pa., came to us Jan. 7, to assist in a series of meetings. He put in eighteen able discourses. The members were much encouraged and strengthened. SOUTHERN MISSOURI.

The Sunday-school Convention of Southern Missouri and Northwestern Arkansas, for the first quarter of 1911, convened in the Peace Valley church Jan. 15, 1911, at 10 A. M. An interesting Sunday-school was conducted by the regular superintendent, after which the following organization was effected: Bro. N. N. Garst was elected moderator, and Sister Annie Diediker secretary. The different topics on the program, concerning Sunday-school work, were discussed,—how to teach the different classes, and also the moral and spiritual import of the Sunday-school. Select recitations and songs were given by the Peace Valley Sunday-school, followed by Round Table talks by a number of our members. Quite a few belonging to other fraternities also took an active part in the discussions during the meeting.

The Peace Valley Sunday-school was encouraged by the presence and the inspiring talks of our District Sunday-school Secretary, Sister Emma Wine. Our resolutions for 1911 were, "More and better Bible study, and more souls won to Christ." The next meeting is to be held at Nevada, Mo., on Easter Sunday, and different Sunday-schools are invited to represent by delegate. If not by delegate, send in a report of your schools.

Peace Valley, Mo., Jan. 16. Annie Diediker.

CONWAY SPRINGS, KANS.

We held our first council for 1911 today. Our elder, Bro. A. J. Smith, presided. During the year 1910 we remembered the Old Folks' Home with our apportionment. St. Joseph, with a Christmas dinner for the poor; Child Rescue Work, and Chicago Church Extension with donations. We held one series of meetings. Our contributions to missions amount to about $366. We feel that we might have done better, had it not been for short crops and a consequent financial depression. We praise God for the privilege of doing what we did. Our Aid Society also made a favorable report. Besides raising $58 they secured a quilting frame and a sewing machine during the year. We decided to begin a Bible Normal on the first Sunday in February, to be conducted by Eld. A. J. Smith. Eld. J. J. Bowser and wife were elected on the Local Child Rescue Board. Bro. Wm. Thompson, our Sunday-school superintendent, is taking hold of the work with a determination to do effectual work. Bro. M. M. Troxel is doing the same with the Christian Workers' Society. All these officers can be addressed at Conway Springs, Kans. We also held an election for two deacons, who were duly installed into office. The lot fell on Brethren Arthur Ebersole and Ira Fasnacht. Several matters were attended to that, we hope, will terminate in great things for the Lord. J. J. Bowser.

Jan. 14.

NORTHERN MISSOURI.

The members of our District met at Rockingham Dec. 25, 1910, for a special Sunday-school Bible Institute. Bro. R. H. Nicodemus, of Bethany Bible School, was our instructor. We had an enrollment of 250, of which forty-two were Sunday-school workers, and eleven were ministers. Nine churches in the District were represented, and three that are outside of the District. Twenty-six lessons were given, including "Homiletics," "Sunday-school Conference," "Chapters in Psalms and the New Testament," and "Doctrine." This is a new work for our District, but every one who attended considered it a decided success. A good many said they were in favor of making it an annual gathering, having all the ministers and Sunday-school workers to meet in a special Institute.

Bro. Nicodemus' work showed thorough preparation. He proved himself a competent teacher, and guided by the Holy Spirit. His earnestness and zeal in the work commanded the attention of every one. It was the expressed desire of many that we get Bro. Nicodemus to continue this work. In the "Homiletic Lessons" the qualifications and the position of the message bearer were amply discussed. The relation of the Sunday-school teacher to church and world awakened some new thoughts as to the selection of teachers, and their responsibility after being selected. The last night of the meetings it was cold and rainy, but there was an attendance of more than a hundred. Committee, B. F. Shirk, Chairman;

Plattsburg, Mo., Jan. 15. Ona M. Hogan, Secretary.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL INSTITUTE OF MIDDLE IOWA.

The first Sunday-school Institute of the Middle District of Iowa was held in the Dallas Center church Jan. 12, 13 and 14, with Bro. J. G. Royer as the instructor. Bro. Ira Pahley, of Maxwell, was chosen as moderator, and the writer, secretary.

The session began each day at 9:45 and closed at 3, with an intermission of an hour for lunch. The first part of the evening session was devoted to the children; then one Sunday-school topic was discussed, followed by a short sermon.

The trend of thought, throughout the Institute was the teacher, his spiritual and social preparation, methods, and better training. Bro. Royer portrayed Jesus as the "Great Teacher," and illustrated in his method of teaching. The boy problem and child nature were discussed with much interest. Some of the golden nuggets which he gave us were: A Sunday-school is a place where something is taught and lived. The Bible should be in the mind, and Christ in our hearts. Sunday-school teaching is a bursting out of what has first burst in. Greater reverence as we enter the house of God. Never doubt God nor your teacher. Study your message until you know it. Teach children "to be." Too much teaching stops in the head. You win a boy by what you are, not by what you say to him. More training and not so much teaching. A Sunday-school teacher's aim should be a life well pleasing to God.

The sentiment expressed in the personal testimonial service was that the Institute was a success, largely due to the untiring efforts of Bro. Royer.

We were favored by the presence of Sister Sadie Miller, who gave a number of very interesting talks concerning her work among the people of India, thereby instilling into our Sunday-schools a deeper missionary sentiment. Sister Miller also directed the song service.

The attendance was good, there being an average of 150 at each session. Eight Sunday-schools of the District were represented. Many expressed the desire that a similar Institute might be conducted each year in our District. We feel sure that when the benefit resulting from a Sunday-school Institute is more largely realized, no Sunday-school of our District will fail to be represented.

Credit is due our District Sunday-school Secretary, Sister Ella Royer, for originating and carrying to a successful completion this first Sunday-school Institute of the Middle District of Iowa. Bertha Wise Royer.

AROUND THE WORLD

Another Gain for Arbitration.

Through the strenuous efforts of Secretary Knox, the differences that have been pending between the Haitien and Santo Dominican people are to be submitted to arbitration. These two nations, it will be remembered, occupy an island southeast of Cuba, and the dispute in question hinged on the location of the frontier line. It seemed, for a while, as if nothing but the force of arms could settle the point in question, and soldiers were massed near the borders of the respective countries. It was then that Secretary Knox proposed the sensible and satisfactory arbitration plan, which both of the contestants agreed to accept, and which will doubtless be far better in the end than any resort to arms could possibly have been.

Mohammedan Devotion.

A traveler who recently visited Broussa, Asia Minor, at one time the capital of the Ottoman Empire, reports that from the windows of the girls' mission school in that place he could see the minarets of no less than sixty mosques. He further learned that, of the 120,000 inhabitants of the city, 100,000 are Mohammedans who, practically all, respond to the mosque's appeal for daily prayer. The traveler says that the intense and unquestioning loyalty of these followers of the prophet,—a blind zeal though it be,—made him do some serious thinking. We, too, are wondering. Should not we, as professing Christians, display a greater degree of diligence, "inasmuch as we know that our labor is not in vain in the Lord"?

The Church Superseded.

Asserting that "the church is no longer the gateway to heaven, and that it is gradually becoming merely an educational institution," the pastor of a Universalist church in a city adjacent to Chicago announced that he will open a moving picture show in his church, charging a nominal admission for the entertainment thus furnished. He urges that the trend of the age calls for advanced methods, and he proposes to be fully alive to that desire, "relegating the old-style preaching about future punishment, and other distasteful topics, to oblivion." While this minister,—with hosts of others before him and still more to follow after,—is attempting to devise ways and methods of spiritual upbuilding other than those laid down by Christ, it is not hard to predict the final result of such a course. "Other foundation," says Paul, "can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

China Appeals to the World.

So extended is the increase of plague in China that the authorities are finding themselves practically powerless to cope with the dreaded epidemic. The leading powers of the world are now being appealed to for expert medical aid to study plague conditions and assist in its extermination. American Minister Calhoun, at Pekin, is, by order of our State Department, arranging for American missionary physicians to assist in this important work, and it is thought that effective help will be afforded by this means. Unfortunately the first outbreak of plague was not confined to as narrow limits, by the authorities, as should have been done, which makes the present task of elimination exceedingly difficult. It is encouraging, however, to see how generally the nations are responding to the appeal for medical help, as well as for relief in the great famine sufferers in the Anhui province. It is a recognition of the kinship of man,—the love that never fails.

Our Obsolete Warships.

On the authority of an expert in naval matters we are assured that within a few years forty-four of the nation's warships, which originally cost $138,597,042, will be so much out of date, as fighting machines, that they will have to go to the scrap-heap. At the present writing the cruiser Detroit commanded, when sold recently, these stately vessels will scarcely yield $880,000. This means that the tax-payers of the United States must face a loss of almost $138,000,000, saying nothing of the scores of vessels now being built, which, though still more expensive, will soon be antiquated also, and share the fate of their predecessors. Facts like these should cause serious thought concerning some apparently very foolish things that we, as a nation, are doing. The best defense of a people rests not in its battleships but in its righteousness. Such an attitude,—pleasing to the Lord,—will cause even our "enemies to be at peace with us."

Spain's Revolt from the Vatican.

Really surprising are the momentous changes in the religious life of Spain. For centuries the country was the home of intense ecclesiasticism, bigotry and persecution. It was the originator of the terrible Inquisition and its unmitigated horrors. Now it stands before the world as the champion of religious toleration,—a reformation more far-reaching, in many ways, than that of Luther. The American and British Bible Societies are preparing for a systematic campaign of Bible distribution throughout the country. That in itself will be a mighty gain for evangelical Christianity, for "the word of God is quick and powerful," bringing conviction to many honest and sincere hearts.

The Pocket Testament League.

Perhaps most of our readers have heard of this organized movement, forwarded by devoted workers all over this country,—those who are fully convinced of the value of God's Word, and are willing to show that the Book of books is the secret of all success in individual and national life. The best recommendation of this excellent plan is its great simplicity. Without special preparation or appointment any one may be an active worker in the Pocket Testament League. The distributor may work at all seasons and times, in practically all places, and with any class of people. Wherever he finds anyone who is willing to accept a Testament, promising to read at least one chapter a day, there is his opportunity. Already untold good has been accomplished and still more will be done in the future. "My Word," says the Lord, "will not return unto me void."

More Discoveries in Samaria.

Upon authority of the New York Tribune further discoveries are announced as having been made in King Ahab's ancient capital. Several weeks ago we mentioned some valuable finds by the Harvard Exploration Society, but the recent discovery of a hundred clay tablets, covered with inscriptions, bids fair to add valuable and authentic information to the history of that age. These tablets are a part of the archives of King Ahab, a contemporary of the Prophet Elijah. The inscriptions are not cut into the tablets, but are written in old Hebraic characters with the intensely black ink similar to that found on the Egyptian papyri between one thousand and two thousand years before Christ. So far as examined, the tablets afford convincing proof as to certain phases of Old Testament history which modern critics have treated as mythical and unreliable. Once more is truth triumphant.

Church or Lodge—Which?

Masons boast much of the advantages and privileges of "Ancient, Free and Accepted Masonry," though it is difficult to see of what their supposed "freedom" really consists. Apparently all things must be made subservient to the all-important lodge and its ceremonies. When, on a recent occasion, the members of a certain lodge were ordered to be present, one of them failed to appear. Immediately he was sent for, and at once questioned by the "Worshipful Master" as to the reason for his failure to attend the session. The offending member plead that, being a member of a certain church, he was engaged in a series of meetings, he felt duty-bound to be there. Thereupon the presiding official told him most emphatically, "Your first and only duty is to the lodge." This shows how the lodge arrogates to herself privileges and powers greater than the church, "the pillar and ground of the truth."

What the Government Offers.

Some of the periodicals are severely criticising our military authorities, because of the very glowing and even captivating advertisements they recruits by the army and navy. One of these reads: "The soldier receives board, lodging, clothing, medical attendance, baths, lights, and the advantage of schools; libraries and gymnasiums with modern appliances, etc.; full pay and allowance while sick and while on a furlough; a pension for life if permanently injured or incapacitated in line of duty." With much propriety the question has been asked, Why should not the multiplied thousands of toilers in the United States, —the real factors in the nation's prosperity,—be favored with a few of the advantages, so freely lavished upon its military men? It is to be regretted that more and more our nation is following in the wake of Europe, adding to its military forces and equipment until the daily expense, all told, is nearly a million dollars. And yet we lay claim to being a Christian nation,—followers of the Prince of Peace, the essence of whose teachings is love to all men.

The Reforesting of Palestine.

The Jewish National Fund has begun with the replanting of trees on the barren hillsides of Palestine. It will be remembered that the Romans cut away practically all mountain forests during the devastating wars that culminated in the destruction of Jerusalem. The usual desolating after-effects of such a wholesale destruction of hillside timber belts brought about serious disturbances in the natural water supply, and it is hoped that the contemplated replanting of trees will do for Palestine what it has done for other countries. Already some of the best oranges are now grown in favored portions of the country, and the culture of this fruit is to be extended to other sections. The olive tree and its culture, however, is likely to prove most remunerative for the farmer of Palestine, and it is estimated that by 1912 the Jewish people alone will own 60,000 olive trees. A Jewish rabbi recently said: "The olive is the symbol of the end of sorrows. It was the sign to Noah that the waters had receded. Let us hope that it may mean, for our people, the close of its tragic history."

The Fallacy of Saloon Arguments.

It is a favorite argument of the liquor element that a vital blow is struck at municipal revenues if a city's income from licenses is stopped. This plea was recently made in Chicago by one of the liquor traffic's most able defenders. Mr. Duncan C. Milner, in replying to this and other arguments, brought out the fact that "the people who can least afford it spend more than $100,000,000 for that which injures and destroys them, so that the city of Chicago can get a revenue of $8,000,000." Such a method, applied to business enterprises, would be suicidal. Much of the boasting, so frequently heard, regarding the large amount of money contributed by the liquor men towards municipal expenses, is entirely unwarranted and cannot be supported by facts. One thing, however, can be proved by actual figures,—for every dollar, received in the city of Chicago from the saloon interests, ten dollars must be spent for resultant pauperism and crime. This fact is never mentioned by defenders of the rum traffic, nor do they care to dwell on that most solemn accusation of Holy Writ that "no drunkard shall inherit the Kingdom of God."

The Mission Field at Our Door.

With its cosmopolitan population New York,—the eastern gateway of our nation,—presents exceptional opportunities for active mission work, and yet no great effort is being made to utilize this great field at our very door. It is well, perhaps, to see ourselves, in this respect, as others see us. A Japanese visitor, after noting conditions in New York, reports that the 1,500 Japanese in that city, who might so easily be approached by Christians, are practically uncared for. With evident truthfulness he says: "Though they are courteous and tractable, and have ample time for Christian instruction, they are not sought out individually and helped spiritually to any great extent. Many of them carry solemn impressions received from missionaries in Japan, and they are wondering why there are not more real Christians in the United States, to present the inspiration to holy living." This testimony presents a peculiar attitude of the Christian world. It really seems as if much of the good work, done by missionary teachers in Japan, is neutralized by the frivolous unconcern of Christians in America, too much at ease in Zion.

"Uncle Sam" a Partner.

A liquor firm in Ogden, Utah, is sending out broadcast a leaflet which boldly announces that "Uncle Sam is our partner." There is so much truth in the allegation,—which doubtless was meant to be humorous,—that there is no reason why it should be proof of the partnership with the dram seller. And yet, in permitting the infamous liquor business to flourish, in consideration of the revenue paid, our Government is made a partner in the pernicious traffic it controls and protects. Any government,—national, State, or municipal,—that shares the proceeds of such a system, becomes a sharer of its infamy. Our National Government, however, is a partner in a way still more vicious. In some of the "dry" territory there may accordingly be federal law, be liquor imported from other States in defiance of the State prohibition. It is the aim of the Miller-Curtis bill,—now in the hands of Congress,—to bring about a much needed reform in this matter, but, as may be readily inferred, there is a strong pressure by the liquor men against it, and only by the united request of the temperance forces will our lawmakers be prevailed upon to pass the measure. Here is the place where the "word in season" is needed.

Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth

Dedicatory Hymn.

8s and 7s.

BY JAS. A. SELL.

Thou, O Lord, who art in heaven,
And hast made the earth and sea,
Meet us in this humble temple,
Where we come to worship thee.
When the storms of life assail us,
And we need protecting power,
May this place become a shelter
In the dark and trying hour.

Come, dear Lord, and meet thy people
When they gather here to pray,
May thy presence be their comfort,
Leading in the perfect way.
May the weary, tempted pilgrim
Seek the shelter of this place,
When the soul that help is craving,
Given only by thy grace.

May the Holy Spirit's presence
Make this house a sacred place,
While thy saving truth and power
Show thy lovely, smiling face.
When we sing the songs of Zion,
Fill each heart with joy and praise,
Lift our souls from earth to heaven
In the sweet and solemn lays.

Hollidaysburg, Pa.

Paul as a Preacher and Pastor.

BY JOHN W. WAYLAND.

"Who then is Paul?" 1 Cor. 3: 5.

As to natural endowments, Paul was intellectually keen and vigorous. His mind was logical in high degree, manifesting in striking manner, both analytical and synthetical power: not only being able to dissect an argument or a situation into its elements, but also possessing the constructive ability necessary to combine various necessary factors into a plan, method, or system. He was sympathetic, conscientious, practical. Let us emphasize the term practical, and look at it from two sides. Paul was practical in the commonly thought-of sense of having ideas that fit situations and facts. He was practical in this sense. He was not vain or idle in his schemes. But he was also practical in the more literal sense that he was a worker,—he did things: practical in the sense of being efficient. Finally, as to natural endowments, he combined an inflexible strength of purpose with a reverent spirit, humbly obedient to Divine Authority.

As to education and training, Paul was again unusual. As a boy he went to school in Tarsus, and doubtless at the same time spent regular hours as an apprentice in the workshop of some tent-maker. Tarsus was what we would call a great university town, and it is likely that the young Jew and Roman citizen went through the advanced schools. He seems to have had college-grade training, at any rate, received somewhere else if not at Tarsus. But this was not enough for his purpose: he was going to be a rabbi—a lawyer and teacher of the law—so he needed, or thought he needed, something more in the way of special or professional training. Accordingly, he went to Jerusalem, the storied city of his fathers, and there took a course in the famous rabbinical school: sat at the feet of the great Gamaliel until he was deemed ready for his chosen work. Having studied the Old Testament Scriptures, together with the explanations and applications thereof, as given by the famous rabbis, and having proved himself skilled in questioning, answering, and in debate, he went out to his sacred task.

He was zealous for the law, and exceeding mad against the sect represented by Stephen and others, until he met Christ outside Damascus, and became a Christian himself. His conversion was an important step—a radical step—in his experience and training. At Damascus, in Arabian solitudes, at Jerusalem, at Tarsus, at Antioch, he continued to see unfolded the plan of Christ in him, and he grew stronger and stronger for his new calling. His work at Antioch, for a year or more, under the personal leadership of the wise Barnabas, was a most valuable stage of Paul's training. All this time, as ever afterward throughout his life, he was getting a broad and deep acquaintance with human nature and human life, as well as with human need and divine mercy.

Paul was divinely appointed as well as divinely trained for his task. Christ at Damascus, both in person and through Ananias, gave him a vision of the future. At Tarsus the call came from God through Barnabas; and at Antioch, when the time was finally ripe, the Holy Ghost said: "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." Paul was divinely chosen, divinely called, and divinely appointed, although the divine work was done in large measure through human agency. And Paul knew that he was called of God and sent forth by God. He never forgot his obligation to his Master.

What was the subject of Paul's preaching? Christ! Christ crucified! Christ crucified, risen, ascended! Christ gracious, Christ glorious! Christ suffering, but Christ triumphant! Paul preached Christ as the Messiah of prophecy—a suffering Messiah; as the risen and life-giving Lord; as Jesus of Nazareth and the Son of God.

What were Paul's qualities and habits as a preacher? He was instant—standing ready, prompt in action. This is illustrated at the Philippian jail, on Mars' Hill, before Felix, on board the founudering ship, in prison at Rome. He was simple—plain, straightforward, without display. He was fearless. This is shown in numberless instances. He feared neither power nor position, danger, suffering, nor death. He possessed physical courage, but he was even more conspicuous for his moral courage. He was self-supporting, mainly, though he acknowledged gifts from the Philippians, and levied contributions widely for the poor at Jerusalem.

Paul was a pastor as well as a preacher. In Acts 20: 20, 31, he speaks of his house-to-house ministrations in Asia Minor. He not only made converts on evangelistic tours, but he revisited the places where he preached, and organized the churches in the effort to put them on a self-sustaining basis. Moreover, he wrote letters to the churches he could not visit, or at times when he could not strengthen them with his presence; and these letters became a priceless heritage to all Christian churches in all succeeding generations. He preached Christ, and he imitated Christ in being a pastor as well as a preacher.

Some of Paul's best work was done in the exercise of his strong personal influence over other men. He exerted an influence upon them, and touches us through them. Timothy, Titus, Luke, Onesimus, not to mention others—these are some of the strong young men who felt the thrill of holy zeal in the company of Paul. He evidently had the faculty for companionship, the power of making and holding personal friends, no less than that of swaying collective audiences. We may properly say, I think, that the training of such men as Timothy and Titus was a part of St. Paul's pastoral work. He was a good pastor, much like the Good Pastor.

Finally, Paul believed his own message. Not only so, but he was enthusiastic over it. His work was his life. Natural power, varied and protracted training, good qualities, good methods, clear perception of the truth, keen sense of duty,—all these culminated in a living faith that was strong enough to face any danger, and in a love that attracted souls like a magnet attracts iron. Knowing whom he believed, it was easy for him to believe what That One taught; it was easy to imitate what That One did.

Texts That Have Helped Me.

BY ELIZABETH HOWE BRUBAKER.

In preparing my Sunday-school lesson for this week, I came by a text that has helped me many times. It seemed like meeting an old friend. The words are these: "For the eyes of Jehovah run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward him" (2 Chron. 16: 9, R. V.). This suggests Prov. 15: 3, "The eyes of Jehovah are in every place keeping watch over the evil and the good." Both these texts suggest the omniscience of God,—his continued knowledge of things as well as of persons.

> "The great round world is full of things,
> Not only armies, and realms, and kings,
> And lands, and seas, and forests tall,
> But little things, so small to see,
> So many they cannot counted be,
> Yet, wonderful thought, the Lord knows all.
> "O wonderful thought, that he can know all,
> Not only the mighty and the small;
> Not only the Alp but each flake of its snows,
> And he pities and pardons and loves so well
> That you and I in the thought may dwell,
> And not be afraid, for we know he knows."

God made us and placed us here, and when we transgressed, he sent his Son to deliver us from the consequences of transgression. Not only this, but his eye is ever watching over us, his eyes run to and fro throughout the whole earth for the purpose of showing himself strong in behalf of them whose hearts are perfect toward him. The words of 2 Chron. 16: 9 are the words of the prophet Hanani to King Asa. This is a sad chapter, telling as it does the mistake of a man who, for almost two score years, had been so remarkably true to God.

When Baasha built Ramah, to keep his people from flocking to the support of Judah's king, we see that Asa, who had so frequently gone to God for help, turned this time to the heathen king, Ben-hadad, of Syria. Ben-hadad, charmed by the valuable gifts from Asa, at once turned enemy to Israel and began attacking her northern cities. Baasha, King of Israel, was thus obliged to leave Ramah and turn his attentions to his northern possessions. Thus Asa's policy seemed successful, but how foolish and how worldly his act, so unworthy one of God's servants! How soon he forgot God's wonderful deliverance from the Ethiopians! Asa not only corrupted the fidelity of an ally of Israel, but he misappropriated the temple treasures and rendered himself liable to renewed troubles (1 Kings 15: 32; 2 Chron. 16: 1, c.). He turned from God to man for help, therefore the rebuke of God, through the prophet Hanani (2 Chron. 15: 7-9). Had the combined forces of Syria and Israel attacked Asa, could not Jehovah have delivered him from both?

God wants men and women whose hearts are right with him. Speaking after the manner of men, he needs such. His eyes run to and fro, looking for such. He wants to show himself strong through them. The powers of Satan are mighty, but God is almighty, and he wants to prove his might through you and me. Nothing is too hard for him, and he wants to do hard things through his servants,—through such as are right with him at heart.

Wonderful grace! To think that God comes down to us, using us as channels through which to work! God has a work to do. He will accomplish his purposes. If we put ourselves in such relation to him that he can use us, we shall share the blessing. "For the eyes of Jehovah run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward him" (2 Chron. 16: 9, R. V.).

Going Up to Jerusalem.

BY W. R. MILLER.

Philistia of Today.—No. 1.

Before giving an account of my ten days' horseback trip through these rich, historic plains of the Southwest, I desire to give a bit of history relative to Philistia, as gleaned from Baedeker's "Palestine and Syria":

> "In the country of Peleshet, i. e., the low plain between Carmel and the frontier of Egypt, we find in historical times 'Philistines, or Philistines, a nation which did not belong to the Semitic race. Their invasion was made from the sea about 1100 B. C., when they took possession of the coast with its originally Canaanitish towns. Their origin is unknown. The Bible (Amos 9: 7, etc.) connects them with Caphtor, which has been supposed to be Crete. The Septuagint describes them as 'people of another race.' The Philistines adopted not only the civilization but the Semitic language and the cult of the Canaanites. Their principal divinities were Dagon (Marnas), a Canaanitish god, and the Syrian goddess Derketo (Atargatis),—both deities in the form of fish. The Philistines must early have established a connection[1] Jewish history at any rate, shows us a perpetual league of their five chief towns,—Gaza, Ashdod, Askeloo, Gath, and Ekron. According to all accounts the Philistines far surpassed the Hebrews in culture; and in warchariots and cavalry they were superior to the Israelites. (1 Sam. 13: 5) 'And the Philistines gathered themselves together to fight with Israel, thirty thousand chariots, and six thousand horsemen, and people as the sand which is on the seashore in multitude; and they came up, and pitched in Mich-mash, eastward from Beth-aven.' The Philistines possessed fortified encampments; they built lofty walls around their towns. They carried on a vigorous and extensive commerce, especially inland; and their wars with the Israelites were partly caused by their efforts to retain the command of the great caravan routes, especially that to Damascus. . . . In the last decades of the period of the Judges, the Philistines ruled over Israel for a long time. In what way this guerrilla war was carried on, we may learn from the lively and vigorous narrative of the hero Samson, in Judges 13. . . . The first kings of Israel, Saul and David, effected their final deliverance from the foreign yoke. After the Jewish captivity the kingdom of the Philistines had disappeared. During the Maccabæan period the Philistine-Hellenic coast-towns gave fresh proofs of their hereditary enmity against the Jews."

And this is not yet obliterated, after more than two thousand years, as we found on our visit to Gaza. Any one wearing a hat like the Europeans, is put down for a Jew, and is hated and hissed at from first sight.

It was the purpose of our company to visit the five principal cities of the Philistines, and as many other places as were in reach of the general direction of our course southwest. Our company was made up of the following people: A. C. Wieand and wife, David Hollinger and wife, Chas. W. Eisenbise, Hettie Stauffer, the writer, Mrs. Miller, and our guide. We carried our tents, cooking outfit, food supplies, and feed for our animals. The muleteers took care of the horses, mules and donkeys. In all there were eighteen animals and seventeen people.

At an early hour of Nov. 16 our expedition was on the road westward from Jerusalem, and soon lost in the mountains, valleys, and foothills of Judea. Our first place of interest was "Zorah" (Judges 13: 24), the birthplace of Samson. There is a small Arab village on this mountain top, guarding the purported tomb of Samson, but, according to Judges 16: 31, Samson was buried between Zorah and Eshtaol in the burying place of Manoah, his father. After some eight hours in the saddle we reached Bethshemesh, where our tents were in readiness for us,—tired and hungry as we were. According to 1 Sam. 6, the Ark was brought here after the Philistines had it seven months, when they placed it on a new cart, and the cows went directly up to Bethshemesh. This place is located on a mound in the foothills of Judea, where nothing but ruins, level with the ground remained, but which, no doubt, would be a profitable mound to excavate.

Our course was nearly due south, next morning, passing near by Timnah, where Samson got his wife, according to Judges 14. Here, also, his riddle was given to his Philistine companions, the solution of which his Philistine wife extracted from him, and which brought this sarcastic response from Samson, "If ye had not plowed with my heifer, ye had not found out my riddle." During the forenoon our course brought us into the "Vale of Elah." Here the story of David and Goliath impressed itself upon our minds as never before. There is the narrow valley, and the mountains on either side, so near that talking back and forth could readily be engaged in. The brook is nearest to where Israel stood. How natural for David, as he descended to the valley, and reached the brook, to select the "five smooth stones." This he did long before the Philistine could reach the center of the valley,—the probable battle ground. The physical conditions yet, today, in detail, seem to speak out the truth of this wonderfully interesting Bible story, recorded in 1 Sam. 17. One of the pleasures of this day was to get off my horse in the brook, and pick up five smooth stones, just such, as I thought, would have been selected by David to fight the battle of Jehovah. There are millions of them in the dry bed of the brook,—many as smooth and round as a marble and peculiarly well adapted for the great work that God had placed in the hands of the shepherd boy.

Not many hours over the mountain from the Vale of Elah is the Cave of Adullam, or, rather, one of them, for there are two caves pointed out as the hiding place of David. Of course it is a bit difficult to decide which has the better claim as the identical place of David's hiding. The one visited on this trip answer very well the Bible conditions, yet the other one seems to have still better claims. 1 Sam. 22: 1-2 and 2 Sam. 23: 13-14 give a detailed account of David in the cave. After visiting these places, and reading the Bible account on the ground, Psalms 57 and 142 have a new meaning. These Psalms are said to have been written in Adullam.

Beit-Jibrin, which has a history dating back to the Crusaders' times, but no Bible significance, was our second camping place. It was at this place that our muleteers mutinied, giving us no little trouble and concern, as well as a lesson in the character and disposition of the Arab. More of this in our next paper.

How to Prove It.

BY PAUL MOHLER.

If someone asks you for proof of the power of Jesus Christ, what will you give him? Will you tell him of the drunkard reformed by his help? Not a bad answer at all, but not the best. Will you tell him of the great blessings of civilization that follow the Gospel? That's all right, but you can beat that. Would you show him the changed life and character of some converted prodigal? Don't forget to do that, but you have better proof than even that.

If I were the one asking you for proofs, I should not be satisfied with your testimony until I heard what Christ has done for YOU! Perhaps I hear you say that you are a sinner, have many faults, sin every day and every hour, and so on and so forth. I cannot help wondering if your temptations are so much greater than those of that drunkard you told me of, or whether God just helps people out of their big sins and lets them flounder around in the little one by themselves.

If Christianity cannot cure a man of anger, selfishness, stinginess, foul desires and words and deeds, pride, vanity, stubbornness, unkindness in the home, greed for money or land, indifference to the spread of the Gospel and relief of the suffering, harshness in judgment of others, discouragement and impatience under affliction or opposition, and every one of the other faults that Christian people carry along through life with them, I think there is certainly something wrong somewhere.

If God will not enable a real, sure-enough Christian to overcome ALL his regular besetting sins, to say nothing of the rest of them, then Paul was certainly mistaken when he said, "There hath no temptation taken you but such as man can bear: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation make also the way of escape, that ye may be able to endure it" (1 Cor. 10: 13, Am. Rev.)

What are you doing, then, when you advertise your sinfulness? You are saying either that Christianity is not what the Bible says it is, or that you have never really tried it. If you have not tried it thoroughly, as a real, present-day saving power, it must be because you do not believe in it yourself, or because you don't want to give up your sins very badly. In either case you are not the man to talk to me about becoming a Christian. Your testimony is all talk, and talk is cheap.

What, then, shall you do? Shall you cover up your sins and pretend to be perfect? Well, I rather guess not; no hypocrites for me. But when you can tell me, face to face, and eye to eye, of one sin after another that God has enabled you to overcome and is still enabling you; and when I can see that you are telling the truth, or when your wife and children back up your statements, then your testimony is worth considering, and not till then!

Brethren, I am tired of hearing ministers or any other Christians tell about the wonderful power of Christ and the Holy Spirit, and then tell of their own besetting sins that they cannot overcome. Each of those statements cuts the throat of the other, and the facts are on the side of the confessions of sin. Better not preach unless you intend to practice; rather you had better prove your statements before you make them.

And I am glad to be able to testify that no man needs to be without abundant evidence in his own life of the saving power of God through Christ. God does enable every man that comes to him in earnest, to overcome his besetting sins, little and big, at home as well as away from home; but I do wish to warn all readers that the phrase "in earnest" is a mighty big one. But no one can come to God unless he is in earnest.

Bro. John S. Holsinger's School Days.

BY EMMA A. M. REPLOGLE

READING Bro. Bealm's tribute to Bro. Holsinger, of Nokesville, Va., in GOSPEL MESSENGER No. 50, recalls his school days when a young man in my father's home and school. H. R. Holsinger, in his "History," gives, in Jacob Miller's biography, a brief history of this school at Buffalo Mills, Bedford Co., Pa., and the names of a number of the students, among them John S. Holsinger, who, he says, "was architect and builder of the schoolhouse. The size of the building was 36 by 50 feet,—a good, substantial frame building."

This schoolhouse was built in the summer and fall of 1852 by my father, on what was called the mill property, which he and his father, Andrew Miller, had just bought of John Alsip, sheriff-elect of the County.

John Holsinger worked hard and late to get the building ready for the opening of the fall term of school. He then went home and helped his father with the work on the farm, studying during all his spare time, as he could not enter school at the opening of the term.

Most of the students from a distance boarded and roomed at my father's home. They all went to the schoolhouse and studied at night, father going with them. When John Holsinger came, some of the boys got permission to go into the sitting-room while he was being examined. They came out before he was through and told my mother that Holsinger knew the whole grammar.

While at Las Angeles Conference, I visited the Imlers, formerly of Bedford, now living at Tropico. Just near them I found one of these students,—Lewis Keim,—and ate dinner with him and family. I had heard my mother talk of these school-boys all my life, till she passed away in 1902. Some of the names of the boys had became household words. I said to Mr. Keim, "Do you remember when you came over the Alleghanies to school in Bedford County, Pa?" "Yes, and you are Jacob Miller's daughter. I nursed you many a time. Come in."

He was glad to see me, laid his garden hoe down, and talked over the times of long ago. He told me many incidents of father's work that I had never known before. He said, "John Holsinger and Isaiah Rollins were the brightest boys in school. The latter was quite young, a cousin of my father, lived in his home and did the chores. He missed days sometimes, but laughed over it and kept up with the big boys."

I was told by my mother, or some one else who knew, that my father wanted John to go away to school, and prepare himself to teach mathematics in his school. Mother said, "He always made himself useful around the house. He would cut wood while the others played ball. He was regular in his habits, retiring early, while others wanted to be out late at night. Often he would repeat Franklin's saying, 'Early to bed and early to rise,'" etc.

Mr. Keim said, "I tell you; your father had to watch closely to keep one of the boys from spoiling the rest of us."

The names of the students from Somerset County, given by mother, H. R. Holsinger, and others, were: Israel Berkley, Lewis Keim, Nelson Meyers, Edward Miller, Ephraim Cover, Samuel J. Lichty, and Samuel Flickinger. From Georges Creek church, Fayette Co., Jeremiah Beeghly. From Dunnings Creek church, western part of Bedford County, John (Snyder) Holsinger, Eli Miller and William C. Snowdon. There were also many local students.

Father died suddenly in the midst of the spring term,

May, 1853, at the early age of twenty-five years. The school was then closed. One by one the students have passed over until all the older ones have passed away but two, Eld. Jeremiah Beeghly, now of Accident, Md., and Lewis Keim, of Tropico, Cal. Quite a number have died just within a few years: Jos. Elder, Jac. Hardman, M. C. Miller, and Jos. Huffman, of Buffalo Mills, A. C. Arnold, of Cumberland Valley, William Elder, of Salem, Ohio, John Miller, of Alliance, Ohio. Dr. S. W. Hardman, a boy student, is living yet at Kansas City.

No girls came to the school from a distance, but a number of young girls attended from the neighborhood, who are yet living: Mrs. Mary Elder Shank, of Pearl City, Ill., Mrs. Dr. S. G. Miller (Anna M. Arnold), Francis, Florida, Mrs. Catherine (Devore) Miller, of Iowa, Mrs. Evaline Lee Ott, of near Bedford, Pa., Mrs. Maria Miller Cook, of Alliance, Ohio, Mrs. Margaret Arnold Miller, of Point Marion, Pa., and Miss Agnes Arnold, of Kittanning Point, Pa. There are some others, but I can not name them all. A number of these went to school to my father before he built.

My aunt, Agnes Arnold, tells me, as I write, that "Isaiah Rollins, boy in father's home, felt so bad when the home and school were broken up that he followed my mother to their home and stayed there awhile." He had received an inspiration that did not die. He taught and worked his way up. He was a soldier in the Civil War and became an officer. Later on he studied law. He died at Hollidaysburg, Pa., during his second term in the State Legislature. He was a brother of Sister Lizzie Rollins, the good helper at Chicago. She is the last member of the family living.

The school building was used for preaching services as soon as it was completed, and for quite awhile after my grandfather died, in 1855. It was the only church building the Wills Creek congregation ever had. They had been holding services in their houses and barns from the time of the earliest settlers at this place.

When the house changed owners, my uncle, M. C. Miller, a cousin of my father, owned it for a long time and had select schools there for quite a while, getting the best talent obtainable. For many years it was used also for services by different denominations, and later on as a village hall, a tenant house and a band hall.

I was at the old village several months ago, to get a picture of the building. I also desired to get pictures of my father's childhood home and other scenes. It is to be regretted that the beautiful native forest trees, almost touching the building, have all been cleared away. Cousin Samuel Studebaker, of Pearl City, Ill., was visiting the old place at the same time. He viewed the scenes of his boyhood days, around the old house and the mill, and up through the gap to his own old home that he had left at dawn of an October morning in 1856, in a wagon, with his father's family, for Northern Illinois. He said, "I was just ready to start to school here when Cousin Jacob died." His father and my father's mother were brother and sister.

I see by Bro. Beahm's dates that Bro. Holsinger was a young minister, about twenty-one years of age, when at my father's home.

Commandments and Principles.—Law Again.

BY I. J. ROSENBERGER.

IN GOSPEL MESSENGER, No. 51, last year, is found article No. 3 from my pen on the above subject. In that and the previous articles I sought to make plain that the church is left, in a large measure, to supply methods of keeping the commandments and rules to sustain and preserve the principles of the Gospel. In the same issue our editor kindly called the readers' attention to my statement, calling these rules, "laws,"—man-made laws. The editor stated that his object was to induce thinking along those lines. That is right, for thinking is good for the mind and soul. My object in those articles was to get brethren to think; especially so on the relation that principles sustain to doctrine and church government. These, I feel sure, are not well understood by the masses.

I am glad to note that the differences between the editor and myself are small. I hope that I was understood as maintaining that God's law is perfect and unchangeable. We are sternly forbidden to add to or take from it. Of course, I dwelt on the law of Gospel commandments.

But to call a Gospel principle a law, is not good classification. It is not clear. It is true that the principle, "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," is, in a sense, a commandment,—a law. It may be proper, right here, to define principle and doctrine. Webster defines principle as being "a fundamental truth, a comprehensive law or doctrine from which others are derived." Principle or doctrine is alone practical when its deductions are named and defined, while law is specific, outlives the thing to be done; hence, "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," I call a principle or doctrine, and it is alone practical when its deductions are named and defined, which is done by rule, agreed upon, made, and passed upon, by the church. These I called laws—man-made laws. I did not aim to allude to or compare these to God's perfect law. Man-made laws mean that they have man for their author; hence, they are likely to be imperfect,—subject to amendment and repeal. I did say that rule and law are, in a large measure, synonyms. Since then I notice that Webster, in defining law, eight times says, "It is a rule."

When our Brethren were in litigation with the Progressive Brethren, as to the legal right of the church property in Dayton, Ohio, Judge McMayen, our attorney, asked Bro. R. H. Miller for our church laws. Bro. Miller handed him our bound volume of Minutes of Annual Meeting. These were the statute,—the law and ordinances deciding the case. That distinguished attorney called the rules,—decisions of our Annual Meeting,—our church laws. The Court so regarded them. I do not emphasize or modify our rules, but aim to classify them where they belong, and use them in their proper place.

My efforts in this and my former articles have been to strengthen our Brethren in our church government. It is true that the churches around us have well nigh lost all that we might call government. An able minister of Nevada, Mo., said to me, in the course of conversation, "Our Baptist churches are suffering from our decline in church government." Do we not have congregations that are suffering from this same malady? Hence, I invite mutual coöperation in giving strength to this need.

The Religions with No Christ in Them.

BY CHAS. M. YEAROUT.

"Thou believest that there is one God; thou doest well: Th devils also believe, and tremble" (James 2: 19).

ONE of the most subtile and far-reaching influences of the wily deceiver today is this pretended belief in God, and, at the same time, denying the Divinity of the Christ. The theory of salvation, independent of Christ, is becoming quite prevalent and popular among the people. The teachings and contentions of the Christless churches and lodges are producing a large crop of infidels, and it behooves the church of Christ to awaken to the danger confronting her.

While we by our votes and other means are fighting against the demoralizing liquor traffic, let us not lose sight of the onward march of infidelity, for if Christ and his plan of salvation be set aside, then the hosts of darkness, under Satan, have gained the day. The Christian should put his stamp of disapproval on infidelity, and work and vote against it every time an opportunity is afforded him of doing so.

There are many federations being found, these days, and it behooves the Christian to be watchful, and constantly on his guard, lest he affiliate with or give sanction to anything that ignores Christ and his system of salvation.

I see, quite recently, where there was a union of Jews, Universalists and Unitarians effected by uniting upon a common basis of faith. The price paid would be enormous to a humble follower of the Christ, as the ground or basis of union was the expunging of the Divinity of Christ. Such a federation, or union, ignores the only source of salvation. Jesus says: "I am the way, the truth, and the life: No MAN COMETH UNTO THE FATHER BUT BY ME" (John 14: 6).

In denying the Divinity of Christ, the entire plan of salvation, as recorded in the New Testament, is set aside as not of Divine authority, for if the lawgiver was not Divine, then the law given by him was not Divine, and this, of necessity, must bring the so-called deistic worshipers back to the Old Testament as the source of their religious authority. Cursed is the man that trusts in the law, and does not observe all things written in the law.

The lodges are all founded upon a deistic ritual,—a belief in one God or Supreme Ruler of the universe. Christ and his authority are expunged from the lodges. His teachings and doctrines, as found in the New Testament, are set aside. Now, if Christ be an imposter, then his teachings, in the plan of salvation, are false. But the Unitarians and Universalists say, "Christ was a good man." So say the lodge devotees also. If Christ was a good man, then he was what he represented himself to be,—the Son of God, the Savior of the world.

No good man can be a fraud or impostor. No good man can be a liar. To deny the Divinity of Christ is to deny the only name in whom we can hope for salvation. "This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders, which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is NONE OTHER NAME under heaven given among men, whereby we MUST BE SAVED" (Acts 4: 11, 12).

The young are being held up and victimized by the craftiness of these Christless teachers, who draw the unsuspecting young men into their lodges by holding before them the fact of "A belief in God." We believe in a Supreme Ruler of the Universe. In fact, a man must be a good Christian in order to belong to our order, and be a good member in the lodge."

A more glaring falsehood is hardly possible. In the first place, Christ is expunged from the lodge. In the second place, his religion is not advocated nor practiced in the lodge worship. In the third place, the use of his name is prohibited in the lodge prayers. How can a man be a good Christian and not hear nor follow Christ? Their pretended belief in God, the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, does not lead to a change of life and conduct, for the persons uniting with these Christless organizations continue to live identically the same life after professing a belief in God that they did before. God is not revered nor worshiped as his people are commanded to worship in his Word. His Word and teachings are ignored. Wherein is such a belief better than that of devils? The devils come nearer to a gospel faith than do the Jews, Unitarians, and lodge worshipers, for the devils acknowledge Christ as the Son of God (Matt. 8: 29; Mark 1: 24; 5: 7; Luke 4: 34).

The devils also recognize the ministers of Christ as the servants of the Most High God (Acts 16: 17; 19: 15). The devils also believe that God's Word is going to be executed to the very letter, and are expecting the execution of the terrible doom promised them in God's Word. Hence they "believe and tremble."

Only by believing in and accepting of Christ as our Savior can we hope for salvation. It is just as necessary, in order to salvation, that we believe in Christ, as it is that we believe in God (John 4: 1), and it is not enough that we exercise an historical faith in Christ, for the devils have an historical faith in Christ, though not a saving faith. In order to salvation we must render due reverence and honor to him. "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son: that all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father which hath sent him" (John 5: 23). "Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father: he that acknowledgeth the Son hath the Father also" (1 John 2: 23; Rev. 5: 8). It is established, beyond all doubt, in the above plain, Scriptural facts, to every one that believes the Word of God, that the Father can only be worshiped and glorified through the Son. "No man cometh (or can come) to the Father, but by the Son." So all this pretended deistic worship and belief in God, while they deny the Son, whom the Father has sanctified and set forth as the Savior of them that believe, and come unto the Father through him, is,—to say the very least,—the rankest of infidelity. We have no promise of our prayers being answered unless they are offered in the name of Christ (John 15:7, 16; 16:23, 24). All power is vested in Christ, and to him we must look for life and salvation. He is the door into the church—the family of God (John 10:7-9; Eph. 2:18; Heb. 10:19).

How Many Apostles?

BY J. HARMON STOVER.

WERE there more than twelve apostles? It is definitely stated that he chose twelve. Then, may I ask, Was Paul an apostle? He expressly declares, in an affirmatory interrogation, that he is. Then, if Matthias was chosen in the place of Judas, we can account for the "baker's dozen," at least.

But, in the face of the prefigured foundation stones in the breast-plate worn by the priest, and also prefigured in the twelve sons of Israel, we find no provision for a higher number than twelve of the chosen, —whose power was such as to ordain ordinances and decrees, to be delivered to the churches to be kept, and by the utterance of which he confirmed and established them. (See Acts 15:40; 16:4; 1 Cor. 11:12.)

The whole of the query, then, hinges on who took the place of Judas, and whether it is in the power of man to choose an apostle. Paul says, "Am I not an apostle? Have I not seen Jesus Christ?" And again he declares that his call was "last," and that he was "born out of due season." In all these quotations it is strongly implied that Christ chose his apostles for a special work, and that they are only chosen by the Lord himself.

Paul wrote to ordain elders in every city, but nowhere are they authorized to choose or ordain apostles.

Then, was Matthias legally chosen? Have we any evidence that he ever acted in that capacity? Now note the language of the Master: "But tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem till ye be endued with power from on high." Again, "But ye shall receive power after the Holy Ghost is come upon you," etc. Now attach anything like the same importance to these words that we do to any other of the Lord's specific directions, and our logical conclusion must be that they had no power to elect Matthias. Most surely they acted upon their own judgment at the suggestion of Peter, before the Holy Ghost fell upon them.

If they were specifically enjoined to tarry, surely it could not have meant that they should do a specific work, and that, too, while they were yet unendowed with the Holy Ghost, the illuminator and empowerer.

My humble conclusion is that Paul was the one chosen "last of all," "born out of due season," to fill the gap made by the fall of Judas. Acknowledge Matthias, and we surely admit the wisdom and consistency of the doctrine of the perpetuation of the twelve in the church.

In His Steps.

BY T. A. EISENBISE.

THERE is an idea in the minds of some that religion and business will not mix,—that a man who conducts his business as Christ would carry it on, would, because of the conditions existing in the world today, make a failure. We found a very forcible illustration of the incorrectness of this idea during our stay in the city of Zürich, Switzerland. It is so striking and unique that I feel like giving it to the readers of the MESSENGER.

There is a hotel in this city of 200,000 inhabitants which is peculiarly attractive because of its homelikeness. It appeals to one the more after putting up at other hotels in foreign lands for some months. The one thing, however, especially out of the ordinary, is, that at 9:30 P. M. and 7:30 A. M. there is a service held in the drawing room, to which all are invited. Here the servants, and as many others as care to do so, meet. The daily home reading or some other portion of the Scriptures is read, several hymns are sung, and a short prayer is offered. As to the financial success of the undertaking,—if one can judge from appearances,—it is a decided success. It is the best all-around house, everything considered, at which we have stopped. Just incidentally, at dinner one day, I counted seventy-five people seated at the tables at one time.

Upon rising in the morning I did not need to look for my watch and pocketbook under my pillow, as I had been accustomed to do. They were safe anywhere. It put me in mind of the old story of some travelers who had secured permission to stay over night at a place on the frontier. Not knowing whether to trust the people with whom they were staying, the guests decided to take turns at watching. It was not long, however, until the one who was to be on guard during the first watch, made preparations to retire. Upon being questioned he said that, before retiring, the inmates of the house got down the Bible and read; hence he concluded that all would be safe. It was with a similar feeling that I retired. I had no fears whatever as to my property.

I noticed in this house the absence of the placard, invariably found in the rooms of the different other hotels visited,—that the proprietor would not be responsible for missing articles of value unless deposited with him.

An unusual request made of the guests was, that they should not make the servants unnecessary work on Sunday, as it was their custom to attend church. It is, indeed, a very uncommon thing to find a large hotel conducted in this way.

The question came to me, How many homes like this are supported by the Brethren church in a foreign land? Even in our own dear homeland, so highly blessed and favored, where is there a hotel in which family prayer is kept up as it is in the one referred to? Am I misrepresenting the facts when I say that there are comparatively few families, even in the Church of the Brethren, that have family worship? How many homes are there, among the ministers of our beloved Fraternity, where family prayer is always observed? How many families in the Brotherhood have family worship regularly, regardless of who is present and what is going on? O how shallow is our religion! The greater per cent of even our Brethren families fail to have family worship, and a greater per cent of those who do have it, have it only when it "suits."

Have you ever heard the question asked, or have you ever asked yourself the question, as to why so many,—very, very many,—of the Brethren's children are either outside of our church entirely, or are identified with some other body or church? And has the solution come to you, or have you heard it suggested by others that the cause of this condition is to be found in the fact that the church is holding to certain principles, laid down by Jesus Christ and his holy apostles, concerning which we, as a church, ought to be more lenient, and not so strenuously require the fulfillment of them? Have you? Do you think there is any lack of true, vital Christian piety among us? Do you think that, as a rule,—or in some few cases at least,—we have divorced our religion and our business too much? Have we? Should we not, as real, genuine Christians, have family prayer in our families, even though there be a stranger in the house, or perchance some corn to shell, or threshing to do, or hogs to drive to market?

As we travel about in this old world of ours we can readily see the need of true, genuine, vital Christianity. Untold opportunities have come to the members of our beloved Brotherhood in the possibilities and probabilities for future activity. A tremendous power is at our command in the evangelization of the world, and especially the salvation of our own families. Compare the progress which we have made with the possibilities that have been within our reach, and we are made to fall upon our knees and ask the Father to help us that, having eyes we might see, and having ears we might hear!

Some Reflections.

BY LEANDER SMITH.

IS it true, as we sometimes hear, that the world is growing worse? Maybe you have not given this question serious consideration, and have no well-defined opinion about it. Now is a good time to think it over, —to cast up accounts, and reflect as to what efforts you have made,—if any,—to make the world better.

As we have hurried along, in the busy days of the past, we have at least glanced at the headlines, and, by the light they hold up, we have seen that the world is full of crime. The red-handed murderer flees from his dark and awful deeds, the divorce evil assumes appalling proportions, graft is rampant, and dishonesty in high places seems closely akin to a common heritage. Trust robbers continue to fleece the people, and yet the thieves do not seem to be apprehended and punished. These things are displayed in startling headlines, and, taking all in all, it is a woeful tale that is told. But is the story complete?

Hundreds of railroad trains are plunging madly across the continent, carrying thousands of passengers. If one of them is wrecked and a dozen people killed, the next morning the papers are full of the awful catastrophe. But not a word is said about the hundreds of trains that made their trips successfully and safely, nor about the thousands of happy people who reached their destination in comfort and safety. Do you see the point?

Recently there was a minister who told his congregation, on Sunday morning, that the world is growing steadily worse. That is a serious implication. Do you believe it? Is Christianity really losing ground, after nineteen centuries of evangelistic effort, involving the expenditure of millions of dollars, the sacrifice of countless thousands of the world's best scholarship, and the constant activities of loyal and devout believers? Then its ultimate and complete triumph is a phosphorescent dream. If the watchman upon the walls can detect no light upon the horizon, how can the dweller in the citadel be expected to see the dawn in the East? If the pastor of the flock is a pessimist, how can the "Gospel of Optimism,"—the Christian religion,—take deep and lasting root in the heart of the congregation?

It may be said of a truth, in passing, that the best of us are given to occasional moods of depression. The most sanguine temperament, at times, yields to doubts and misgivings. Elijah, the Tishbite, himself, was not an exception to the rule. When threatened by an irate woman, he, though one of the boldest characters of the Old Testament, flung himself down under a juniper tree and prayed to die.

The man who, in this enlightened age of the world, refuses to take note of the good which abounds upon every hand, and sees only the conquest and carnival of wrong over right, of falsehood over truth, of vice over virtue, is either hopelessly diseased, or else he puts no faith in the leavening power of the Gospel.

In conclusion let me say, Reflect upon something that has the sunny optimism of the real Gospel in it. Some one once twitted one of our elders about the slow progress that our church is making. "Ah," said the elder, "it is true, but think how glorious will be the noontide when the dawn has lasted for nineteen hundred years!" Believe in something good rather than to prate about the evil that exists. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord" (1 Cor. 15:58). "Let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not" (Gal. 6:9).

ANY one who thinks that the evangelization of China is readily to be entered upon, as soon as a fair knowledge of the language is obtained, is misinformed. The various dialects of China are so diverse that people from one province are unable to understand those from another. Among the educated classes common ground is found by employing the official language of Pekin. Not so, however, with the ordinary natives. If they happen to come from widely-separated sections of the country, they have no means of communication unless they are able to speak a little English, as many of them do. A recent edict, by the way, makes English the official language of China for commercial transactions and the like. This will likely result in the gradual introduction of English throughout the country, and greatly facilitate missionary endeavors of the future.

THE ROUND TABLE

"Two or Three Berries in the Top."

BY M. M. ESHELMAN.

When Damascus was swept by the besom of God's judgment, when the mighty city of Aroer was turned upside down, when Ephraim's fortresses were leveled for sheep pastures, when Jacob's glory "was made thin," and her "fatness of flesh was made lean," and all the harvest of the year rested in one man's arm, God said that a remnant should be saved,—preserved. In the figure suggested by the shaking of an olive tree,—"two or three berries in the top of the uppermost bough" were to express the amount of fruitage in Israel.

Thank God for two or three berries! This does not mean total extinction or total nonfruitage. However much Israel mixed with others in worship; no matter how many variations crept into her worship, four or five berries were found on the "outermost fruitful branches." Israel was not wholly cut off.

It may be that Brother ——is entirely dead,—wholly dried up and full of waste,—but what if God sees two or three ripe berries at the top of his heart? True, the spiritual vitality is very low, or more fruit would be ripening, but there is rejoicing that a few berries still indicate life.

The church at —— has very little vitality; she is mixing her communion, her fellowship, her worship with many imitations from outside; she is a great borrower of "methods" and has very few of her own origination to loán; yet four or five berries upon the outermost branches are still visible. There ought to be four or five hundred. This shows that perils are great. It indicates the need of hurried relief. It demonstrates that while quality may be good, quantity has run very low.

"Fallen Asleep."

BY EDGAR M. HOFFER.

Every week the "Fallen Asleep" list appears in our beloved church paper, the Gospel Messenger. In this list we can read about those that have left the shores of mortality.

In this list, every week, are young and old, from the darling child to the aged elder. Continually we are reminded that there are many vacant chairs, in many homes, all over the land.

Death is often referred to as a sleep, and so it is. It is very appropriate to say, when one dies, that he has "fallen asleep." How good it is that we can fall asleep after a hard day's work, and rest! So, after the voyage of life is over, when all the tempests have ceased, it is joyful to fall asleep in Jesus. The sufferer on his bed of pain, after years of suffering, is glad when he can at last fall asleep.

How many dear elders, in our Fraternity, have fallen asleep! Their labors are over. The many active ministers of today will one by one pass to the great beyond. There is no exception to this rule.

Are we ready to meet the pale messenger? When he calls, we must go. It is a comfort for the Christian, when he is called to go, that he can rest in peace. Dying is but going home. Let us be more consecrated in our Master's service, so that we may, at last, fall asleep in peace.

> "Asleep in Jesus! Time nor space
> Affects this precious hiding place:
> On India's plains or Lapland's snows
> Believers find the same repose."

A Note on Baptizo.

BY O. P. HOOVER.

The Baptist is always glad to find new confirmation of his belief in the true meaning of baptizo. In the New Testament this word is restricted to religious and ceremonial uses, and as such it might have varied from its secular meaning. But the word has been so closely studied for its original meaning, in classical literature, that there remains nothing to be done in this field. It is interesting, though, to find confirmation of the established meaning in any new passages in classical literature.

I have before me a copy of Prof. Capps' "Four Plays of Menander." Prof. Capps was my instructor in Greek, in the University of Chicago, several years ago, hence I take especial interest in his book. In 1905 portions of some plays of Menander, a comic poet, who wrote in the latter half of the fourth century B. C., were found in Egypt. Prof. Capps published the first American edition last year. In the "Epitrepontes" a master is represented as being angry at his servant and says, in lines 860-1, "Did you see that pool as you passed by? Baptizing (baptizon) you in it all night long I will kill you." The meaning in this passage clearly is "ducking." By "ducking" the slave often enough, the master would kill him. We use it colloquially in this sense. Compare the circumstance of Naaman dipping himself, ebaptisato (2 Kings 5: 14), seven times in Jordan, as an instance of the physical use of baptizo.

The Eleventh Commandment.

BY A. G. CROSSWHITE.

An aged brother, who had once been an "Amen corner" worshiper but was at this time out of sympathy with a few things that had been done in the church,—some of which seriously touched the spiritual standing of his son,—surprised me one day by asking how church matters were going of late. The surprise came from the fact that he had apparently taken no notice of what we were doing for many months, and the interest manifested at this time seemed more of the assumed than the real kind.

I assured him that we were doing the best we knew how and that we missed him. I also gave him a kind invitation to his former seat. "I'll come," said he, "if you'll preach a sermon on the eleventh commandment the Sunday I come."

"What do you regard as the eleventh commandment?" queried I, wondering if some new light had not dawned upon him.

"The eleventh commandment according to my interpretation of the Holy Scriptures," said he, "is founded upon common sense principles, and is stated in four words, 'Mind your own business.'"

I assured him that I would select a suitable text, prepare especially for the occasion and do my best. The time was agreed upon, the preacher was ready, but the "eleventh commandment" man did not show up.

Sunday Newspapers.

BY JAS. A. SELL.

One among the greatest evils of our day is the Sunday newspaper. These papers are gotten up in an attractive style, and filled with a hash of stuff that will, if read, crowd all the better impulses out of the heart. One who finds entertainment in such reading has but little or no relish for spiritual food. If the blessed day of rest, the day intended for spiritual enjoyment, is spent on feasting on such chaff, leanness must come into the soul.

To entice the young and unwary, such papers are profusely illustrated with beautifully-colored pictures of low, vulgar wit that can hardly be classed as decent. This not only destroys artistic taste, but creates a desire for the ridiculous and obscene.

Parents who wish to cultivate the artistic sense and the noble instincts, and insure the spiritual welfare of their children, will keep such abominable pictures away from them and provide them with something better for their Sunday entertainment.

The Messenger in Kansas City.

BY I. H. CRIST.

I want to add my observation of placing the Gospel Messenger into the homes of those not members. Several years ago we placed the paper into ten homes in which there were no members; neither were they persons from Brethren families. During the year we visited these homes frequently, and baptized seven. Two years ago Sister Barbara Gish sent $10 to me, to be used as I thought best. It was used in placing the Messenger into homes of those not members, and during the year eleven were received into the church.

In my first experience of house-to-house visiting, I went to a door and was met by an aged man. I said, "I have some free reading matter I would like to leave with you." He said, "I don't want it," and closed the door. After dark, I returned and put a Messenger and tracts in the mail box on the porch. This I did several times, and later I was invited into the home and spent an entire day with the old man. Some time afterward, he subscribed for the Messenger, saying he had stopped his own church paper, as it was of no account. Since reading the Gospel Messenger, in less than one year, I had the pleasure of baptizing him, and he was very faithful until he passed over the river, a short time ago.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' TOPIC

Christ Hath Redeemed Us.

Gal. 3: 13-16.

For Sunday Evening, February 12, 1911.

Christ paid the ransom price (Matt 20: 28; 1 Tim. 2: 5, 6). He atoned with God and redeemed us. He did this

I. By Taking Away the Adamic Sin.—John 1: 29. (1) He took it away for all (Gal. 4: 5). (2) His atonement saves all little children that die. This is the reason little children are nowhere in the New Testament spoken of as sinners. If they die they are saved. (3) No one will be lost on account of Adam's sin (Isa. 53: 6).

II. By Giving Us the Gospel as a Means—(1) To get rid of our own personal sins (Eph. 1: 7). (2) To cleanse, to purify and sanctify us (John 15: 3; 17: 17; Titus 2: 14). (3) And to provide for the redemption of our bodies (Rom. 8: 23; 1 John 3: 2).

III. All This Was Ratified by Christ's Death, Making the Gospel a Power—(1) To save all that believe (Rom. 1: 16). (2) To condemn all who reject it (John 12: 48; 2 Thess. 1: 7-9).

There is therefore salvation for all (Luke 2: 10; John 6: 37; 2 Peter 3: 9; Rev. 22: 17). All who accept Christ's atonement on the conditions it is offered, will be saved. The conditions are: John 3: 7; Mark 1: 15; Acts 3: 19; 2: 38; 22: 16; Mark 16: 16; Titus 3: 5.

How broad, how complete a redemption! If you and I are lost, it will not be because we had no opportunity to be saved.

PRAYER MEETING

Golden Rule Living.

Matt. 7: 12; 1 Peter 3: 8-22.

For Week Beginning February 12, 1911.

1. Get Right with God.—Before there can be "Golden Rule" living, there must be a life subordinated to God's plans. We must seek "first things first," and be ready to do the work allotted to us. Such a life means perfect assurance, for all needful things "will be added unto us" (Matt. 6: 33).

2. Trust the Lord Fully.—If we really believe that "all things work together for good to those who love God," and commit themselves to him, perfect peace will fill our soul, and we will gladly go forth to do his bidding. Such a disposition of mind leads to glorious achievements (Rom. 8: 28; 1 Thes. 4: 10).

3. Be Ready for Service.—Peter exhorts: "Be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous. Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; but rather blessing." Here is a recipe for helpful living that will never fail. It will reach out to others, and bless all with whom we come in touch. It is hard, perhaps, to live according to Christ's standard of helpfulness to others, in this age of commercialism and money greed, but we must learn to forget self and prefer others, though it be ever so hard. We are so prone to seek success by climbing over the struggling forms of our weaker fellow-men, that we must needs learn anew the great commandment, "Love one another." How much brighter the world would be if each one would try to help his brother in his arduous struggle to higher achievements! Jesus plainly teaches that the ministering life is the accepted life at heaven's gate. The passport to everlasting bliss is sealed by the "inasmuch" of Matt. 25: 40.

HOME AND FAMILY

A Priceless Treasure.

BY BERTHA HOMER.

There is a man I learned to know,
Who does to all much kindness show.
To old and young, to great and small,
To rich and poor: he helps them all.
But what his life has meant to me,
Alone God knows; none knows but he.

His garments are humility,
He speaks in all sincerity,
With heart of love, with joy he tells
How Christ, the Lord, within man dwells.
If hearts are clean and free from sin,
With joy the Spirit enters in.

And as I think of him, I see
By eye of faith on Calvary's tree,
The World's Redeemer, who was slain
To ease our heartaches, and our pain,
To wash away all sin and pride.

This friend is always doing good
As did the Lord in town or wood.
His life to me has meant so much,
It brought to me the Savior's touch;
And opened my beclouded sight,
And showed to me the heavenly light.

This friend of meekness, oh, 'tis he
In whom God's Spirit I did see.
But unto God belongs all praise,
To him my voice I ever shall raise
Tis he who sent this friend to show
To me, how I in grace may grow.

Now to this friend I want to tell
That he has helped to make me well.
I want to cheer him on the way
That leads to everlasting day.
For life has been a joy to me
Since I this humble friend did see.

The secret in his life I find,
Which brings him joy and peace of mind,—
Is reading from God's Holy Word
And speaking oft with his dear Lord.
A reproductive life he lives
Of Jesus Christ,—that's what he gives.

I want to mark this perfect man
And imitate him as I can
But I must look to him above
Whose life is naught but perfect love
And I must read God's Holy Word,
To know how lived the Blessed Lord.

A Boy's Room.

BY ELIZABETH D. ROSENBERGER.

"This is Robert's room! You see it is the largest room on this floor. I wanted him to have room for his traps and books. A boy has so many things to look after, and Robert can find his treasures when we gave him this room." And Mrs. Reynolds paused before a bookcase, well filled with good books,—the kind a boy enjoys.

Barbara looked at the clean curtains and the large, comfortable chairs, the bright carpet and the sunny windows, and, turning to her friend, she impulsively exclaimed, "I wish more rooms were arranged like this, for the boys I know! Mrs. Reynolds, you have no idea what the average boy's room looks like. It is the worst room in the house, the smallest, most inconvenient corner, dark and cheerless often. Any piece of furniture, old and poor to use anywhere else is relegated at once to the boy's room."

Mrs. Reynolds smiled reminiscently. "But I do remember one room such as you describe. It always contained a broken chair, and the carpet on the floor was worn out. Yet the people were able to furnish this room according to the boy's individual taste, had they cared to do so. The boy who occupied it was a silent, sensitive lad, fastidious in his tastes, misunderstood by most people. And I may as well tell you that this is his boy's room. My husband insisted on Robert having a voice in most of the furnishings."

"Ah, I see," replied Barbara. "So you are trying to make things better for your Robert than they ever were for his father. What a good time the boys must have in this room!"

Mrs. Reynolds was standing by a rude cabinet of stones and shells. "See, this is their latest pursuit, and they are so enthusiastic about new specimens that they've gone fossil hunting this afternoon."

They talked of many things, these two, sitting there in Robert's room. They spoke of the great necessity of becoming friends with Robert's chums, and of keeping him in his Sunday-school class. A gentle mother, who is kind to her boys, who has their full confidence, and inspires them to do their highest duty, is a power in moulding the lives of our men of the future. The boy is developed and directed not so much by what is said to him, not so much through lectures and punishments, although these have their proper and restricted places, as through the example of his parents. The boy is all right, to all intents and purposes, but he has sometimes in execution. He is kind-hearted but thoughtless, and this very thoughtlessness draws down upon his head the reproaches of his elders. He is too full of his own ideas and desires, to give much thought to others; therefore he lacks in courtesy.

Judge B. Lindsay, of Denver, Colo., ranks "fool fathers and incompetent mothers among the first causes of the troubles of children." He says also that children do not usually rebel at authority, "only at ignorant authority." The judge's greatest trouble was with the well-to-do father who has no time to fuss with his boy, and the vain, frivolous mother, who would rather go to parties than bring up her child in the way he should go.

The boy should be interested in the work of the home, his constructive talent should be put to use. If he paints the garden gate, or drives a nail in the pantry, he will have that much more interest in his home. Love of home and love of work are absolutely necessary for good citizenship. Some mothers give the best of themselves to the outside world. Then they have neither time nor patience to train the boy. It is better to be a good mother and make a good home for the children than to have a share in many of the public meetings in which some women spend much of their time. Do not have ruffled pillows at the expense of ruffled tempers. Your boys will not wander far if you have a happy home, for happiness is the one indispensable quality in a home.

We overheard one boy ask his mother for his red box. She did not know what had become of it; then the boy discovered it in the cabinet. Too often there is a conflict between the orderly housewife and the boy; the housekeeper's broom is a menace to the boy's peace of mind. He has shells and stones, broken knives and dilapidated dollar watches, beetles and skates in his room. Don't call his treasures trash; rather be glad that the boy does care for science in its simplest form. Children have rights, and they are of the same kind as the parent possesses; do not defraud your boy.

The limitations of all homes vary. One home may have wealth and another poverty, but neither of these must interfere with the heart education of the boy. The mother who has the full confidence of her boy can have him love the best and act for the best. She can show him that she is as repentant as he is, after she has committed a wrong. She can talk God to him as a personal friend.

The boy needs to be reasoned with. Five minutes of quiet talk with appeals to his good sense and the better things in him, and liberty to say what he thinks, will have more effect than a hundred commands thrust at him during all the hours of the day. We cannot keep too constantly before us that the boy is immature and crude. He is not a man, but only a boy. Yet he craves respect. He has a keen sense of his rights, and resents being imposed upon. Do not be arbitrary in your dealings with him, but listen to his side of the question as often as possible. Let him talk and weigh what he says, because what he thinks seems to him right and just. If he gets a chance to express himself, he will feel better and be more ready to accept your reasoning. God gives us these boys, and it takes courage, love and prayer to do our full duty by them. God will direct us how to portion every event and every tangled end of circumstances to form ideal character, that the boy himself may be blessed.

Why?

BY ELSIE K. SANGER.

Sometime since a sister was in the Union Station at Kansas City, waiting for a train, when a fashionable lady,—a stranger,—came up to her and kindly asked the sister to keep her pocketbook while she went out into the city. Why such trust? Was it that innocent face in the bonnet?

SISTERS' AID SOCIETIES

SOUTH FORK, OREGON.—Our Aid Society was reorganized April 28, 1910. Officers elected: Sister Ida Bennett, president; Sister Maggie Whittington, vice-president; Sister May Pite, secretary-treasurer. During the year eight meetings were held in various homes. The total attendance was sixty; average attendance, about seven. We charge fifty cents for an afternoon's work. As we have no Sunday-school in our neighborhood, we decided to use our money to buy Sunday-school literature, and hope soon to have sufficient means to begin with.—May Pite, Secretary, Myrtle Point, Oregon, Jan. 13.

GLENDORA, CAL.—Our Sisters' Aid Society is still progressing nicely, under the care of our present pastor, Brother Henry Neiker. Sister John Gnagy is superintendent, and Sister Clara Yost, secretary-treasurer. We held twenty-five meetings during the year; made eleven comforts and sixty-three garments; sent sixty-five garments to distributers to the poor; donations and collections, three; comforts sold, $41.14; donations received, $21.49; balance in the treasury, $21.83. ANY of our isolated members residing in the Southern States, desiring a few meetings, can communicate with Bro. Walter Strickler, Luray, Va., before Feb. 15. After that date he may be addressed at 1842 Eighth Avenue, Jacksonville, Fla. While in the South, he will take pleasure in conducting services at a number of points.

ON page 70, this issue, Bro. O. P. Hoover has a short article that should be clipped and preserved, on account of the evidence it contains regarding the meaning of baptizo in early Greek literature. There can be no question about its meaning in the quotation cited.

BRO. C. H. STEERMAN who changes his place of residence from Frisco, Mo., to Greencastle, Pa., R. D. 4, says that during the remainder of this year he will be able to give his time and attention to evangelistic work. Those desiring his services can communicate with him.

BRO. W. R. MILLER writes that, on account of the unsettled condition in Eastern Turkey, he has been compelled to give up his contemplated trip to Nineveh, and will soon start to Europe. He probably leaves Jerusalem this week, accompanied by his wife, Bro. Ralph Miller and family, and Bro. C. W. Eisenbise. A few weeks will likely be spent in Germany, and the party will then go to London, England, where they may be addressed in care of the American Express Company, until March 10. Their purpose is to reach home about the first of April.

WE think it is about time that editors of the secular papers quit publishing a certain "Letter Purporting to Have Been Written by Christ." The letter is a forgery, is written in the interest of Sabbatarian doctrine, and contains a clause to the effect that the one keeping the letter and refusing to have it published, will not prosper. This has induced superstitious people to have their local editors publish the fraudulent communication, and in this way it is kept before the public. It would be far better for the press to expose the fraud and save thousands of superstitious men and women unnecessary anxiety. This is probably about the fifth time that we have called attention to the imposition.

WE learn through correspondence that the outlook for crops in Palestine is not good for this season. Very little rain has fallen during the winter, and even the latter rains, which should have fallen before this date, are withheld. It is not yet too late for the rain to help the crops, but at best the situation is not encouraging.

SISTER NETTIE STAUFFER, who was with the Miller party when it was captured by the Bedouins, is spending a few weeks in Pennsylvania, and wishes us to say this for her: "There is a bit of anxiety manifested as to how our Moabitish experience affected Bro. A. C. Wieand's health. I can testify that he was quite calm through it all, and when I left Jerusalem he was feeling none the worse on account of the experience."

WE do not have a copy of the Minutes of the District Meeting of Colorado, Western and Utah.

Iowa, Middle.
Indiana, Middle.
Maryland, Western.
Ohio, Northeastern.
Oregon, Washington and Idaho.
Texas and Louisiana.
Virginia, Eastern.

It is important that we should have copies of the Minutes of each District Meeting in the Brotherhood, and hope some one will be kind enough to supply those needed to complete our files.

IN most of the papers in this country, and in the MESSENGER as well, it was reported that 300 Christians were massacred during the attack of the Bedouins in Kerak, southeast of the Dead Sea. Bro. W. R. Miller, writing from Jerusalem, says that this is a mistake. No Christians were killed, it being understood among the Bedouins that Christians were not to be disturbed. It was their purpose to kill only the soldiers and Turkish officials. The trouble grew out of an effort upon the part of the Turkish government to enroll the Bedouins, enlist their young men in the army, and to levy taxes on the different tribes. The incident connected with the attack on Kerak, the experiences of the Miller party with the Bedouins, and their final escape to Hebron, will be fully described in our columns later on.

THE Business Department is wholly responsible for the splendid showing given "Our Saturday Night," on the last page of this issue. The way the book has taken, and the interest it has created, both in the church and out of it, has been a surprise to the author as well as to the Business Management. Already, three editions have been published, and it now looks as though a fourth edition may be required inside of a week or two. It is the intention of the publishers that every subscriber of the MESSENGER may have the book by paying the small sum of thirty-five cents in addition to the price demanded for the paper. Thousands have availed themselves of this generous offer, and those who failed to call for the book when they subscribed, can yet procure a copy by remitting the thirty-five cents. We suggest that those desiring the book send in their orders without delay.

A GLANCE at the obituary department in this issue reveals a sad story. There we are told of nearly fifty homes that have been entered by death, and of more than a hundred hearts that have been made to bleed because of the departure of loved ones. But these brief notices tell only a small part of the story. Each life means much to the family where a vacant chair at the table, or an empty cradle in a quiet room, remains, to remind the kindred of the struggle of some dear one. Some of those whose earthly lights have gone out were aged fathers and mothers, while others had just entered the family circle. Then there were those in the prime of manhood and womanhood, who were called hence before their work seemed completed. But whatever may have been their situation in life, they have left behind them loving hearts, who shall long remember their kind words and helpful acts. We may bury our dead, but the sweet memories are to find no grave.

Bro. H. C. Longanecker, who, as pastor, has taken charge of the work at Tekoa, Wash., would be pleased to communicate with all members residing in that vicinity, whether in the city or in the rural sections. He also desires the names and addresses of members' children that do not happen to belong to the church, it being his purpose to get in touch with them and aid them spiritually in whatever way he can.

In reply to those making inquiry, we state that there is no special postage rate on manuscript intended for newspapers or magazines. Anything that is written, whether in the form of a letter, or manuscript, requires letter postage. Occasionally a writer leaves the envelope, containing manuscript, unsealed, thinking that it will pass through the mail for one cent. This is a mistake, as such a letter must either be returned to the writer, sent to the dead-letter office, or full postage will be collected from the party receiving the letter.

Referring to his experiences as a missionary in India, Bro. A. W. Ross, under date of Dec. 27, writes: "We have now entered on our seventh year of work in India. We can truly say that the fifth was more pleasant that the fourth, and the sixth still more than the fifth, and we hope that the seventh and each succeeding year may be the best of all. While we look forward with joy to the time of meeting loved ones, and to sweet association with those of like precious faith, yet we are not in the least anxious, and are willing to remain here as long as the work demands it."

Wearing the Prayer Veil All the Time.

A devout sister, who would not for a moment question the necessity of the prayer veil during seasons of regular devotion, finds herself at a loss to know whether she should have her head covered at all times, and so writes us for information. There are occasions, she says, when engaged in household duties, that she feels like offering up a silent prayer. Should she do this with her head uncovered, or should she, at all times, wear the prayer veil, recommended by Paul in 1 Cor. 11, so as to be prepared to pray whenever she happened to be in the spirit of prayer?

As we understand the Scripture cited, Paul has no reference to the silent prayers offered when one is engaged about the common duties of life, but refers more particularly to the stated devotions in which we engage from time to time. It will be observed that in his instructions he reverses the order for the man and the woman. In seasons of prayer and prophesying the man is to have his head uncovered, while the woman must have her head covered. On all occasions of worship, man, almost instinctively, uncovers his head. There are times, when engaged about his work, that a praying man feels like offering a short, silent prayer. He may be in the field plowing, or he may be upon the public highway. Should he remove his hat every time he offers his short, silent prayer, or should he go with his head uncovered, so as to be always ready for such seasons of silent devotion? We should think not. God will accept these silent prayers from devout men at any moment, whenever they may feel disposed to offer them. This is the conclusion reached by all earnest Bible students.

But how about the women? Any interpretation of 1 Cor. 11, that would make it necessary for her to wear her prayer veil all the while, would place the man under obligation to keep his head constantly uncovered. And any explanation that will permit the man to have his head covered, when not engaged in seasons of special devotion, will permit the woman to have her head uncovered on like occasions. It seems to us that there is no escaping this conclusion.

The teaching of 1 Cor. 11 binds man only when engaged in praying and prophesying. At other times he is at liberty. He can have his head covered or he can have it uncovered. In the reverse order this is true of the woman. The Gospel binds her only while engaged in praying or prophesying. At other hours there is no law or Gospel applying to her conduct in this particular. If she chooses to wear her prayer veil at all times, that is her privilege. There is no law for it and then there is no law against it.

But while it is the privilege of the devout woman to wear her prayer veil at all times, if she feels so disposed, it is certainly not proper that she should abuse this token of prayer and devotion by engaging in conduct wholly out of keeping with the intent and purpose of the covering. For this reason the woman, who, on account of religious scruples, wears her covering all the time, should be more than ordinarily careful regarding her conversation and conduct generally.

Fundamentals.

With us this subject has been a matter of special thought for years. The longer I live and the more I think, the more important it grows. At this time I have been made to think of it in a very special way by the reading of a small book, bearing the title "Fundamentals." It is not my purpose to give a review of the book, nor even any special thought on its subject matter, but my thoughts will be in reference to the importance of the subject, in relation to our faith in the church of Jesus Christ, and to our religious activities as a people and a church. If we are real Christians, we are all builders, and the better we build, the more are we concerned about the foundation on which we build.

Our ideal foundation is composed of a number of fundamentals or principles, located on the God-rock. "Upon this Rock I will build my church." So we can know, with absolute surety, the bottom of this foundation, about which all true believers are so much concerned.

And now, in starting out, we will first see what is meant by "fundamentals." Fundamentals are the things that fulfill the purpose of a foundation,—something that is indispensable, essential and satisfying. This is our concern when we wish to build a very large, expensive, safe and enduring building. The primary stones to be laid on the rock bottom must be similar in hardness and endurance as is the material upon which they are laid. This kind of a foundation always gives satisfaction and assurance. The fundamentals of which it is made are similar and in many respects equal to the bottom material. And as we are building for time and eternity, we should be more concerned,—the more careful as to the fundamentals of our foundation. We should understand fully whence they came. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." In our foundation, then, we want the essential, the fundamental, the saving truths of Jesus Christ, as revealed in the New Testament Scriptures. Having these, we have the "sure foundation," on which we can set our feet with joyful assurance, knowing that if we are not saved, it will only be because we, of our own free will, move from this foundation, and not because it will fail us in the day of final accounts.

A knowledge of this great truth has been my greatest comfort and assurance during all my church life. I always did believe, and do continue to believe, that the Church of the Brethren is built on the best possible Scriptural foundation. I have an unflinching faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God and Savior of the world, and in our doctrine of repentance of sins. Our baptism, by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, for the remission of sins and the promise of the Holy Ghost, is so unimpeachably strong that to its validity no orthodox bodies of Christians have felt it advisable or safe to say nay.

No matter how far, in our weakness, we may have come short of or failed in our Christian activities, or of building on this foundation as vigorously and as perseveringly as we should have done,—this one thing should give us unfailing encouragement and satisfaction,—our foundation still stands secure! Stick to the fundamentals, as founded upon the Rock Christ Jesus. Even if, through our ignorance and weakness, we should build thereon some wood, hay and stubble, and it should be burned, still stick to the foundation. True, in the burning we may suffer loss, but the promise is that we ourselves shall be saved. We can afford to lose our bad building material, when it is of such a nature that it will not stand the test of fire, but we can not afford to lose our souls. Our final hope is in remaining firm and solid on our foundation.

I think sometimes that we do not place as much real value on our foundation as we should, or as its worth demands. We, perhaps, think more about what we are building on the foundation,—the material which we are placing thereon,—than we do about the thing on which we are building. The wise man or woman never builds a costly structure on sand. It is unsafe, and may result in great loss. Neither is it safe to put a good building on props, with the intention of placing a strong foundation afterwards. No, the first thing a wise builder does is to see to his foundation—get down to rock bottom—and then to commence building on this foundation. In other words: "Be sure you are right, and then go ahead."

We should ever remember that a good, strong and enduring foundation calls for,—yea, demands,—that a good building be erected thereon. Our foundation is a good, a strong, a costly foundation. It cost a life of labor and sacrifice, and the material was cemented with blood,—even the precious blood of Christ.

Is such a foundation worth the while? Is it precious to us? Should we strive to get on it, stick to it, even unto death? Yea, verily, for there is no other such foundation. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

We always admire those who remain upon this foundation, even though they seem to fail in their building, —at least as we may think they should.

We attended the funeral of an aged Methodist minister, not long since. His brother ministers, in speaking of the fixedness of the deceased minister's convictions, said that "when he believed in his soul that a thing was right, he would do it independent of church, conferences, bishops or anybody else." He was a man of fixed convictions.

We just now think of an aged minister in our own church. He was a man of ability,—a man of strong convictions,—but a man who differed from some of his brethren; and so strongly did he contend with them that it was thought necessary, for a while, to relieve him of his membership and his official standing. But notwithstanding all this, there was one thing that he said his brethren could not do,—they could not drive him away from the Brethren church and the foundation on which it stands. For this foundation he most tenaciously stood. In this faith he lived and died. And though he had a large family of children, everyone of them became members of the church, and better or more loyal than many others. They seemingly had inherited this peculiar loyalty to the fundamental principles of the Brethren church.

While it is true that we may overestimate the value of standing for and by the fundamentals, or the foundation, by neglecting rightly to build thereon, it is also true that we may be too much concerned about the building, and place too small an estimate on the foundation, and, because of some small provocation, slide off, stop the work, and thus place ourselves beyond the pale of safety and eternal life. As a closing thought, Above all things else stick to the church, her principles, and your baptismal vows! H. B. B.

Going Worldward.

If all those who profess to be Christians would do the right thing, and would live as devout men and women should live, they would certainly save the church, the elders, the angels, the Holy Spirit, Jesus, and the kind Father in heaven, a great deal of anxiety. We have a letter from a spiritually-minded elder, who is puzzled over a circumstance that probably worries the angels themselves. He tells how some of the members got up a banquet where the people,—members and others,—were entertained in the popular way. There were decorations, flags, music by the choir, speeches by preachers of different other denominations, and then a rich feast with the tables arranged in the most tasteful manner. All of this was done in a Brethren church, and in the name of religion, too, at that.

The people, who have always thought that the Church of the Brethren is a plain church and does not believe in following the ways of the popular denominations, read a full description of the banquet in the secular papers, and they wonder what is going to become of this religious body, so long noted and highly honored for its piety and simplicity. Is it, too, to be swallowed up in the whirlpool of fashionable and dazzling Christianity? Are we, after being a separate people for more than two hundred years, to cut loose from our Gospel moorings, and to drift with the popular religious current? Is the house of songs and prayer, where saintly men and women have long worshiped, and where the Holy Spirit has so often energized the people of God, to be turned into a house of feasting? Are holy men and devout women who meet in the sacred edifice to engage in the solemn ordinances of the house of God, to feel that a few weeks later the scenes pertaining to a popular banquet will be enacted beneath the same roof?

But this is not the only instance that we have in mind. We receive for publication reports of gatherings and entertainments that border so closely on the popular style of religion that we refuse to lay them before our readers. We have so far been content with running the blue pencil through such reports, but the time has come when something more than a blue pencil is needed. We mean to speak out plainly and tell our people, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, that there is too much of a tendency, upon the part of some churches, Sunday-schools, Christian Workers and other societies, to cut loose from the commendable simplicity that has long characterized the members of the Brethren church. We see that manifested on the Fourth of July, now and then on Thanksgiving Day, on Christmas and at other times.

As a church, our mission in the world is not to get into the popular current and to drift as the fashionable churches have been drifting, to the deep regret and sorrow of thousands of devout men and women. Ours is a called-out body,—called out from the world,—and we are expected to live apart from the vain pleasures and sinful tendencies of the course pursued by the world. Furthermore, ours is a church of protest. From the beginning of our reformatory movement we have been protesting against the members of the body of Christ becoming so mixed up with the ways of the world that the representatives of both classes can not, by their lives, be told apart.

But the time has come when our elders and preachers should do some earnest talking along this line. We must help our people to honor their profession and to desist from those things that resemble the ways of the sinful world, more than the customs and practices of holy men and women. And this is the point on which our puzzled elder seeks advice. He wishes to know what elders should do when they see churches, Sunday-schools and societies drifting in this manner. It is a clear case of corruption creeping into the church, and in order to get into the real spirit of the situation, our elders can do no better than to read repeatedly what the Spirit had to say to the Seven Churches of Asia. It is the same thing reënacted, and the same remedy must be applied. It means sound teaching, vigorous action and an unwavering trust in God, while carrying out his will.

Electioneering for Himself.

A CORRESPONDENT wishes to know whether it would be lawful for an elder to electioneer for himself as a member of the Standing Committee, or to even vote for himself, he being a delegate from his church. So far as an elder voting for himself is concerned, we presume it would be lawful, but it would certainly indicate a lack of judgment upon his part. Possibly it might be considered by some a violation of Rom. 12: 10, where we are taught, in honor to prefer one another. The man who votes for himself honors himself. He may possibly think more highly of himself than he ought to think. As for electioneering, whether for one's self, or for another, this is considered wholly unbecoming even a private member and, of course, could not be excused in an elder. If it can be proven, by two or more witnesses, that an elder has electioneered for himself, we should think that he certainly ought to fall into the judgment of the congregation where he holds his membership, with several adjoining elders present. As to whether he can serve on the Standing Committee, depends upon the Standing Committee itself. The Committee can reject any elder who fails to measure up to the standard laid down by the Annual Meeting, or who has secured his place on the Committee by unlawful means. If one, by electioneering, should succeed in having himself called to the ministry, we are quite sure that there would be good grounds for declaring the election illegal, and the same principle should apply to members chosen to serve on the Standing Committee. So far as we know, the Standing Committee has never been called on to investigate the legality of the election of a member of its body, and it would be unfortunate, indeed, should the necessity of such a course arise. In view of the corruption in high places in the political world, and in view of the strivings for uppermost seats even among religious people, it has been suggested that we say enough on the importance of honorable methods in selecting members of the Standing Committee, to place our people on their guard, and to put them to thinking.

Spiritual Attraction.

THERE are days when the air seems to be full of electricity. We notice it in the paper on which we pen these lines. The sheets hang together. When one sheet is filled and we attempt to remove it, it adheres to the other sheets, and a little force must be used to separate them. There is a drawing together that is quite noticeable. Here, in the office, we call this force electricity. It is the law of attraction, and draws but does not repel. While separating the sheets thus drawn together, we are made to think of the law of spiritual attraction that should draw the people of God closer together and hold them as a united and a working body. Those who have been regenerated and have faith in Christ are attracted and held together by the Holy Spirit,—the great force of attraction. Then there is also a worldly force that attracts, but this force has no drawing power upon the true child of God. To converted men and women the influence of the world becomes a repelling force, while the power of God, through Christ Jesus, draws all the faithful together, and keeps them from the sins of the world. When we see professing Christians going after the world, and walking in the ways of the world, we can rest assured that they are not controlled by the influence of the Spirit. They have not the Spirit of Christ, and are, therefore, not attracted by the Holy Spirit. By being lifted up on the cross, Jesus is to draw all men unto him. That is, by his power he will attract or draw them, but those who are under the influence of the world cannot be drawn, for the reason that there is in them no faith on which the drawing influence of Christ can act.

Their Ministerial Problem.

WHILE the Disciples number more than 1,000,000 members in the United States, and are favored with thousands of gifted preachers, still they have their own ministerial problems. It is said that many of their smaller congregations are endeavoring to get along with preaching once a month. Four congregations, within reasonable distance of each other, may employ one preacher, and have him divide up his time between them. Then it is said that these congregations change their preachers quite often. As a result, they never prosper. Since the free ministry is practically unknown among them, and since the small churches can not pay a full salary for a preacher, the cause must be left to suffer. In instances of this sort, the free ministry among the Brethren seems just in place. And while we favor the supported ministry in some instances, still we hope never to see the time when the free ministry will be abandoned by our people. For the work entrusted to us we need both the supported and the free ministry. Yet our members should be instructed, when necessary, to render some assistance to the men who preach the Gospel without money and without price. While other denominations have probably carried the salaried ministry too far, we have likely boasted too much of the free ministry. More may be accomplished by adjusting ourselves to both conditions. There is no good excuse for the well-to-do preacher refusing to give a reasonable amount of his time and attention to the work of the ministry, but when one is in limited circumstances, must labor for a living, let him give at least some of his time. Those who can be supported, can, of course, give all of their time to the work. The conditions, as they confront us, ought to enable our people to solve the problem a little better than most denominations.

Use Separate Sheets.

THE urgent necessity of correspondents placing business matter on one sheet and matter intended for the Editorial Department on another, was forcibly illustrated a few days ago, when an item of news was copied from a letter in the Business Department and sent up to the editor's desk, too late to appear in the issue we mailed last week. The writer intended that the item of news should reach our desk at an early date, and it would have done so if our oft-repeated rule had been observed; but, instead of complying with the rule, he placed the news at the bottom of a letter relating to business. As there were hundreds of other business letters in the same mail, the clerks having charge of these letters did not reach the item of news until the paper was made up and put on the press. Incidents of this kind often occur. We again repeat that, when writing to a large printing establishment like ours, where hundreds of letters are received a day, matter intended for the Editorial Department should never be placed on the sheet containing business. Let the two items be placed on separate sheets, with the name and address of the writer on each; then, when the mail is opened, the two sheets can be sent to their respective departments, without any delay whatever.

The Mourners' Bench.

OUR attention has been called to a leaflet written by Bro. D. P. Saylor, possibly forty years ago, on the origin of the mourners' bench. For his authority he refers to the "Life and Labor of James Quinn," by John F. Wright, a book published in 1851. Here it is stated by the author, that the practice of coming forward to the anxious seat was introduced in a private home near Uniontown, Pa., in 1802-3, by Valentine Cook. This led up to the mourners' bench, but not without some apprehension upon the part of cautious preachers and influential congregations. After the bench became quite common in protracted meetings, it figured materially in the method of conversation practiced, and gave rise to considerable controversy, being strongly opposed by some of the denominations. In the leaflet Bro. Saylor calls it an idol, and for a time it was looked upon in that sense by not a few. But so far as we know, the mourners' bench has seen its day, and in the more popular revivals is not in evidence. In some localities it is still employed, but has practically disappeared from the city churches.

Plain Living.

WE are told of a consumptive preacher who sleeps on an upper porch, breathes the cold air the night through, and drinks a great deal of fresh buttermilk. The MESSENGER does not pose as a health journal, but we often feel like telling some of these almost bloodless people that if they would open the windows of their sleeping room, breathe the cold, fresh air, drink plenty of good, fresh buttermilk, and reduce their coffee bill about ninety per cent, they would enjoy life a great deal better, and be able to do more and better work for the Lord. Years ago, when men and women were too poor to have well-heated homes, or to purchase the luxuries of life, and were only too glad to get plenty of corn bread and buttermilk, the country had more strong boys and girls than can be found these days. There is nothing like getting back to the simple life for health, both spiritually and temporally.

NOTICE TO THE CHURCHES OF OREGON, WASHINGTON AND IDAHO.

The Committee appointed by the last District Meeting, consisting of nine members,—three from each State District,—met in Portland Dec. 28, 1910, and carefully adjusted all matter assigned to the Committee, in preparation for the division of the present District into three State Districts, after permission is granted by the Annual Meeting of 1911. The Committee further decided that there should be one more joint District Meeting, said meeting to be at the place provided for by the last District Meeting, the time of the meeting to be July 12 and 13, 1911. At that time the Committee will submit a report of the work done. By order of the Committee,

SISTERS' AID SOCIETY WORK IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

At our Annual Bible Term Meeting, held at Lordsburg College in January, three periods on the program were graciously granted to the sisters for the furtherance of their work. A goodly number of interested brethren, as well as sisters, were in attendance.

Reports from the different local societies were given. This was followed by discussing "The Needs of the Societies." The one great need seemed to be a definite aim. After an interesting discussion on "Suggestions," it was decided to have each local society select a representative, to be sent to Los Angeles at a selected time, to meet with a committee of sisters from the city. Together they are then to visit needy portions of the city, in order to become better acquainted with poverty and its needs. It is hoped that this will bring about more interest as well as more enlightened and systematic work to relieve the distressed as far as possible. It is also hoped that this plan may be but a stepping-stone for greater breadth of work in the near future. Edith Keim, President.

DIXON, ILLINOIS.

Our Bible Institute, held during Holiday week, was truly a feast of spiritual things to us all. Bro. J. G. Royer gave us two talks each day along the line of church and Sunday-school work. He told us how to reach the child, most effectually, and this, truly, was very highly appreciated. It gave us a feeling and desire to do more and better work for the Master.

"The Introduction to the Sunday-school Lessons," given by Bro. Ezra Flory, was very instructive. He impressed upon us the important thought to be looking for Jesus in the study of all the lessons.

Other topics of interest were discussed by Brethren C. Price, O. D. Buck, and —— Smally. Bro. Beard, of Bethany Bible School, gave us instructions in music, drilling us in several songs. He urged us to enter into the spirit of the songs in order to sing them with power.

The week's work will long be cherished in the minds of the members of the Dixon church. The Institute gave us new inspiration and more of a hungering and thirsting for God's Word. Mrs. G. W. Hollinger.

HUTCHINSON MISSION.

The work at Hutchinson is progressing nicely. The attendance at Sunday-school and preaching services is good, considering the sickness during the winter. One family has been quarantined for scarlet fever for almost three months.

The members are doing good work in the Christian Workers' Band and midweek prayer meetings. These meetings have, for the last three months, been held at the various homes. We are now holding our Sunday-school and preaching services in the most convenient cottage, since the Advent church, that had previously been used, was moved to less convenient quarters.

We all feel the need of a church home in Hutchinson. Some have expressed themselves that if they knew the Brethren would have a church home they would unite with us soon.

Not long ago a lady, seeing one of our neat sisters with her modest dress, said to her, "This makes me homesick." Inquiry was made as to why, and it was learned that her people, and she herself, also, were members of the Brethren church, but when she came to Hutchinson, years ago, there was no Brethren church here, so she went to another place of worship. These conditions should prompt us to duty. Shall we not have a church home in such a large and prosperous city as Hutchinson, with its great industries and manufactories? You, who are so blessed, and can worship under your own vine and fig tree, will you not remember the small band as they, in their weakness, try to show forth the death of our Blessed Redeemer? A. G. Miller.

ROSSVILLE, INDIANA.

Jan. 15 the Rossville Sunday-school organized a home department and cradle roll, in connection with the work already established. Bro. D. D. Hufford is superintendent of the home department; Sister Lily Hufford, superintendent of the cradle roll; Bro. J. W. Vetter, secretary-treasurer. The church was divided into six sections, and a visitor was selected for each, and furnished with literature to work his section. We think this will be the means to interest some, and bring them in more direct touch with the Sunday-school and the church. A missionary collection of $24, taken up by the Sunday-school on the first Sunday of each month, for the last year, was given to the Southern Indiana Mission for Home Mission work. The treasurer of the Christian Workers' Meeting reported $31.43 in the treasury. Of this amount $20 was ordered to be sent to the China Mission. It was decided that this action be made permanent, and hereafter the Christian Workers' collections are to go toward the support of the China Mission. A birthday bank has been placed in the church, and the proceeds derived from the same to be used for missionary purposes. J. W. Vetter.

THE STORY OF A NICKEL.

The words of Christ, as expressed in John 9: 4, "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day; the night cometh, when no man can work," seems to be the spirit of the Missionary Circle of the Church of the Brethren at Roaring Spring, Pa.

A member of the Missionary Circle, on her way to church, lost her contribution, which, after the services, was searched for and found. There being a group of five, each one decided to take a penny of this nickel and see what amount of money could be raised in three months' time. As a result the sum of $102 was turned over to the church treasurer, toward making a payment on the church debt, in the specified time, the money having been raised by each selling of the Lardo soap products, and in various different ways, together with a few small contributions given by other members of the church. The Missionary Circle is also doing an excellent work in the way of sewing for the poor, and will not only wish to report progress in our Missionary Circle, but in our church, in all its activities. We look forward to a glorious revival service, to be held by our pastor, Brother Quincy Lockrone, in the near future. Mrs. Mary E. Tyson.

Royersford, Pa., Jan. 22.

NORRISTOWN, PA.

This church met in council Jan. 19, with our elder, J. B. Shisler, presiding. One letter was granted. We then adopted the universal rule governing speakers in all other public meetings,—that each speaker be allowed two speeches on any question, that he speak directly on the subject, and that he speak only after securing permission from the moderator.

Bro. Harold Harley was then chosen as church treasurer, to serve one year. Brethren Isaiah Moyer and Eli Cassel were elected as auditors to serve for one and three years, respectively. Sister Maud Harrison was elected vice-president of our Christian Workers' Meeting. The following leaders for prayer meeting were chosen, to serve for six months: Sisters Lizzie Harley and Emma Cassel; Brethren J. H. Ellis and Eli Cassel.

The church having been given the privilege of expressing her choice, concerning lines of division in the District, we sent a petition to the division committee, appointed at our special District Meeting. We ask the committee to place us where they feel we properly belong.

Much other business came before the meeting which was disposed of in the spirit of love. Hattie M. Nedrow.

737 George Street, Jan. 22.

RICHLAND, PA.

I have been reading our church paper for about twenty years in our home, and in homes of others with whom I stayed. I am always very anxious to see what it contains, from week to week. I also notice a change in the staff of writers, all over the Brotherhood, from time to time. A number whom I knew during the last twenty years, have passed to the beyond. Other brethren and sisters, however, are taking up the writing, with some of whom I am personally acquainted.

I have not, as yet, made any attempt to write for our church paper, but I am very much pleased with it, and am getting more interested in its contents from week to week, so much so that I could not get along without reading it. I will give you some news from the Tulpehocken church.

Bro. Rufus Bucher, of Quarryville, Pa., closed a three weeks' series of meetings on the evening of the 14th, here in Richland. As a young brother, in the second degree of the ministry, he verily is full of the Holy Spirit, and in the hands of him that is above all, he permits himself to be used for the church in a powerful way, devoting his time and talent for God and the church which he loves. As a direct result of his faithful labors at this place, seventeen souls came out on the Lord's side and are desiring the holy rite of baptism. Others are near the kingdom. The meeting closed with a full house.

We are praying and working for a larger and better place of worship in the near future. As it was, some could not find room, some evenings, inside the door. The town is growing, and the church is growing in this vicinity. We, therefore, need a much larger and more convenient place of worship.

May the Lord richly bless our brother's labors, here and elsewhere, as time goes on! Isaac K. King.

Jan. 23.

ONEKAMA, MICHIGAN.

We wish to express our thanks, through the columns of the Messenger, to the many members and friends of the Church of the Brethren who so kindly aided us in building our churchhouse at this place. Although this church was dedicated last June, it was not entirely completed at that time. In fact, there are still some things we contemplate doing, as soon as the means can be provided. The building is 36x58 feet, with an 8 foot basement, which is used for Sunday-school class-rooms, fuel, etc. The building, including lot, cost $3,000. There is an indebtedness of $500. This $500 was borrowed of the General Mission Board, of which $100 is to be paid each year until all is paid.

We ask the prayers of our dear brethren and sisters for the work that is being done here, as we are laboring under difficulties. We feel, however, that the Lord is richly blessing us in the work. Bro. J. E. Ulery is our elder, and is doing all he can to push the work along.

Bro. E. G. Sellers and wife, and Bro. E. Riley have lately located here, for which we are all very thankful. We now have about thirty members. When this church was organized, June 14, 1909, we started with eighteen members. F. M. Buckingham.

Onekama, Mich., Jan. 20.

JUST A WORD FOR THE INGLENOOK.

Inasmuch as our General Missionary Board has completed arrangements whereby our people are to be brought into closer touch with our several institutions of learning, through the columns of the Inglenook, it is obvious that every friend of education will want to read this most excellent paper during the present year.

Our schoolmen are just as anxious for us to know what they are doing as we are to get these reports, and the only reasonable way we have of getting them is through the medium of imperfect connection. The Board is highly pleased with the marked improvement reported and personally noted during the past year, and fondly hope that the enthusiasm may become contagious over the entire Brotherhood. Since we are to hear from all these schools through the Inglenook, let us push its circulation and thereby secure a good audience.

The new, revised Cook Book, which goes with it, is wanted by every good housewife, and since it can not be had in any other way, it makes an inducement that should easily quadruple the Inglenook's present circulation.

Aside from the reports which we are to have from the schoolmen themselves, we are going to make some kind of a report of our visit to each school, which will also appear in the Inglenook in due time.

A. G. Crosswhite,
Flora, Ind. Secretary Editorial Board.

A TOUCHING SCENE.

It came about in this way: Bro. L. T. Holsinger held a series of meetings for the Killbuck congregation, six miles west of this city. At the close of the meetings two came forward to be received into the church. The weather being somewhat cold, these two applicants were brought here to our church, to be baptized, as we have a baptistry in the churchhouse.

As these two applicants were receiving the holy ordinance of Christian baptism, one could see tears being shed by a number of people who had been attending Bro. Holsinger's meetings. They were deeply impressed, and no doubt convicted of sin. Before the applicants were baptized, an invitation was extended to those poor, weeping souls. A song was sung for their benefit, but it seemed to have no effect. Bro. Holsinger talked to them one by one, yet they still withstood the Holy Spirit.

The ordinance of Christian baptism was then administered to those two applicants, while tears were being shed by many. After this service the congregation was dismissed. Some had already departed for their homes, while the poor souls under conviction were still weeping. I was much impressed with a young man whom I had never met before. He was weeping as if his heart were breaking. I felt that I must speak to him before he started for his home. After I had said only a few words to him, he consented to accept Christ. I then called Bro. Holsinger. He spoke a few words to him and he went forward. The congregation came to order. His mother still weeping, saw him take his seat on the front bench. Then she came and took her seat beside her son and said, "Charley, I can not bear to see you go alone." (Children, don't be afraid to set a good example, even before your parents.) Next came her other son. To see the mother and two only sons go forward was too much for the father, and he also came, weeping.

Thus we were permitted to see how a father, with his whole house, accepted Christ at once. Next came a lady who had witnessed the baptism of her husband only a few minutes before. Next came two husbands of faithful sisters. Sister, if you have an unbelieving husband, go to 1 Peter 3: 1, and there learn how you may win him to Christ.

Think what a scene this was,—a congregation dismissed, when only a few more words were needed to make seven souls willing to accept Christ as their Savior. Then came on some never all baptized in the afternoon, and all went home praising God for what he had done for them. Brother, sister, always have a word of comfort for those around you. A word spoken at the right time, at the right place, and in the right way will have its effect. Surely those who witnessed this scene will never forget it.

Notes From Our Correspondents

As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country.

CALIFORNIA.

Kerman.—Jan. 5 we held our council. Our elder not being present, Bro. J. B. Deardorff presided. Sunday-school officers were elected as follows: Bro. Wyatt and C. B. Wells as our superintendents, and Bro. Ira Brooke, secretary. Since our last report three members have moved away and one has died, Bro. Edgecomb and family, from Oskishoma, add four to our number. We have been staying every Sunday in the tabernacle, and on Thursday nights, from cottage to cottage, with good audience.—Clara Wells, Kerman, Cal., Jan. 21.

Los Angeles.—Our series of meetings, conducted by Bro. Wm. Lamplin, began Jan. 1, and closed on Sunday evening, Jan. 22. We had, in all, twenty-four services. The attendance and interest, throughout, were good. There were slight accessions and all felt the very near. Bro. Lamplin labored very earnestly while among us, and we feel that all have been much encouraged and strengthened by his visit and ministry. Since our last report two more, from the Santa Fe Mission, have been added to the church by baptism.—Mrs. M. Frantz, 3309 Manitou Avenue, Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 24.

Lordsburg.—The special two weeks' Bible Term at the College closed on Friday afternoon, January 6. The latter shows an enrollment of 165, aside from the regular students. The interest was very good from the opening to the close of the term. The regular instructors in the Bible Department were assisted by the following different ones: Bro. Wolfe, who had preaching at the church in the evening by different ministers who were in attendance; Bro. Wampler, in charge of the services, an aged grandfather was led into the water and baptized by our elder in charge, Bro. Edmond Forney.—Grace Hileman Miller, Lordsburg, Cal., Jan. 8.

Santee.—We have preaching services and Sunday-school every Lord's day in the modern schoolhouse. This will be appreciated by members who are thinking of locating in a mild climate. One brother wrote to me, before I located here, that this was an excellent climate for old people. I notice everybody—young as well as old—enjoying the beautiful winter weather. Letters of inquiry are coming encouragingly, and we hope for spring, to have a congregation sufficient here to have a communion service and organize not later than next fall. Lately I have heard of another brother who has located in Oregon. Any member wishing to locate in a mild and healthful climate, where they can help to build up the Master's kingdom, are invited to correspond with me.—S. A. Honberger, Santee, San Diego Co., Cal., Jan. 27.

CANADA.

Bertie Creek.—The members of the church met Christmas Day at the home of Bro. Jacob Stryker and family, where we were cordially welcomed and enjoyed an all-day meeting. A basket dinner was served. Preaching was also our Sunday-school. After that topics on the same were discussed by different ones in a very Christianlike manner. At 2 P. M. we were again called to order by the moderator. A short program was rendered by the classes and teachers, consisting of recitations, essays, choruses and readings. The little folks, especially, did their part well. We are thankful for that day and feel that it was spent profitably.—Mrs. Marla L. Swihart, Kelvinhurst, Maple Creek, Sask., Can., Jan. 4.

Pleasant Valley.—We have now been living in Alberta almost a year. This congregation has Sunday-school and preaching every Sunday in a schoolhouse, which is situated six miles west of Bulls Head. A few members (eight in number) live seven miles south across a valley. One church granted us the privilege of having Sunday-school, preaching, and prayer-meeting for two weeks; but we were not able to. Bro. Jonathan and Sister Frantz, with Sister Ella Shatto as superintendent, and Bro. Jesse Brubaker, with Sister Frantz as our elder, Bro. J. N. Overholtz, walked five miles through the snow in order to preach for us. All appreciated their visit from our behalf.—Hannah Dunning, Bulls Head, Alberta, Can., Jan. 22.

INDIANA.

Anderson.—Nov. 12 Bro. Isaac Branson, of Muncie, Ind., began a series of meetings in a tent. He continued to preach every evening during six inspiring Gospel sermons. Although there were no accessions to the church, we feel that we had a meeting of good influence, and the church was built up. We are entering 1911 with brighter prospects than ever before. Our Sunday-school is being built up, and with better attendance and more real interest than it has had for some years. Bro. Ross Martin is our superintendent. We have been making some efforts to better our Sunday-school during the past year, and we feel encouraged that our efforts at this place have not been in vain.—Curtis Hilbert, 3314 Colorado Ave., Anderson, Ind., Jan. 26.

Beaver Dam.—Our series of meetings, conducted by Bro. George E. Swihart, of Roann, Ind., began Dec. 31 and closed Jan. 15. A large number of people in the community were listened to with the best of attention. The attendance was also good, considering the unfavorable weather. Sister Myrtle Swihart led the song service, which added greatly to the interest of the meetings. Two members were much encouraged and strengthened. Good feeling was aroused in our neighbors and friends, in behalf of the church. Five made the good choice, and were baptized Jan. 21. A request was made by the Brethren that Bro. Swihart hold a Bible class for us later in the winter.—Willis N. Wine, Pulaski, Ind., Jan. 23.

Kilbuck.—Jan. 3 Bro. L. T. Holsinger came to the Antioch house to preach, and on the evening of the 4th meetings continued until the evening of the 22d. Part of the time we had very inclement weather, and with bad roads, but for most of the time we had a good attendance and the best of interest. Nine were baptized, and 3 reclaimed, to the joy of the kingdom.—W. H. Kimpaugh, R. D. 12, Muncie, Ind., Jan. 26.

Lower Deer Creek.—Bro. Chas. Oberlin, of Logansport, Ind., came to us on the first and preached seventeen sermons during the past year, and organized a Sunday-school, which we baptized. He preached the Word with power.—Mrs. Bowsher, R. R. 3, Chesterfield, Ind., Jan. 23.

Muncie.—This was my first visit to this place. I found a good, substantial churchhouse here, and a good congregation, but they have had no regular minister or shepherd. Like all other city missions, the leaders aspire after something greater, and more or less the work will decline. Still, the Muncie Band is doing all it can to get a pastor to locate with them. They have a nice, new, and pleasant place for worship.—Joseph Holder, Hagerstown, Ind., Jan. 21.

Nettle Creek.—Bro. George Hosier came to us Jan. 15, and held a ten days' series of meetings. The interest and attendance were good, considering the inclemency of the weather a part of the time. There were no accessions to the church, but a good meeting was enjoyed.—W. B. Dailey, R. No. 5, Peru, Ind., Jan. 23.

Pyrmont.—Bro. J. Edson Ulery, of Onekama, Mich., came to us Dec. 31, and began a series of meetings on account of inclement weather for nearly two weeks, and much sickness, but attendance was not as it otherwise would have been. This, however, did not destroy the interest and earnestness of Bro. Ulery, and those who attended. He is a brother in the Bible studies and a fine teacher, and devotes much of his time to this work. As a result of our efforts eight confessed Christ and were baptized. Much good was much encouraged. The meetings closed Jan. 22.—Lulu B. Ulrey, R. No. 23, Ft. Wayne, Ind., Jan. 23.

Springfield.—The brethren and sisters of this District met in council Jan. 21 to elect a deacon, and reorganize Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Meeting. The voice of the church was unanimous in calling Bro. James Hanaway to the deacon's office. He, with Bro. Orson Marshall, who had been previously elected, was installed in the deacon's office on Sunday evening, Jan. 22. Bro. Jesse Hoff, Bro. Hanaway was reelected our Sunday-school superintendent; Bro. Gordon Hoff, secretary and treasurer. Bro. Hoff was also reelected of the Christian Workers' Meeting, and Sister Olive Franks, secretary. Our Sunday-school and Bible study are known as the "Walking with God" by Eld. Berkey.—Etta Elson, Wawaka, Ind., Jan. 27.

IOWA

Des Moines Valley.—We have been having a glorious season of spiritual refreshing. Dec. 31 Bro. Ulery began our Bethany Bible School, came into our midst to conduct a Bible term, which continued through the first week. While he was with us we studied First Peter, from which we received much help. He also lectured on "The Holy Spirit," "The Old and New Covenants," and "The Life and Teachings of the Life of Abraham." Following these meetings we had a revival meeting, conducted by Bro. Ulery, which began Jan. 8. Bro. Ulery labored earnestly while with us. The meetings were well attended in spite of much sickness in the neighborhood. Two came out on the Lord's side. We feel much encouraged and strengthened by these meetings.—Ida Jasper, Ankeny, Iowa, Jan. 23.

Marshalltown.—There has been quite a serious time at the Bethel church, which is in the Marshalltown District. There have been sickness and death among the inmates. Sister Phoebe Ann Hollenberg died Dec. 19, 1910, after a lingering illness of some weeks. A few days later, Dec. 24, Sister Mary Ann Hollenberg, mother-in-law of Sister Phoebe, died in the ripe old age of eighty-seven. They were known here for many years as faithful members of the Bethel church, and were previously sick at present. Jan. 15 Bro. Myers was anointed, and several others are very feeble. Our elder, Bro. F. M. Wheeler, left for Pasadena, California, Dec. 20, and has not previously. Bro. Samuel Geoghnour, of Ankeny, Iowa, is filling the appointments.—Mrs. Lizzie Hollenberg, R. No. 29, Ft. Smith is our Sunday-school superintendent for this year.—Laura C. Hoffer, Marshalltown, Iowa, Jan. 25.

South Waterloo.—We have just passed through another term of Bible study, which began Dec. 26 and closed Jan. 6. The term was conducted by Bro. J. M. Moore. The attendance was good and much interest was manifested. The study was made interesting by Bro. Moore's tactful way of presenting the subjects. He gave doctrinal lessons in the Book of John. The term continued ten days, and all in attendance felt well repaid for the time spent in the work. We have held eighteen terms of Bible study in this congregation, the first one being held in 1894, and conducted by Bro. E. S. Young. The Christian Workers' Band is in line of work this year and keep the work going during the winter months and possibly longer.—Samuel Switzer, Waterloo, Iowa, Jan. 25.

MICHIGAN

Crystal church met in council Jan. 7, with our elder, Bro. G. E. Stone, presiding. We elected our church, Sunday-school and Christian Workers' officers. Bro. G. E. Stone, elder; Bro. A. B. Noll, clerk; Bro. W. H. Roose, superintendent; Bro. J. B. Noll, president of the Christian Workers' Meeting. Our Bible school begins Feb. 23, and will be conducted by Bro. S. E. Ulery, of Onekama, Mich. We are hoping for good success.—Olive N. Lechner, Box 84, Crystal, Mich., Jan. 23.

MARYLAND.

Hooverdan.—Our series of meetings was conducted by Bro. B. F. Lightner, of Gettysburg, Pa. He labored earnestly with us, delivering nineteen sermons, beginning Nov. 20, and closing Dec. 4. The attendance was not as large as it might be, the meetings being held during dark nights. Many of the older members were unable to attend on account of sickness. Two young men came out boldly for the right, and put on Christ.—Lizzie Shaffer, R. No. 3, Dotterer, Union Bridge, Md., Jan. 28.

Meadow Branch.—We feel that the Lord is constantly blessing the work of the church here. After the large ingathering of souls into the Lord's kingdom, during the past year, our services seem to be increasingly attended, in spite of the wintry weather. This is as it should be for spiritual growth. Our ministry is the Word.—Jesse T. Myers. Under the care of our younger preachers is, by request, laboring for the Manor congregation, Washington Co., Md. At present, we have a special engagements for twelve successive Sundays, with one exception.—E. Roy, Westminster, Md., Jan. 24.

Mount Zion.—On the evenings of Dec. 28 and 29 we were specially favored by having Bro. J. N. H. Beahm deliver two instructive and interesting lectures on the Holy Land. We believe many good impressions followed these lectures. We intended beginning the new year with a series of meetings by one of our home ministers, Eld. Caleb Long. It being very stormy, Bro. Long did not come. Jan. 2, closing our Sunday attendance and good interest prevailed until the close of the quarter. Bro. Long gave us strong Bible sermons each night. Many good lessons were given us by means of Bible readings and testimonies. While we were no conversions, the members were much strengthened, and we are counting the cost. A Bible class has been started, to be held each evening in the home of the pastor, with Jas. Crain as our teacher.—Katie S. Grossnickle, Boonesboro, Md., Jan. 26.

Sharpsburg.—Bro. G. E. Yoder, of Elk Lick, Pa., came to us Jan. 2, and began meetings, which continued over Sunday, Jan. 24. Bro. Yoder also conducted a Bible class daily. This was a season of much spiritual inspiration and good attendance. Would we be a people faithful to all the principles of the Gospel, as taught in the New Testament, then let the Word of the Lord have free course, be glorified beyond our borders, and the result will soon be manifested in a people zealous in good works. Bro. Yoder gave some practical sermons while here, which were especially helpful to our church. We hope to be able willing to put on the whole armor, obtain baptism, and others seem very near the kingdom.—Susie M. Hershey, Box 117, Jan. 26.

West Brownsville.—We are just at the close of a very successful and inspiring series of meetings, conducted by Bro. H. A. Miller, of Meyersdale, Pa., which began Jan. 1, and last, were characterized by marked interest. We are glad to report ten accessions by baptism, making the total four restored.—Preston R. Phillips, Brownsville, Md., Jan. 27.

MINNESOTA.

Morrill church met in council Jan. 7. This was the time to elect the Sunday-school officers for six months. Bro. Percy Days was elected as superintendent.—Ora Carter, R. D. 3, Box 43, Foley, Minn., Jan. 24.

MISSOURI

Fair View.—Bro. C. D. Hylton, of Virginia, and Bro. J. W. B. Wright, of Indiana, visited friends in this locality here. They preached four interesting sermons for us. Two were reclaimed.—Maggie Wright, R. No. 2, Box 17, Macomb, Mo., Jan. 24.

NEW MEXICO.

Dexter.—Our love feast was held Jan. 14. Eld. Jacob Wyne officiated. Several of the members from Lake Arthur were with us. Though for the most part the services were very spiritual and uplifting. The sisters broke the bread and passed the cup. Since our last report one was received by letter. Our surplus Sunday-school collection amounts to $14.06, was sent to the Bethany Bible School.—Letta Bahney, Dexter, N. Mex., Jan. 24.

OHIO.

Donnels Creek.—We closed a very interesting series of meetings at the New Carlisle house, conducted by Bro. B. F. Petry, of Eaton, Ohio. He labored earnestly and faithfully from Dec. 1 to Jan. 23. The attendance and interest were good throughout the meetings. Five came out on the Lord's side and were baptized.—Mrs. Lizzie D. L. Bell, R. No. 3, Brookville, Ohio, Jan. 24.

Greenville congregation met in council Jan. 21. Eld. E. Sheffer presided. After some deliberation we granted six letters. One letter was received. Officers for the year were chosen. Sister Sheffer was elected clerk; Bro. Wm. Hoffman, soup, clerk; Noah Swinehart, treasurer; Bro. Perry Cooperrider, superintendent; Bro. Elmer Stiefbold, assistant.—Dan Jan. 23.

Painter Creek.—Through the assistance of Bro. J. W. Fidler, of Dayton, Ohio, we began our series of meetings Jan. 1, which continued over two weeks. Bro. Fidler is a strong, very interesting and well-delivered sermons were given, besides an address to the children, attended by about four hundred. Bro. Fidler's sermons were full of the Word of the unsaved was arranged and prayed for, before and during the meetings. We are pleased with the progress of the meetings, and prayers by God's people were offered up most fervently. We have been blessed with such an ingathering of souls.—Levi Minnich, Greenville, Ohio, Jan. 26.

Richland.—Bro. William Fidler, of East Akron, Ohio, began services for us Jan. 7 and continued until Jan. 19, when, on account of sickness, he was obliged to return to his home. Although we were favored with inclement weather and bad roads, the attendance was good and the interest excellent. We were very sorry to see Bro. Fidler leave, as many conversions were being made. The services were continued until Jan. 29, the pastor having charge.—Eld. B. Long, Mansfield, Ohio, Jan. 24.

OKLAHOMA.

Bear Creek.—Bro. A. J. Smith was with us recently over Sunday, in council. One young lady has been baptized, and a Brethren Sunday-school was organized. We have preaching at the Antelope Valley schoolhouse every first and third Sunday of the month. Bro. Smith is one of our consecrated ministers.—Sister I. H. Underwood, secretary. The interest taken in encouraging the use the Brethren literature. Our membership is small and scattered. Any brethren or sisters who may locate in this locality will please help by immigration. Who will come?—W. G. Cook, Billings, Okla., Jan. 24.

Elk City.—We are glad to report that the good work is progressing in the Elk City church. A number of members have located here recently. Among the number we mention Ed. E. J. Smith, of Conway Springs, Kans., and Bro. Sherman Clapper, of Chewelah, Wash. Others will arrive soon, and there is room and work for many more. Sister Lantz is meeting with good success in her work. She has charge of the Sunday-school. She wields a strong influence over the mothers, children and young people. Already our Sunday-school numbers over one hundred. At the present rate of increase, our churchhouse will soon be too small. Plans are being made for a christmas tree and a treat of candles, oranges, etc., Sister Lantz is especially enabled by her position in the homes for song service. We have an evergreen Sunday-school, which promises to be lasting. Sister Lantz through the cold weather.—Cora Byer, R. D. 2, Stanley, Wis., Jan. 26.

CORRESPONDENCE

"Write what thou seest, and send it unto the churches"

THE SOUTH ST. JOSEPH MISSION, MO.

We had a very quiet communion service on the 20th, with Bro. Hardy officiating, assisted by Eld. J. S. Kline. On account of so much sickness we had streets, only forty were seated at the tables. It was an impressive scene to several visitors who never before saw such a service. It helped, we think, to convert several more to the faith.

Our series of meetings closed on Sunday evening, with baptism following, which resulted in twenty being added to the church by baptism. But the revival did not cease with the close of the meetings. On Tuesday following we learned of two more converts, who were baptized before prayer meeting. At the close of the meeting Bro. Deardorff gave another invitation, when two more came forward, whom we hope to baptize later on.

It is not very difficult to hold a series of meetings and take people into the church, as it is to nourish them and bring them up later on. The Lord did a good work through Bro. Hardy, but there remains the more difficult task of feeding them with the sincere milk of the Word, that they may grow.

Two of our sick brethren have recently been anointed. Pray for this mission that souls may be prepared for God's kingdom above. E. N. Huffman.

502 Kentucky Street, St. Joseph, Mo., Jan. 26.

AKRON, OHIO.

We held our first council meeting, since being organized, on Saturday, Jan. 20. Our elder, Bro. James Murray, presided. All business was disposed of in a Christian manner, and some expressed themselves as hoping that all our council meetings might be as harmonious as this one.

Sunday-school officers elected for the coming year are as follows: Superintendent, Claude Murray; Secretary, Catharine Dague; cradle roll and home department superintendent, Mrs. Jennie Messenger; assistant, Mrs. Emma Rohrer. Sisters Deemer and Sansaman were appointed solicitors for home and foreign mission work. Bro. Wm. Border and Sisters Emma Rohrer and Pearl Smith were appointed to direct the work of the Christian Workers' Meeting. Sisters Pearl Smith, Mary Border, Sarah Kreiner, John Rennecker and Claude Murray were appointed a committee to formulate some system by which our current expenses may be equally met.

On Sunday following Bro. Murray gave us a good sermon on "The Greatest Theme in the Bible,—Love." We appreciate his labors among us, and hope we will all remember his kindly advice and instruction.

As winter is fast passing away, and spring is approaching, we are anxiously looking forward to the time when our new churchhouse will be begun. Mrs. A. F. Shriver.

WESTERN COLORADO AND UTAH.

Our Ministerial and Missionary Meeting was held the day preceding our District Meeting at Fruita, Colo., Dec. 2*x*.

A number of subjects were ably discussed. Much was said about "The Minister, and What He Should Be." Many helpful thoughts were presented to our mind in an encouraging way, and once more our ideal of the ministry has been raised.

All through the meeting considerable effort was made to bring to a higher standard, not only the minister and his work, but also the laity,—the responsibility of each member. We are all responsible for what we can do. For that reason a thorough study should be made of the qualifications of our young people, that they may be used to the best advantage. Many are held back until their best days for usefulness are past, while, if they had been active during the time for development, they might have become a power which the church so much needs.

Should the church at large be more alert in looking up the latent talent that is in her possession, there would be fewer unheeded calls, and evidently more prosperous churches.

The missionary meeting occupied the evening service. The burden of the meeting was to awaken personal interest in missionary activity.

The Mission Board gave the 'Needs of the District in a Missionary Field" in a very clear and concise manner. A number of good discussions directed our minds to the reasonableness and practicability of doing the work that is near at hand.

Our District was organized less than one year ago and has yet much unexplored territory. There is no need of anyone in our District being idle if the western slope of Colorado and Utah is to be won to Christ.

The following officers for the Ministerial Meeting will be held next Thanksgiving Day in the Mt. Garfield church. Grand Junction, Colo., Jan. 28. H. C. Wenger.

PORTLAND, TEXAS.

We, the little band of brethren and sisters (sixteen in number, with twelve charter members) met in the home of Bro. L. J. Porter to organize ourselves into a Christian working body. Eld. J. A. Miller, of Mineral, Texas, who is the traveling evangelist for the District of Texas and Louisiana, came to our assistance, and presided at this meeting. Our little band consists of one elder and wife, two deacons and their wives, and eight of the laity. All are active workers, and all are interested in the work.

With deep solemnity we proceeded in regular order to the election of officers. Bro. Witmore was chosen elder by a unanimous vote; Bro. Secretary, Bro. H. D. Blocher, Messenger agent; Bro. G. S. Axtell, treasurer; Sister Eva Blocher, missionary solicitor and treasurer of said funds. The writer was elected church correspondent. Brethren L. J. Porter, G. S. Axtol and H. D. Blocher were elected members of the Portland church board of appraisers for Brethren's Insurance Co. All officers are chosen to serve one year. Our church is to be known as "Portland."

Following the services we had a very devotional little prayer meeting. Many offered short, earnest prayers for the work done, appealing for help and guidance in this new field of labor, that we may do efficient work for the Master. Any one will find this a genial clime, as we are located at the junction of the two bays, Corpus Christi and Nenasis, where we get the breeze almost continually the year round. This place is seven miles from the city of Corpus Christi on the S. A. & A. P. Ry., with 10,000 inhabitants, and served with six passenger trains. We invite members to stop with us. They will soon learn that the Lord has a planting here, in this far-away Southland, which is his. Amanda Witmore.

TO PROSPECTIVE HOMESEEKERS.

The purpose of this article is to furnish advice to those who may feel inclined to settle down in Colorado, as the time is nearing when many may be coming our way with a view of locating.

In the first place, as members of the Church of the Brethren, you will be interested in a church in some central corner of the country. Besides, there is no necessity for doing so. You might just as well locate among the members here as to get out in some obscure corner by yourself. We have a number of small churches here, where we have regular services, and you may as well locate at some one of these as not.

As to the land, soil, and climatic conditions, there is very little preference in favor of any one part of the country. At Arriba, Colo., on the C. R. I. & P. Ry., the home of the writer, we have a small band also, of about seventeen members. Here, too, you will receive a hearty welcome. We have a churchhouse, now in process of erection, with excellent railroad facilities, over the C., R. I. & P. and U. P. Railways, eighty-five miles southeast of Denver and seventy-five miles east of Colorado Springs. We are greatly in need of ministerial help, and would be glad to have some earnest minister, old or young, to assist us here.

Just thirty miles west of Resolis, on the C., R. I. & P. Ry., is Calhan Station, and eighteen miles south of this place is Yoder, the home of Brethren J. C. Groff and J. J. Wassam, both ministers.

Here, also, is a small band of about thirty earnest workers, who will meet you at Calhan, show you around, and gladly welcome you in their midst. They, likewise, are preparing to build a churchhouse in the near future.

At Colorado City is another small band of devoted Christians, with Bro. L. H. Root as minister, supported by the Home Mission Board. An effort is being made to build a churchhouse in the city. This place is forty miles west of Calhan, the last-named place being on the C., R. I. & P. Ry.

Thus it will be seen that in a straight line, east and west, and on one railroad line there are four congregations, within thirty to forty miles from each other. The two farthest are only about one-hundred miles apart.

At each of the above-named places active Sunday-schools are now running, most of them evergreen, with Christian Workers' Meetings at Wayne and Colorado City.

Then, also, at Denver, Sterling, and Haxtum, on the Burlington, are active congregations that will extend a cordial welcome to you.

Now we are not in the land business, but other people have land that they will place at your disposal, so that you need not fear that we can not locate you. There is plenty of room yet, but no vacant land near these points, or very little, at any rate. A few relinquishments are for sale. In writing for information, relative to these points, enclose postage for reply.

"Come over into Macedonia and help us." "Come thou with us and we will do thee good."

THE PLEASANT HILL, OHIO, INSTITUTE.

The Sunday-school teachers and workers of Southern Ohio held their ninth Institute at Pleasant Hill during the Holiday week, beginning Dec. 26 and closing Dec. 30. They held three sessions,—one in the forenoon, one in the afternoon and one in the evening. Brethren I. B. Trout and P. B. Fitzwater were the instructors. They gave us a feast of good things on Sunday-school and church work.

Among the addresses given by Bro. I. B. Trout were three on the Sunday-school Lessons for 1911 and three on "Sunday-school Management and Problems." Our Sunday-school lessons, he said, were well selected for 1911, and could not well be improved upon. His talks on "Sunday-school Management" were full of useful hints and methods, and had a peculiar freshness as they were presented from an angle quite different from that a year ago, on the same subject. These talks are very practical at this time of the year, when we begin another year's work.

Among Bro. Fitzwater's addresses were five on the Book of Revelation. His large audiences soon learned that he had the subject well at his command. There was increasing interest with each address. At times the question and answer method was engaged in, by ministers and other Bible students, in a very interesting and profitable manner. The time was too short to cover the subject thoroughly, but those present were led to see new beauties in this book, and to be filled with a desire to give it a more careful study.

His lecture on marriage was instructive, practical and impressive. The sacredness of the rite was brought out in a striking manner. The statistics given, relative to the curse of so many evils and so much unhappiness, was appalling.

According to the register, 362 were enrolled. Of these 25 were superintendents; 44, teachers of advanced classes; 33, intermediate teachers; 24, primary teachers; 261, Sunday-school pupils. Many who did not attend regularly, did not enroll. A large representation of ministers and elders was present.

No series of meetings in the District were in progress at this time. Bro. David Hoffman, Chairman of the Committee, being in the Orient, Eld. Jacob Coppock presided in a creditable manner.

These Institutes are supported mainly by one offering, annually, from each local school of the District. Usually a few offerings are taken at the Institute.

The people of Pleasant Hill are to be commended for their splendid hospitality in caring for the Institute. This is the home congregation of Eld. Isaac Frantz, well known throughout the Brotherhood. Bro. Frantz was present and took an active part in assisting the Committee in caring for the people. Sister Frantz, who has not been well for a while, was permitted to attend the Institute the greater part of the time. It will be remembered that this congregation entertained our annual Institute in 1904. Immediately following our late Institute, the Pleasant Hill congregation began a series of meetings. As there was no Holiday Sunday-school Institute in Northwestern Ohio the people of their workers were with us, and were accorded the privilege of the Institute.

Among the persons from other State Districts, who contributed to the success of the Institute were Bro. J. M. Mohler, of Missouri, Sister Emma Miller, District Sunday-school Secretary of Southern Indiana, and Bro. Vernon Schwalm, of Northern Indiana. Invitations for the 1911 Institute are in order.

BIBLE TERM OF MANCHESTER COLLEGE.

We again have the pleasure of reporting another very successful Special Bible Term at Manchester College. The interest throughout the term was unabating. Several ministers, Sunday-school officers, teachers and Christian workers took advantage of this opportunity offered, better to prepare themselves for the service of God.

Eld. T. T. Myers conducted the evangelistic services. These were well attended, and continued to grow in interest until the close. Eleven souls,—nine young men and two young women,—were made happy by accepting Christ as their personal Savior. Ten of these are enrolled in the College. What joyful news it must be for parents to hear that a son or daughter, away in College, has accepted Christ, and become a member of the church! The possibilities, wrapped up in these young people, only the future will reveal, but we hope great things of them. May God bless and keep them faithful!

Prof. P. B. Fitzwater, in his interesting way, conducted two classes a day, from the books of Colossians and First Peter. Those who had the pleasure of following him two weeks in the study of these books, learned many sacred truths which will be helpful in future study and work.

Prof. T. T. Myers, besides conducting the evangelistic services, gave two lectures a day,—one on the "Christian Ministry" and the other from the book of Hebrews. These were very helpful and inspiring lectures. Bro. Myers' clear and logical way of presenting the truth was not only interesting but instructive. We greatly appreciated these able Bible instructors.

Prof. Otho Winger occupied one period a day in giving lectures on "Church History." Bro. Winger is well qualified to handle this subject. While he had the "dull period,"—the period just before dinner, and a subject usually considered dull, the class took great interest in his lectures. They were interesting from start to finish. He did not fail to inform the class that historians favor the faith and practice of the Church of the Brethren. In listening to his lectures one could not help but have his faith strengthened in the church.

Sister Marguerite Bixler Garrett gave instructions in sacred music. She led most of the song services at the evangelistic services. She is at home when teaching music, and can sing the Gospel into the hearts of the people. Her work was much appreciated.

Elders, pastors, evangelists, Sunday-school officers, teachers, and Christian workers should arrange their work so as to attend, each year, a Special Bible Term in one of our Colleges.

We greatly appreciate the untiring efforts of the instructors of this Special Bible Term. May the Lord bless and reward them greatly for their service!

DEATH OF PHILIP BARNHART.

Bro. Barnhart had some remarkable experiences in early life, and for that reason a special notice of his departure will be of general interest. He was born at Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, near the Rhine, April 19, 1827. He died at his home, in Clinton, Va., Jan. 9, 1911, aged 79 years, 9 months and 20 days. In 1854, in company with Miss Catharine Smith, who afterward became his first wife, he left Germany and sailed for America. A very heavy storm broke upon them in the North Sea, wrecking their vessel. They were picked up by another sinking vessel into the ocean, to what appeared to be a watery grave. There was a wild scramble for the life boats, and the scores of passengers began to fight for their lives. Thus the two became separated. Bro. Barnhart, by means of a frail boat, landed on Pedro Island, drenched and grief-stricken at the loss of Miss Smith.

Presently he noticed a dark object floating near him. The night was dark, but the young man saw that it was one of the life boats from the wrecked vessel. Swimming up the drenched and apparently lifeless body, he carried it into a near-by house where, soon after, it was revived. Great was his joy when he saw that it was his traveling companion, and that they were happily united again.

After being two months on the Island, enduring many hardships, they secured passage on a ship and were able to return to Germany. A year later they sailed again for America, landing in New York. Later on they came to Dayton, Va., where they were married soon after the arrival. To this union were born two daughters and three sons. His wife died Oct. 7, 1877. Oct. 9, 1881, he married Sister Sallie Swartz. Three children blessed this union.

Bro. Barnhart was a member of the Church of the Brethren for forty years, living a faithful, consecrated life. The last few years of his life he was almost blind. While sitting in his chair, his wife reading for him, the end came without a moment's warning. He leaves a devoted wife, five daughters and three sons by his first marriage, one daughter and one son by his second wife. He also leaves two stepchildren. Funeral and interment at Mt. Horeb (U. B.) church. Services by the writer from 1 Thess. 4:13-18, assisted by Rev. J. S. Martin, of the Mennonite church.

HISTORICAL HIGHLAND COUNTY, OHIO.

After the Stillwater Junction meeting I left my home Dec. 3, to do some evangelistic work in Highland County, Ohio. My first series of meetings was held in the Lexington church, near Highland. This is an old church, in whose pulpit the most noted woman preacher of the Church of the Brethren, Sarah Major, was much heard in the past. Here, also, Bro. James Quinter, of sacred memory, labored much, he then being engaged in school work, near by, at New Vienna. Eld. Allen Ockerman has charge of this church at present. For many years he was the only minister here, but is now ably assisted in the ministry by two promising young brethren—Dan B. Wright and Leslie Ockerman.

This church has had its trials in the past, and the membership is not large. The churchhouse is situated in the midst of a fine farming community, and the farmers were quite busy in gathering a large corn crop, while we were there, yet the meetings were well attended. Sister Ockerman, the aged mother of Eld. Allen Ockerman, was present at nearly every meeting. The Friends (Quakers) seem quite numerous here. Most of the people of the community claim membership in some church or other,—no matter how remote their religious experience. The Church of the Brethren has a big field for Christian endeavor, in its effort to reëstablish primitive Christianity. The people are kind and hospitable, and know how to make the stranger within their gates feel at home.

Closing the meeting here Dec. 18, we proceeded on our journey to the White Oak (Hollowtown) church, beginning meetings there Dec. 19. This church also has had much tribulation, but we trust that its future may be all the brighter for past trials endured. Eld. Davidson and Frank Custer are the ministers at this place. Bro. Davidson is quite active in the work, giving much of his time to the cause. Bro. Custer is hindered somewhat because of his distance from the church. This is also the home of several aged saints, now over eighty years old, but one of the staunchest members to be found anywhere.

From the names we judge that many of the ancestors of the people of this community were of French extraction. They exercised toward us all the courtesy and hospitality for which that nation is justly celebrated. As a result of the meeting two were baptized and three restored. Jan. 2 we left for home. Our next series of meetings we expect shortly to begin at Circleville, Ohio.

The Gospel Messenger

A weekly religious journal, a Periodical, to be published in the interest of the Church of the Brethren, and is the only periodical published by the General Mission Conference. Price, $1.50 per annum.

It meets every need for a return to the apostolic order of worship and practice.

It holds that the Bible is a divinely-inspired book, and recognizes the New Testament as the only infallible rule of faith and practice for followers of God.

It also believes in the doctrine of the Trinity; teaches future rewards and punishment, and emphasizes the importance of prayer, love and faith in God and man.

It maintains that only those who remain faithful until death have the promise of eternal life.

That Faith, Repentance and Baptism are conditions of salvation, and remission of sins.

That Trine Immersion or dipping the candidate three times forward is Scriptural and essential.

That Feet-washing as taught in John 13, is a divine command to be observed by the followers of God.

That the Lord's Supper is a meal, and, in connection with the Communion service, is to be taken in the order of the close of the day.

That the Salutation of the Holy Kiss, or Kiss of Charity, is binding on the followers of Christ.

That War and Retaliation are contrary to the spirit and teaching of the Gospel of the Prince of Peace, Jesus Christ;

That a Nonconformity to the world in daily walk, dress, customs and conversation is essential to true holiness and christian piety.

It maintains that in public worship, or religious exercises, Christians should appear as directed in 1 Cor. 11: 4, 5.

It also advocates the Scriptural duty of Anointing the sick with oil in the name of the Lord.

In short, it is a vindicator of all that Christ and the Apostles have enjoined upon us, and aims, amid the conflicting theories of modern times, to defend Christendom, to point all around that all must concede to be infallibly safe. Send for sample copy. Address

I have just completed the reading of this book of fifty-four subjects. It seems to me there is more practical thought in that many subjects than I ever read. Now to avoid the mistake of our life every member or family of the Brethren should get the Messenger and "Our Saturday Night" for the small sum of $1.85.—I. B. Wike, Huntington City, Ind.

Wife and I have just been reading "Our Saturday Night." We find it delightful. It is remarkable how the author has succeeded in converting the common, everyday experiences of life into lessons of enduring truth and beauty. The book is good reading and will do good.—John S. Flory, President Bridgewater College, Va.

I am unable to find words good enough to congratulate for the book "Our Saturday Night." We have all read it and it is out among the neighbors.—Geo. W. Warren, Osceola Mills, Pa.

I received the book "Our Saturday Night" a few days ago. My husband and I were both anxious to read it. When we began we could hardly quit, until it was read through. One would read and the other listen. We read it in two nights. We were delighted with it. It is good from beginning to end. I am sure it will be read with interest by all.—Ella Bowman, Floyd, Va.

We got "Our Saturday Night" all right and like it fine. It is a good book and at the right time if parents raising young families would only read it. We are going to send it to each of our children to read, and it will help them to instruct their children along life's journey. It is also helpful to parents and to us older grandparents included.—H. H. Kindig, Onarga, Ill.

I desire to take this opportunity of expressing now my great appreciation of the book "Our Saturday Night," which I have just finished reading. It is interesting from start to finish, and is well worthy of accompanying a periodical of the standard of the Gospel Messenger. Long after Brother Moore has been taken across to the other side of the "dark river," provided the Lord gives me life and breath, shall I turn to this little volume for comfort and cheer.—D. E. Miller, Washington, D. C.

I received my "Saturday Night" and read it through in 24 hours. It is just what every brother and sister should read. I think some would change their ways of doing.—D. A. Bufford, Newville, N. Dak.

I am well pleased with my book "Our Saturday Night," and it ought to be received by every one.—Eliza Renner Barry, Ill.

After reading the volume "Our Saturday Night," I want to say to the many readers of the Gospel Messenger, fathers and mothers especially, you can do very well by placing a copy in the hands of your children as a stimulus and guide for them in life's journey. It is replete with warnings, citations, examples and good counsel. As it is made up of life's experiences, it is able to breathe the same into other lives.—Samuel J. Burger, Rowe, Ind.

I took up "Saturday Night" last evening and read one hundred pages before I could bring myself to stop. To say that the book is interesting is putting it very mildly. It is both entertaining and instructive. Every chapter is complete in itself, yet the subject matter is correlative from beginning to end. Every Messenger reader should have a copy.—Jno. J. Shiffler, Union Deposit, Pa.

The "Saturday Night" is the best little book I ever read besides the good book the Bible. My prayer is that the contents of the book may find lodgment in the hearts of those who receive it.—M. Keefer, Lincoln, Nebr.

I received "Our Saturday Night" in good condition, I am charmed with it.—R. B. Bibb, Weyers Cave, Va.

"The Saturday Night" to hand. I read about the third part of it. I am well pleased with it. It is put together so unique for every day life, that I think it should be in every family.—D. H. Baker, Hanover, Pa.

"Our Saturday Night" came to hand in good condition, and to say the least we are well pleased with it. It is certainly a fine book.—J. Teeter, North Bend, Nebr.

I desire to express my heartfelt thanks for the book "Our Saturday Night." I am finding it intensely interesting. It is a book with which one will not be through right once reading. I know I shall often turn to its interesting pages. Brother Moore surely struck the right chord when he gave us his work of years.—Flora E. Teague, Lordsburg, Cal.

As I have known the author of this book for many years, and have been familiar with his editorial achievements from the incipient stage to the present proportions of the press accomplishments, I feel to stand with as many in harmonious sentiment who have spoken commendingly of "Our Saturday Night" as an impetus to the circulation of the Gospel Messenger. Both are worthy of a far reaching distribution. The book is lending attraction to many homes, its simplicity in style, adaptation to the spiritual culture of parents and children, and in moving the soul to the higher life are marked features of this valuable tribute to our Fraternity. It is highly appreciated in my own home, and in my evangelistic tours far and near the same appreciation obtains. I find places in home and rural territory where the Gospel Messenger has been a forerunner to conversion and church unity. And the rare chance of procuring this noble book as an adjunct will broaden the curriculum of both.—George D. Zollers, South Bend, Ind.

I have finished reading "Our Saturday Night," and find it very interesting and helpful. I was made to think, how interesting an autobiography would be, if Bro. Moore could find time to write one. With his plain, vivid way of describing things, and his experience in different places and at interesting times, coupled with his ennobling Christian character, his autobiography would be of very great value to our people. I am glad "Our Saturday Night" is winning such a large circulation and is so well liked.—Ida Helm, Ashland, Ohio.

AROUND THE WORLD

The Preacher Who Defended Pugilism.

At Sharon, Pa., there recently gathered a motley crowd to witness the battle between two pugilists. In assembly there was a preacher who, after calling the people to order, delivered a sermon on the "noble art of pugilism, which so well prepares people for self-defense." At the close of the sermon there was a wild cheering of the preacher, who evidently knew how to please the people. The sermon was intended as "an uplift of the ring." It turned out to be a degradation of the ministry and the holy cause the speaker should have defended. "In the latter days," says Paul, "some shall depart from the faith."

How a Church Was Built in China.

We are told that in a village near Ho-tsin, Shansi, China, the village head official is a Christian. He is a man of rare resources, also, and when there was a universal request, recently, for a church in which the people of the village might assemble, he readily obtained the consent of all the citizens to tear down the two heathen temples, no longer needed. The two structures afforded ample material to build a most excellent church. We have here a most forcible illustration of the fact that not only the people were turned from the error of the way, but that the old idol temples themselves were "converted" also, by being reconstituted into a House for the Lord's honor and glory. It might be well if every believer in the homeland could give proof of as radical a change for the better as was evidenced by the heathen temples in far-off China.

Medical Missions.

Recently 205 doctors in the diocese of Oxford, England, looked into the merits of medical missions, and after a thorough investigation signed an appeal embodying the following claims: "(1) The example and authority of Christ. (2) The teaching of the Bible in the miracles of healing and their results. (3) The relief of suffering through medical missions in regions where ignorance and quackery prevail. (4) The need of lady physicians for the secluded women of the East. (5) The need of medical service to the missionaries themselves. (6) The history of medical missions is the best justification of the work." Beyond all doubt there is an agency of great power in medical missions, for much has been done by them in the alleviation of bodily ailments. The hospital and dispensary often prove well-nigh irresistible means of grace, for they are readily appreciated, and speak eloquently in behalf of Christianity.

Why Neglect Your Own Services?

One of our exchanges laments the fact that the members of a certain denomination, when visiting cities or towns, neglect their own church, and spend Sunday as they would not dream of doing at home. And we have heard it whispered that even members of the Church of the Brethren are not guiltless of the same indiscretion. No wonder that many, who thus neglect the sanctuary, become frivolous and careless, actually having lost more in strength of soul than they gained in mind and body by the recreation sought. Why not seek out those of "like precious faith," and give them the benefit of our presence,—the encouragement they need in the struggle amid city environments? There is an opportunity for sober thought along this line. May we not hope that all our city missions will be encouraged in every way by those who happen to be within reach of their various services?

No Real Gain in War.

In proof of the fact that no war,—no matter how fortunately it terminated for the victor,—was ever anything but a detriment, an interesting statement is made by Norman Angell, who has made the question a study, and is prepared to talk authoritatively. He states that at the close of the Franco-Prussian war a vast indemnity was paid by France to her conquerors, and naturally one should expect the greater prosperity in the country enriched by the millions of the defeated nation. The history of the respective countries, up to the present, tells the real outcome. France, the vanquished, is better off, financially, than Germany, the victor. In spite of the stupendous war indemnity paid, the French people are, as a whole, more prosperous, more comfortable, more economically secure than the Germans. Even the most ardent supporters of war admit that most international difficulties could in the end, be settled more adequately and satisfactorily by means of arbitration. God's Word,—coming down to us through the centuries since Christ first proclaimed the evangel of peace,—pronounces Heaven's choicest blessings upon the peacemakers, "for they shall be called the sons of God."

More Liberty for Moslem Women.

Mohammedan leaders, in seeking to place their religion fully abreast of the age, are confronted by the fact that more liberty must be given to their women than is warranted by the strict interpretation of the Koran. The task of these apologists, therefore, is no light one, for the precepts as well as the example of the great prophet, in this respect, are most abominable. According to Mohammed a husband had but to say three times to his wife, "I divorce thee," and it was done. Then, too, these various arbitrary restrictions,—burdensome in the extreme,—will not be countenanced by Mohammedan women much longer, in this age of enlightenment. Polygamy, as a matter of course, must also be relegated to the oblivion that enshrouds the abnormal practices of past ages. Mohammedan reformers will have the most difficult task ever undertaken to infuse a spirit of broad humanitarianism, justice and equity into the doctrines of Islam. It is "of the earth,—earthy."

Jewish Progress in Palestine.

By the financial assistance and advice of the Rothschilds and other wealthy members of the Jewish race in Europe and in the United States, settlements have been founded wherever available land could be obtained in Palestine, so that, today, there are over thirty of these settlements west of the Jordan alone. The most important and largest of these colonies is that of Zichron, which alone comprises 2,400 acres and boasts of a population of some 1,100 souls. This and the various other colonies show the possibilities of the land when intelligent cultivation and management are made factors in the development of the country's agricultural resources. Thousands of vines and fig trees, olive trees, citron and orange trees have been planted, while vast numbers of young mulberry trees are now feeding silkworms. At one time every dweller of Judea considered himself highly favored to "sit under his own vine and fig tree." That blessing may now be enjoyed by many of the most humble dwellers in the "Land of Promise."

Waldensian Gains in Italy.

Those who have studied the history of the Waldensians, remember how, in past ages, the hand of persecution rested heavily upon them, and how their entire career, from the very beginning, has been a succession of struggles and bitter experiences. Special attention is being aroused, at present, by the vigorous missionary efforts of the Waldensians, and the notable gains they have made from the ranks of the Catholic church. Already fourteen Romanist priests have joined the Waldensians, and sixteen more are under instruction. With only sixteen parishes in the valleys of Piedmont, where the Waldensians are strongest, they have established two hundred mission stations throughout Italy, each of these with scores of adherents who formerly were Catholics. We are assured that the missionary zeal of the Waldensians has done much to preserve the greatly persecuted body from total extinction. Should not their blessed experience, even under adverse circumstances, be a lesson to us as a church, to press on with greater diligence in the great work of gospel missions?

How The Solved the Problem.

Much as we may wish that the Bible might be read in the public schools of our country, the fact remains that in multiplied thousands of schools it is ruled out, to the great loss of moral power that might be imparted to the rising generation. Some of our neighbors, on the opposite side of the globe, are far in advance of us on this question. The people of Queensland, by referendum vote, have decided to introduce the Bible in their entire school system, following the example of New South Wales, Tasmania, and Western Australia,—pioneer States in this good work. Their system provides for (1) "Selected Bible Lessons," unbiased by sectarian dogmas; (2) exemption of the child from such teaching, if especially insisted upon by its parents. It has been the experience of these countries, just referred to, that no difficulties whatever have attended the adoption of this system, and that many parents, of whom the most radical opposition was expected, are glad to avail themselves of its evident benefits. It is passing strange that a similar system has not been introduced more generally in this country,—especially since the few experimental ventures have proved so successful.

The Luxury of the Age.

With some degree of justification a nation's importation of luxuries during any given period is regarded as a fair index of its prosperity. Applying this test to 1910 we notice that, in spite of the high cost of living, this country spent more than ever before on things not conducive to either health or comfort. Our importations of precious stones alone amounted to $48,000,000, while laces, art works, furs, feathers, orchids, wines, tobaccos, jewelry, perfumery, etc., swelled the total of imported luxuries to almost $300,000,000. Deploring this tendency to undue display and luxury, on the part of the favored few, comparatively speaking, a prominent eastern journal says, "The best days of ancient empires did not come when wealth was concentrated, and when there was a great display of luxury; and that is not now the best sign of prosperous conditions present or to come." In the light of God's Word it is well to remember, also, the responsibility of stewardship and what the Lord expects of us as a Christian nation.

The Syrian Church of South India.

A writer in the India Sunday-school Journal gives some particulars concerning the remnant of the "Syrian Church," still to be found in South India. This body of believers claims to have been founded by the Apostle Thomas, and certainly is of great antiquity. During its long-extended existence it has been partially assisted by the Nestorian Churches of Western Asia, but otherwise has received little help from the outside world. The tenacity with which these people have held their own, in spite of persecution and surrounding foes, is one of the wonderful stories of Christian history. For two hundred years the "Syrian church" was under control of Rome, but never gave up the struggle, and in 1653 shook off the detested yoke of the Pope. Their church at Kozhancherry is said to be eight hundred years old. It is interesting to note that long before Xavier, Ziegenbalg and Schwartz began their missionary labors in India, this building was being used for the worship of God. With an awakening to more aggressive methods, the Syrian church may yet become an important addition to the missionary forces of India.

Why Not Do More?

It is well, at times, to profit by the experience and wisdom of others. Notwithstanding the fact that the Jews are widely scattered over the face of the earth, they are exceptionally well protected by means of their literature, and it is largely due to this fact that they have preserved their integrity, as a people, under even the most adverse circumstances. We merely allude to this peculiarity of the Jews to call attention to a fact that probably has escaped the notice of many of our people. As a church our Brethren are favored with publishing facilities often enjoyed by a religious body of equal membership. While doubtless much might be gained in the upbuilding of our own interests by a more judicious use of the facilities at our command, the fact remains that we have barely touched the outer circle of the great possibilities that might be reached. Our literature, including a wise use of tracts, could be made a factor of far-reaching significance. As a missionary the Gospel Messenger has proved its worth, but why should it not be used more extensively? "Whatsoever they hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."

The Power of God's Word.

Several weeks ago we referred to the commendable work of Bible distribution by Chicago Bands, so successfully accomplished by the "Gideon" associates, of traveling men. Just what the thousands of Bibles will be able to accomplish in their silent mission to the guests, may never be known to mortal man, but much will doubtless be revealed on the last and great day of accounts. There have been shown, however, some very gratifying results,—"enough," as one of the "Gideons" remarked, "to justify the entire expense of Bible distribution." In one case a young lady, out of work and discouraged, entered her room in one of the smaller hotels. She was fighting the battle that many a young woman under similar circumstances must expect to fight. Papers and magazines on her table had no attraction, just then, but, somehow, the "Gideon" Bible attracted her, and still more so Psalm 70, which caught her eye on opening the Sacred Volume. She read it again and again, and, somehow, a restful feeling came over her. With new courage she entered into the struggles of life and came out "more than conqueror, through him that loved her." In truth she could say, "Thou art my help and my deliverer,"—the message of the beautiful psalm she had made her own.

Paul's Teaching Concerning the Christian Ministry.

BY JOHN W. WAYLAND.

In this paper no special distinctions between different grades or kinds of Christian ministers are emphasized, though most of the scriptures referred to apply particularly to bishops and deacons. It is fair to conclude that in general the same teachings may be applied to all specially chosen ministers, whether apostles, bishops, deacons, or others.

In the first place let us observe that Paul commends the desire that one may have to be a minister,—specifically, a bishop. See 1 Tim. 3: 1. Men are sometimes suspicious or distrustful of the young man who expresses a desire to serve the church in ministerial office. Paul does not seem to encourage such an attitude. To be sure, he would have us be careful about the sort of men that are put in such offices. His whole teaching indicates that; yet he does not give us warrant for looking askance at the man or woman who really wants to preach or do other church work, and lets it be known. We like to hear people say, "I want to join the church: I want to be a Christian." Should we not be as much pleased to hear one say, now and then, "I want to preach the Gospel: I want to carry out the Great Commission. I want to feed Christ's lambs and sheep"? Are we less anxious than Paul to have this work done? Or is it that we have less confidence in human nature?

We submit that the desire and aspiration of the individual, no less than his capacities and qualifications, ought to be considered; yet let us remember, always, that whatever men may do or say or think, the minister of the Gospel must receive a Divine appointment also, or be Divinely approved. In what way this Divine sanction is given may be difficult to state in so many words; but when a Godly man, with adequate ability and training, is chosen by his brethren and set apart according to scriptural precedents to preach, and does preach God's Word in a Christ-like spirit, manifesting, as far as possible, the Christ-life in Christ-words and Christ-deeds, we may rest assured that the Divine approval will not be withheld.

What are some of the specific qualifications that the preacher and pastor should possess, according to St. Paul?

He must be blameless, of good report (1 Tim. 3: 2, 7; Titus 1: 6, 7). We might say, he must have a good name. He must also be vigilant and sober (1 Tim. 3: 2; Titus 1: 8). We may say, he must be awake, watchful, temperate—of good behavior. He must be sound in speech, just, patient, and peaceable (Titus 2: 8; 1: 8; 1: 7; 3: 2; 1 Tim. 3: 3). From these same scriptures we learn—and reason teaches the same—that he must not be greedy of filthy lucre: he must not seek illgotten gain. We understand this to mean that he must not go into the Christian ministry for the money that may be in it, or for all the material gain he may be able to get out of it. A greedy man's place is among the swine, not among the saints—preacher or no preacher.

Two other important qualifications of the Christian preacher and pastor remain yet to be mentioned: He must be apt to teach and proved by experience (1 Tim. 3: 2, 6; 2 Tim. 2: 24). By disregarding the first of these things many men have been made to teach before they had themselves ever become students; and by misregarding the second we have often waited until a man was old before we gave him leave to work in the church. "Apt to teach" means what it says. It means that the preacher and pastor must have fitness for the most important tasks God ever gave man to do. It means not only that he must understand God's Word; it means also that he must be able to make other people understand and appreciate that Word. Natural endowment, study, practice, experience: all these things, expended by Divinely-guided and tempered wisdom, are necessary in order to make one in the fullest and best sense "apt to teach." If men are required to give proof of skill in teaching before they are sent forth upon their own responsibility—remember the twelve—there will be little danger of putting inexperienced men, "novices," into pastorates and pulpits. Remember the twelve again. They were not novices, though all of them were probably young men; but they had been taught, and they had been taught to teach. All this time they were being proved in other respects.

What does Paul say of the home life of the preacher and bishop? The preacher and pastor?

He must not be a polygamist. So I understand 1 Tim. 3: 2 and Titus 1: 6. He must be a good manager of his own household (1 Tim. 3: 4, 5; Titus 1: 6). This likely means that he is not only to be a good manager of his business affairs, but a good father and counsellor, as well as a successful instructor and guide of his family, if he have a family. He is to be hospitable, and must keep good company. "A lover of good men" will not seek the society of questionable or dangerous companions (1 Tim. 3: 2; Titus 1: 8).

What are the minister's duties?

First, faithfulness to the Word (Titus 1: 9). Faithfulness to the Word includes the preaching of it, even if it be not favorably received. "Preach the word" (2 Tim. 4: 2). Preaching the Word is preaching Christ. The minister of God must preach Christ (1 Cor. 1: 23; 2: 2; etc). In fact, this should be put down as the first and foremost duty of the minister of the Gospel. Faithfulness to the Word includes this. It also includes devotion to the Word, giving oneself wholly to it; continuing in it (1 Tim. 4: 15, 16).

Second, study of the Word (2 Tim. 2: 15). In point of time studying comes first; but the preaching of Christ is so transcendent in importance that we speak of it first. The minister, the preacher, must not only study; he must study to some purpose and effect: the highest purpose and the highest effect. He must study so as to win God's approval, as he teaches God's Word. It is always an exacting task when a teacher finds the author of a textbook present. The preacher of the Gospel always has the author of his textbook present. He must follow the text, and avoid side issues—avoid vain and frivolous questions (1 Tim. 1: 4; 2 Tim. 2: 16; etc).

Third, Godly living. He must live according to the Word that he studies and preaches. He must set a good example, thus enforcing and illustrating the good lessons, showing himself a pattern of good works (Titus 2: 7).

These are not all the particular duties of the preacher and pastor that Paul enumerates; but these ought to be enough to put us to thinking and studying. Moreover, all the rest can be grouped under one of these three heads: (1) Faithfulness to the Word; (2) Study of the Word; (3) Godly living.

Has the minister of the Gospel any rights? It would so appear from the teaching of St. Paul. What rights? First, respect and esteem (1 Thess. 5: 12, 13; 1 Tim. 5: 17). Second, support. Now we become interested. What kind of support? At least three kinds: Financial, moral, spiritual. For the first see 1 Cor. 9: 2-15; Gal. 6: 6; etc.; for the second sort, that is, moral support, see, in addition to the passages just indicated, Rom. 10: 15; for exhortations to spiritual contributions see 1 Thess. 5: 25 and 2 Thess. 3: 1, wherein Paul beseeches the prayers of the brethren. Thus we have all: means of supporting our bodies, means of supporting our minds, means of soul support and soul growth.

And, finally, according to St. Paul—we are studying now only what he teaches—the preacher and pastor has some rewards. The rights just enumerated are what man owes the minister; the rewards are what God gives him; and they are joy (Acts 20: 24; Philpp 1: 18; 2: 2; 4: 1), salvation (Philpp. 1: 19), and the crown of life (2 Tim. 4: 8). But these are also the rewards of all the faithful.

Low-Hanging Clouds.

BY JAMES M. NEFF.

This is a remarkable country. It is now the middle of January, and we have not, so far this winter, had a temperature lower than thirty-one degrees, Fahrenheit. A gentle shower is falling as I write, and while the ground does not become warmed deep enough to push tree growth, at this season of the year, our grain, the grass of our pastures, and our gardens are growing beautifully. This growing vegetation, the almost hilarious singing of the domestic fowl, and the cheerful chirping of the birds, make it seem somewhat like summer. And yet, while living in the midst of such surroundings, we are in easy view of an abundance of snow and ice on the mountains above us.

But we seldom see the snow falling in the mountains. While it is raining down here, it is often snowing up there, but our rain clouds hang so low that we can not, at the time, see what is going on very far above us. We remain in ignorance of the weather conditions in the higher altitudes until the rain ceases and the clouds lift. Then there is spread out before our astonished eyes such a display of frost and snow as we had not been prepared to expect. Living here, at this distance from them, I can tell you some things about conditions in the mountains, but the only way to know all about mountain conditions is to live in the mountains. As long as there is room for low-hanging clouds to intervene, there is no doubtless a number of beautiful things we never get to see.

And so with our spiritual lives. Those of us who are most familiar with conditions in the high, spiritual altitudes are those who live there. There are quite too many professing Christians living down among the foothills, and many a low-hanging cloud shuts off their view from what is going on farther up. I take it as a bad sign if you are often ignorant of the special work the church has in hand and are left to express your surprise and criticism after it is all done. If you live in as close touch with the church as you should, you will know at the time what is going on within her borders, and will yourself have to do with it. Beware of the danger of getting too far down in the church or the spiritual life. The nine disciples who were left below, certainly never enjoyed as vivid an appreciation of what occurred on the Mount of Transfiguration as did James, Peter and John. If you would be sure not to deprive yourself of a view of some things of rarest beauty by the intervening clouds, stay on top of the mountain.

Philosophy Versus Revelation.

BY J. W. LEAR.

"Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of the world and not after Christ" (Col. 2: 8).

Travelers on our public thoroughfares often find themselves facing the following well-worded danger signal, or some other of like import: "Look Out for the Cars"! Many travelers have saved their lives by heeding, and others have come to grief by being too reckless.

Some time ago, on entering a railway station, my eyes fell upon a card with the following inscription: "Beware of Confidence Men." I supposed that there was danger of loss, and I steered clear of strangers.

There was a class of men during Christ's first advent who loved the praise of men for personal and selfish advantage, and would "strain out a gnat and swallow a camel" to get it, of whom Jesus said, "Beware."

The above scripture reminds us that in the time of the venerable apostle there were men working a system called "philosophy and vain deceit" that would rob one of the riches of the inheritance in Christ Jesus.

The word "spoil" in the text means, to hold up, and dispossess as a highwayman, or much as a confidence man swindles one out of his money or valuables by deceit.

In the foregoing scripture philosophy and empty deceit are contrasted with the fullness of the Godhead dwelling in Christ. The latter enriches and ennobles, while the former famishes and degrades.

Paul would scarcely have thought of making a statement of this kind when he was learning in the school of Gamaliel, or persecuting and delivering unto death those who were rich in faith.

Educators of our own day would not be willing to classify philosophy with empty deceit, for there is no branch of learning more highly esteemed among them. To be a philosopher of giant proportion is a goal much coveted by worldly men, and there is, without exception, methinks, nothing that robs one of the fullness and sweetness of the religion of Jesus Christ so quickly and surely as does philosophy.

That there is a sense in which this branch of learning might be counted harmless, almost goes without question. In that case, however, it would scarcely be born, or, to say the most, still in swaddling clothes, as viewed by the leaders of the science.

To the philosopher nothing is real. Everything is an absolute blank, unless it has been worked out by the human mind. Absolutely nothing is accepted that is not the fruit of human reason. It is a monster attempt of Satan to make real his statement in the garden, "Ye shall be as God." The product of human reason, therefore, becomes authority on all questions.

Accordingly we discover that philosophy is the exercise of human reason, to devise some explanation for the existence of the universe and all that therein is, including the great cause that the book, termed the Bible, pleases to call God.

In this search for a reason for all this, nothing is to be taken as evidence that can not be deduced by the human mind. O conceited man! No wonder Paul says, "Beware"!

By this we are to understand that philosophy is opposed to Divine Revelation. While believing in a god he must be the kind that may be wrought out by human devices and reasoning. He must not say anything about himself, or what he has accomplished or that would, if believed, put an end to their philosophy.

We can easily see that we would have, by this system, as many different gods as we have minds differing in reasoning power, plus the store of material information coming into their possession.

Philosophy is not looking for the truth. That is what makes it a confidence game. The truth would rob her of her birthright. She is on the hunt for a solution, outside of the truth, for the existence of eternal and material beings and things.

That God created the heavens and the earth, and all the host of them, according to the Bible story, can not be accepted. It is childish to think of believing that the full-grown existed before the seed. The Divine Mind does know. If he does, he ought not divulge the information. Human reason alone, properly exercised, is capable of producing a solution that is worthy of acceptation. And, of course, since Revelation says "creation," philosophy must, if she wants to stand, take the opposite course and say "evolution."

It would be impossible for God to make man, intelligent man. He, as first cause, might happen to produce protoplasm, and through a long series of years, coming through oysters, fishworms, fish, snakes, cats, and monkeys, man would finally be evolved. It would take a thousand miracles to produce man by the enigmatical system of evolution to where it would require one by the sensible system of creation. And still philosophy does not admit of any such thing as a miracle. Oh inflated man!

Paul says, "Philosophy is according to the traditions of men, according to the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ." Philosophy repudiates Christ. He put his stamp of approval upon the Scriptures, therefore philosophy breaks with him.

The Incarnation, miraculous works, substitutionary death, atonement for sin, and resurrection of Jesus are spurious.

Christ came to reveal the Father. This must not be accepted because philosophy alone can do this. He came to take away sin. This, too, must be refused, for human reason knows no other system of moral or spiritual excellence outside of human merit.

He came to destroy the works of the devil in the world and in us. This is, of course, utterly unreliable, for human reason knows of no such being as a personal devil, only the absence of good.

Evolution in philosophy, when applied to theology, is called Higher Criticism, and both are headed toward pantheism in some form, and pantheism has its source in the devil.

Knowing that this science is a very popular branch of instruction, in one form or another, in many of the Colleges and Universities, in both literary and theological departments, and realizing how stealthy and pernicious it is, in its method of spoliation, is it not time to sound a note of warning?

When our boys and girls come back from college, doubting the inspiration and authenticity of the Scriptures, it may be too late to raise our hands in holy horror. It is better to lock the barn before the horse is stolen.

Some think the question of dress the greatest question the church has been called to solve. It, no doubt, is a question of gravity. However I think it infinitesimally small alongside of the one under consideration.

There is a time coming, in my judgment, and not far distant, maybe, when we will be more desirous to find out the status of the newly-elected minister on the question of faith in the inspiration of the Bible than on some of the other questions which are live issues now. It might not be amiss to begin to find out, even now, whether a minister has been spoiled by this system of learning.

When we send our young people to schools that teach that there is a possible theory of God and the universe, more compatible with scientific research than the Bible story, the foundation to receive the benefits of Christian religion is gone. They may hang on for awhile because of earlier impulses and training, but they will be spoiled of that rich inheritance—faith in the living God, the saving Christ, and the sanctifying Spirit.

Methods of Advertising.

BY A. G. CROSSWHITE.

A CERTAIN lithographic and advertising company, after trying various methods of attracting attention to their patrons' business, finally conceived the idea of using a wooden panel displaying a good-sized oval mirror. It is needless to say that such a unique calendar as that was in great demand.

No picture or statuette has ever been devised that could attract so much attention as the vanishing form of an old acquaintance. An oft-repeated look into the mirror smacks pretty strongly of selfishness, yet, when we consider that a very large percentage of our personality consists of this undefinable element, it is easy to understand the tactfulness of the advertiser.

It is said that the best advertisement for a shop is its output and whatever will not stand on its own merits is not worthy of serious consideration or a single afterthought.

Every man's actions are weighed in the scales of public opinion and try as he may, he is worth no more than these scales indicate.

A certain brother was expelled from the church for insubordination, several years ago, and, to attract sympathy to himself, had the following words painted on his barn in large letters: "I AM A MAN OF SORROWS AND ACQUAINTED WITH GRIEF," so that the passerby might see the similarity of his persecution to the prophetic Christ-life. This was simply the external, the internal you could have seen by an exchange of thought or, rather, by becoming an interested listener.

This is a case in which opportunity is sought to vindicate self, while a second class of advertisers are busy taking care of the "other fellow." Many people stand high in social circles until they get into court to establish character, or into politics. Then the people get busy, and there is no cessation in the work of the character shredder until the obituary is read. Josh Billings once said, "If a man goes to law for damages he is sure to get them."

Where the bump of combativeness is more prominent than caution or reverence, a lot of free advertising results and is worth about as much to the one who says as the one who does. A self-appointed guardian can expect no pay but satisfaction (?). It matters little to an engine whether its power is expended through the whistle or through the piston. It's work that counts.

The man who objects to sounding the trumpet about giving to the cause of missions or the support of the church, does more harm by fussing about what others do than he imagines, for in doing so he unwittingly advertises the stinginess of the few, and watches the willing ones pull the load.

But let us turn the picture and look at the other side, for there is a positive as well as a negative side, thank God. It requires a contact to make a spark, and a transmitter to set the machine in motion. The Holy Spirit is the dynamo, and Christians the live wires, with perfect connection, and the work is moving. We should rejoice that we have a record of the faithful in both profane and ecclesiastical history. Where is there a report of work done by our Sisters' Aid Societies equaling that of which Dorcas was the leader? Where is there a missionary society that can duplicate the offerings of the early church at Jerusalem or Antioch? Where are there such self-sacrificing missionaries as Peter, Paul, Silas or Barnabas? Where are there such prayer meetings as at Jerusalem, and where are there such outpourings of the Holy Spirit as the Pentecostal revival and the work in Samaria?

The traveling man who sells hardware often wears a small padlock or other design to call attention to his business, the secret order man wears an emblematic design, and so on ad infinitum, and why should not the Christian wear a visible sign that he is in the King's business? Shall any worldly organization or business enterprise do better advertising or expend more money in pushing their work than the church of Jesus Christ? No, a thousand times no. Our cause is just and worthy of life-blood energy, and under this banner we will conquer.

The Trouble at Kerak, Moab.

[The following letter was written from Ramallah, near Jerusalem, under date of Dec. 29, by Miss Rosa Lee, to her uncle, Dr. J. W. Morgan, of Owosso, Mich., and published in one of the local dailies. It relates to some of the experiences of the Miller party and makes interesting reading.]

On the last day of November, which fell on Wednesday, a party of American tourists, in charge of an Englishman, who had been a missionary to the Bedouins, left this city (Ramallah) for Petra, a noted place in Arabia. They went by Jericho, crossed the Jordan, and by Saturday were at Kerak, a beautiful town east of the Jordan. Some years ago the Englishman was a missionary at this place, and he took his people to the missionary house, which was then empty. The people had tents and food with them but they decided it was best to put up at the house over Sunday.

On Sunday the guide called upon the Governor, when he found him drinking coffee with two of the head sheiks of the town, but he did not know at that time these same sheiks had deliberately planned the death of the Governor and his soldiers, with whom they were then taking coffee. Near the missionary house was the home of one of the Turkish officers.

On Monday morning the American party was ready to leave the town when one of the men in charge of the animals brought word that the Bedouins were storming the town. The Englishman went to the house of the Turkish officer and from his upper window could see the Bedouins coming from all directions. They soon heard the firing of guns and the screams of women.

Most of the Government buildings were on high ground and on the other side of the town from the mission house, so they could see these people storming the place. The Bedouins got control of the Seria (court house) where the trials are heard and the records kept. They killed all of the soldiers on guard and then burned the records. They next got control of the municipal hospital, killed all of the sick soldiers they found in the beds and then stole everything they could carry away.

The Bedouins had orders to kill all soldiers, all foreign shopkeepers with the exception of those from one town with whom they were friendly, but not to harm Christian missionaries.

The trouble arose this way: East of the Jordan and all Central Arabia is inhabited by the Bedouins,—roving bands with no fixed homes,—who herd their small flock of sheep and goats for a living among the hills and the valleys, and who are a law unto themselves. The Turkish Government is trying to bring them into subjection. They ordered the soldiers to enroll these Bedouin tribes and enlist their young men as soldiers and then compel the tribes to pay taxes.

Kerak is the center of a large tribal district. The sheiks of Kerak told the officers in charge that the people could pull up their tents and run away so easy that it would be best to divide the country into districts and have it all entered at one time. They said, "Divide it into sixteen districts, and send forty soldiers and two field cannon to each district." They wanted to get their army of Kerak out into the open country, and they did. They gave orders to their tribes to kill all of the soldiers on Sunday night, right after supper. So far as we know, every one of the sixteen bands of forty each were murdered Dec. 4, 1910, except one band which lost only its officers. Then the plan was to go to Kerak on Monday morning and wait until the soldiers in the Castle came out on the parade ground, at 9:30 A. M., and then attack them; but they were so elated over the success of the country, they could not wait until 9:30, but stormed the town before, and tried to take the Castle. In this they failed. But they killed, plundered and burned all day long and into the night. They came to the mission house and insured the Englishman that he was their friend and that they would not hurt him or his party.

They were very anxious to get the Turkish officer who was in the house next to the mission. The soldiers on the top of the officer's house kept guard, but at last the house was forced and the officer fled. The Bedouins then came to Mr. Forder and at the point of the gun demanded that he deliver the officer. The Englishman said: "I am not hiding the officer." They said, "You are; for our men, lying on the top of the house, saw him enter the mission compound." The Englishman took an oath that he knew nothing of the officer. The chief of the Bedouins said: "I know Abou Jurius; he will not tell a lie. When my father was afflicted he took care of him, and in three days he came back to see him. Abou Jurius will not tell a lie." They lowered their guns and went away.

The officer, however, did go into the mission compound and the men with the animals for the American party hid the officer in a dry well. The English guide, very fortunately, did not know this. The American party were at the mercy of the Bedouins. Had it not been that the missionaries had been kind to the Bedouins in the past, the Americans might have all been killed.

The Americans left Kerak on Tuesday morning, but were soon captured by a tribe of thieves, and lost all of the money they had with them—something like $100—their tents, steamer rugs, etc. A friendly tribe took them by night around the south end of the Dead Sea toward the camp of another friendly tribe, south of Hebron. All of their money was gone, but they were able to purchase a mule from the tribe by agreeing to pay for him when they got back to Jerusalem. They were seventeen hours in their saddles before they reached safety.

The party was mostly made up of members of the Church of the Brethren. There was one young lady, a graduate of Wellesley, niece of Professor Brown, now in charge of the Archæological School at Jerusalem. They were a party of ten, four of whom were women. They reached Hebron Dec. 12. The American consul, located at Jerusalem, did all he could to relieve their wants.

Self-Praise or Boasting.

BY I. W. TAYLOR.

THIS disposition of mind, in the sight of God, is an evil,—a sin that will not go unpunished, "for whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased" (Luke 14:11). "Most men will proclaim every one his own goodness" (Prov. 20:6).

It is apparent, to the observing mind, that the truth of Solomon's saying is still one of the characteristics of men and women. I remember, some years ago, while attending a Ministerial Meeting in Eastern Pennsylvania, of hearing a brother say that "it is a difficult thing for a preacher to speak half an hour and keep self in the sepulchre." It was quite apparent that ten minutes' time was sufficiently long to bring himself very conspicuously out of the sepulchre.

Solomon says in Prov. 27:2, "Let another man praise thee, not thine own mouth." Few, indeed, there are, who would not rather be praised than criticised. True charity in the heart will remove the spirit of self-praise,—at least to the extent that "it vaunteth not itself; is not puffed up" (1 Cor. 13:4).

Paul, in Rom. 1:30, classes the boaster with those who are guilty of dark sins, and in 2 Tim. 3:2, in speaking of the conditions that are to prevail in the last days, the boaster is named among the list of sinners.

The individual who is inclined to self-praise, and practices the same in conversation and otherwise, does not realize how little the efforts are appreciated and how far such an one is lowered in the estimation of the soberminded.

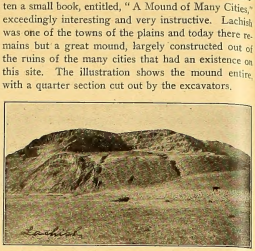
I recently met a well-dressed stranger who seemed delighted in giving me his pedigree, his former and present calling in life. The same person, a few weeks later, seemed much humiliated when I met him among a gang of workmen, very much beneath the dignity of his own description of himself.

The personality of a writer is often noticed in his writing. Without any sign of self-praise, I could name a number of the writers to the GOSPEL MESSENGER, whose articles, without seeing the writer's signature, may be readily identified.

When a boy I heard an aged minister say, "A Christian has very little use for the words 'I' and 'my.' The haughty-minded Pharaoh used these terms seven times in Ex. 15:9. Haman, in Esther 5:11, 12, speaks by the spirit of self-praise and boasting. In 2 Sam. 17:44, 45 we have a beautiful contrast in the expressions of Goliath and David.

There may be heard, at times, a phase of self-praise in the apologies made by ministers in their efforts to preach. Perhaps it is a bad cold, or a lack of time for preparation, or not expecting to preach, etc. All this is only an indirect way of saying, "You should hear me once when everything is favorable!"

Brethren, in writing about our church work, it makes the best impression when we steer clear of self-praise. Jesus and the apostles were too busy to devote any time to self-praise.



It has been said, The more deeply ministers of the Gospel feel their own insufficiency and their dependence on God for success, the more likely it is that their preaching will be attended by the power of the Holy Ghost, and thus rendered effectual to the salvation of men. In 2 Cor. 12:9 we read: "And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me."

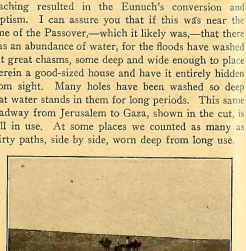
Going Up to Jerusalem.

BY W. R. MILLER.



JOSHUA 10:31, 32 reads: "And Joshua passed from Libnah, and all Israel with him, unto Lachish, and encamped against it, and fought against it: and Jehovah delivered Lachish into the hand of Israel; and he took it on the second day, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and all the souls that were therein, according to all that he had done to Libnah." Lachish was next in order to be visited. This old mound has furnished unmistakable evidence of the truth of the Bible. In Joshua's time it was a Canaanitish town, and, as stated above, utterly destroyed by Joshua's army. In recent excavations there were discovered some six cities, each built upon the ruins of its predecessor, and, first of all, the remains of the Canaanitish town which Joshua captured and destroyed. According to Jer. 34:7 Lachish was one of the last cities taken from the Jews by Nebuchadnezzar. The mound was recently excavated under the supervision of Dr. Bliss, who has written a small book, entitled, "A Mound of Many Cities," exceedingly interesting and very instructive. Lachish was one of the towns of the plains and today there remains but a great mound, largely constructed out of the ruins of the many cities that had an existence on this site. The illustration shows the mound entire, with a quarter section cut out by the excavators.

Eglon is about two hours from Lachish, situated on a high, rolling plain. Not even a mound tells the place of the old city, but some little excavation shows the foundation stone of the walls and houses. You will remember that the King of Eglon, according to Joshua 10:5, was one of the five kings that made war against Gibeon, at which time Joshua came to the assistance of the Gibeonites in that forced march from Gilgal. After the battle these five kings hid themselves in a cave at Makkedah, and finally were slain and buried in the same cave in which they sought refuge.

We pass by without visiting Gath, for the site of Gath is in question. Yebna, a large village, is by some identified as being the ancient Philistine town of Gath, but this is entirely problematical. On the way to Gaza, —probably some such a way as the picture shows,—was the road that Philip was instructed, by the Spirit, to seek (Acts 8:26). There he found the Eunuch engaged in the study of the Bible, and Philip's timely teaching resulted in the Eunuch's conversion and baptism. I can assure you that if this was near the time of the Passover,—which it likely was,—that there was an abundance of water, for the floods have washed out great chasms, some deep and wide enough to place therein a good-sized house and have it entirely hidden from sight. Many holes have been washed so deep that water stands in them for long periods. This same roadway from Jerusalem to Gaza, shown in the cut, is still in use. At some places we counted as many as thirty paths, side by side, worn deep from long use.

Gaza was the southernmost of the five allied Philistine cities. This place our party reached on Saturday evening, and here our tents were set up for two nights and a day, for we determined not to use the Lord's Day for traveling.

Our Friday night camping place was in a village about one and a half hours from Gaza. Early on Saturday morning we went to Gaza, sought out our camping ground, and then were off on the road that leads to Egypt,—probably on the very roadway on which Joseph was taken, and over which, also, Jesus traveled when his parents were fleeing from the wrath of Herod into Egypt. Following this way for some hours, we left the Egyptian road, and our course took us eastward to Gerar, known today as the ruins of "Umm Jerar." It is altogether probable, that this is the Gerar of Abraham's time, where he sojourned, as recorded in Gen. 20: 1.

If was at this place that King Abimelech found trouble because of Abraham's deception. Here, also, Isaac practiced the same form of deception as that of his father, found in Gen. 20: 2 and Gen. 26: 6, 7. I sometimes wonder whether Jacob was altogether responsible for his deception, when he may have inherited from both his father and his grandfather this very element in his nature.

We found no ruins above ground at Gerar, but several holes have been dug, some seven feet deep, showing large stones lying in the former walls of the old city. It is said of Isaac, in Gen. 26: 12, 13, "Then Isaac sowed in the land, and received in the same year an hundredfold: and the man waxed great, and went forward, and grew until he became very great." Nowhere, in all Palestine, has the soil the appearance of richness as have these southwest plains, there being miles and miles of level wheat land, waiting only for systematic cultivation, and the "early and latter rains," again to produce an "hundredfold in the same year." One of the most difficult things to do was fully to realize that we were standing on the ground where this interesting Bible history was made relative to Abraham, Isaac, and Abimelech.

As nearly straight from Gerar as we could go, took us up to Gaza in a little less than two hours. The Gaza of today has a population of about 35,000, and is some three miles from the sea. The old caravan traffic with Egypt is now almost extinct, but the place is a great market for the Bedouins from the plains, for dates, figs, olives, lentils, and provisions. Much barley is also marketed here. As everywhere apparent, an unusually large proportion of the inhabitants suffer from ophthalmia,—that plague of the eyes in the East,—and nowhere worse than here in Palestine. Tradition points out the southwest side of the town, as the place from whence Samson carried off the Gates of the Philistine city. Jer. 47: 5 says, "Baldness is come upon Gaza." As one looks out toward the sea, and notices the sand dunes piled high and bare over the probable sight of ancient Gaza, it is not hard to understand the prophet, when he says that "baldness is come upon Gaza."

From Gaza to Ashkelon is three and a half hours north. Instead of taking the regular route, we went over to the seashore, and rode all the way up on the wave-washed, sandy beach. In many places our horses stepped fetlock deep in the mounds of shells thrown upon the beach by the waves. This was a delightful ride in the early morning, greatly enjoyed by every one, an experience not soon to be forgotten.

Some Jottings on Sunday-school Lessons.

BY I. J. ROSENBERGER.

Our present Sunday-school lessons ought to be studied with profit; for fine New Testament teachings and principles may be drawn from Old Testament occurrences. I wish to emphasize some of these as we pass along.

In lesson one we have Rehoboam consulting with the old men. Not getting counsel that suited him, he sought counsel that did suit him. How he suffered for his folly! Dear reader, have you not seen Rehoboam's follies often repeated?

1. Men who seek counsel and reject it, because it does not suit them, are much inclined like Rehoboam, —to seek counsel of those who are in sympathy with them, who will encourage their course. Such are set, and refuse to be diverted from their course. Such really want encouragement and not counsel; hence, they are insincere.

2. The young king sought counsel of the young men. It was the kingdom being run by the young men. At times you see that when children grow up, the parents change materially; they do and view things so differently. This is due to the fact that these parents, like Rehoboam, are being led by the counsel of the young—their children. I love to see the young people active in church work. I have always encouraged placing the young on duty in the Sabbath-school, Christian Workers' Meeting, etc., but there are instances in which the young, by their activity and number, have gained control of the church. Concessions to the wishes of the young may be conceded at times for policy. These, each and all, are but repetitions of Rehoboam's folly, and will be followed by corresponding decline and loss. The old adage, "Old men for counsel, and young men for war," is of great practical utility.

Jeroboam started out with God's favor, but strange were the schemes he adopted to hold his crowd.

1. He built an altar at Bethel and another at Dan. A great deal of the religion of today, of the same sort, is done for convenience,—to hold the crowd.

2. "He made of the lowest of the people priests of the high places; whosoever would, he consecrated him." Whenever a church will consecrate "whosoever would" to become priests,—ministers,—these are Jeroboam's tactics, and will be followed with fatal results. Paul says: "Not a novice; . . . let these also first be proved."

An Unusual Occurrence.

BY JOHN R. SNYDER.

The judges of our courts are so often charged with acts that are not to their credit, and claims are so frequently made that they act without considering the effect on society and the home, that it is really refreshing to chronicle something to the contrary.

Some time since, in this county, the judge of the court of common pleas was called to hear a suit for divorce, filed by the wife, who made the usual charges of cruelty, neglect and failure to provide. The young people were prominent and the case attracted more than the ordinary attention. The husband prepared to contest the claim for divorce, and contended that he was perfectly willing to make a home for his wife and child,—the latter about three years of age. The case came to trial and a number of witnesses were called and gave their testimony. It was soon evident that the animus back of the whole matter was very trivial and that the real trouble was the interference on the part of certain relatives of the young couple, and that, if left to themselves, they would probably live together happily.

When the evidence was all in, the judge called the parties before him and said that he would not grant the decree of divorce asked for. He then proceeded to give all concerned some good advice and some fatherly counsel, and advised the husband and wife to bury their differences, move away from their relatives, and start their home life anew. He further ordered the custody of the child into the care of the father until after the following Sunday.

On Saturday afternoon he told him he should go to their house and build a fire in the stoves, and make everything cheerful, and await to welcome his wife, as the judge felt sure that she would come, at least for their child's sake. He was to remain at the home until Monday morning, and if she did not then put in her appearance, the child was to be returned to its mother and he was to report to the court the failure of his effort.

We are glad to relate that the plan worked. Both husband and wife attended the same church. On Sunday morning both were at the services, but there appeared to be no breaking up of the ice on the part of the wife. The pastor was aware of the strained condition and used his best efforts to bring about a reconciliation. It seemed, when the congregation was dismissed, that it would be a failure. The mother of the wife had made some charges that had proved unfounded. The pastor at the close of the service, asked her to go to the husband and ask his forgiveness. She retorted that she "would die first." The minister called the departing congregation to order again and said there was a matter for special prayer and that all should get to their knees and invoke Divine aid that this home should not be broken up. It was something out of the ordinary, but the minister said that a series of revival meetings, which they were just beginning, could not succeed unless this matter was settled, and settled right. There was a season of intense and earnest prayer, and in the midst of it all the mother arose from her place, went over to her son-in-law, and in tears invoked his forgiveness, which was freely given. There was a season of rejoicing, all around, and when they left the church, husband and wife left together, went to their own home and there is every indication that there will be no recurrence of the trouble.

But if the judge had not taken the interest in the case that he did, and imposed upon them the conditions that he did, it is possible that another home would have been wrecked and worse than that, their souls lost forever. All honor to the judges who sit upon the benches of our courts.

The Church of God—Made Such in Christ.

BY CHAS. M. YEAROUT.

The foundation upon which this church rests is Christ. The prophet says: "Behold I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation" (Isa. 28: 16; 1 Peter 2: 6). Christ being the foundation upon which the church of God is built, becomes the foundation of all the hopes, aspirations, comforts, and happiness of the people of God.

Christ is the foundation of the covenant of GRACE, made with the church, including all the promises contained therein, and the source of salvation (2 Tim. 1: 9, 10). He is a sure foundation, in whom the church may trust with all confidence, one who will not fail nor deceive her. All other foundations are sinking sand, and will be swept away when the tidal waves of judgment strike them (Matt. 7: 21-27; Luke 6: 46-49).

The members of the Jewish church rejected this foundation,—Christ,—and were cast out, and made a hissing and byword in all nations. The Deist, Unitarian, Jews, Masons, Odd Fellows and all lodge worshipers, have rejected the foundation,—Christ,—upon whom the church of God securely rests. They are building upon a foundation of human make, which will be swept into everlasting ruin. "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 3: 11).

Christ is not only the foundation of the church of God, but he is the Head also. God "hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all" (Eph. 1: 22, 23, 5: 23; Col. 1: 18). Christless churches and lodges have no foundation in God's Divine plan of salvation upon which to stand, nor do they have a head in the spiritual realm to guide or direct them. They are like a ship without a pilot on the storm-tossed sea. They drift with the rushing current, and will be wrecked on the rocks and shoals of infidelity. Let no man beguile you of your reward, by holding up Christless religions and Christless prayers, vainly puffed up by their fleshly minds, "and not holding the HEAD,"—Christ,—"from which all the body"—the church—"by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God" (Col. 2: 19; Eph. 4: 14-16).

Jesus Christ is the chief corner stone, in whom this spiritual building is joined, and fitly framed together, for a habitation of God through the Spirit (Eph. 2: 18-22). Christ being the chief corner stone, all the building is joined and held together in him, and outside of him there is no salvation.

"Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name, which is above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father" (Philpp. 2: 9-11).

Christ having purchased us with his own precious blood,—dying for a lost and ruined world,—we belong to him, and should render due reverence and service to him (1 Cor. 6: 19, 20). His conditions are reasonable and just. Through suffering and death "he be-

THE ROUND TABLE

The Sin Chapter of Joshua.

BY EZRA FLORY.

THE seventh chapter of Joshua is full of instruction for us. Joshua, as well as Israel, had to learn that their strength was really in Jehovah. There had been a long training with Moses. In Joshua's commission not a word is said about bow, sword, or spear. In their obedience to Jehovah lay Israel's strength and hope. Then, again, Joshua was humbled to depend entirely upon Jehovah before Jericho fell (Joshua 5: 13, 14). Turning to chapter seven we learn:

1. The lesson of possible defeat after such a victory (V. 1). What a lesson!

2. Then, in the next verse, lies another lesson, They trusted in what they saw.

3. There is the lesson of half-hearted service. When God planned to take Ai, he took not two or three thousand, but all Israel (8: 1). No work God plans is small. We need not only an undivided church but an undivided heart (Matt. 6: 24). Following this there is an agonizing prayer (7: 6-9). God answers it, "Get thee up; wherefore art thou fallen upon thy face?"

4. Fearing the results of sin more than the SIN itself (7: 8, 9) is another tremendous lesson here. It is still, "What will the people say?" with too many souls.

5. Notice, The unity of God's people. God said, "Israel hath sinned," not, "Achan hath sinned." Cf. Acts 5: 1-11.

6. We should submit to God's judgment about sin. (7: 11).

7. God will not countenance sin (7: 12, 13).

One sin was enough for God to remove the parents from the garden. How terrible sin is!

8. We should hold no parley with discovered sins (7: 15).

9. There is a tracing-out of sin (7: 14).

10. God never reveals a sin he does not require us to remove.

11. In this way the Valley of Achor (troubling) became a door of hope (Hos. 2: 15).

A Queer Baptism.

BY JOHN ZUCK.

MY grandfather's name (on my mother's side) was Jacob Martin. He was a man of reputable character, —a deacon in the Church of the Brethren, in good standing, hence I vouch for the correctness of the story, that he told me, of a queer baptism that took place when he was a young man, he being an eye witness to the same. It occurred on Licking Creek in what is known as the Corner, Franklin Co., Pa., within the bounds of my boyhood travels, being less than one-half mile from the old La Fayette schoolhouse where I first went to school. I shall omit the names of the principals.

There was a young man who had worked among our Brethren, and had gotten the idea that to be baptized into Christ, was to go down into the water, and come up out of the water, like Jesus did. This man attended a revival in the neighborhood, and, being under conviction, desired baptism by immersion. The minister and others did all they could to enlighten(?) him otherwise but he still insisted on going down into the water, and gave them to understand that if they did not so receive him, he would unite with the Brethren.

So the minister concluded to do something, to retain the convert, though jeopardizing his right to the claims of a minister of the Gospel. The place selected was the boys' swimming hole,—a deep place in the creek, but narrow. The time and place were announced, and a large crowd was on hand to witness the unusual mode of baptism. The young man was stationed on the bank, at the edge of the water, in a standing position. When the minister had finished saying, "I baptize you in the name of the Father," etc., he pushed the applicant face forward into the water, leaving him to get out as best he could by the help of others, to avert drowning. (It might have resulted with the young man as it did with the swine of Gadara.)

This was such an outrage that it became the gossip of the whole country round about. It made lasting impressions on all who witnessed the thrilling scene,—a queer baptism indeed!

Are You a Producer?

BY GEO. F. CHEMBERLEN.

How old are you? Yes, I have that. But, honestly, what have you done? A member of our "evangelical," "orthodox," "apostolic" church for fifteen years and never found any fault with the church. A good record of church membership, indeed. But read Matt. 25 on the "Closing Scenes of Human Affairs," and see what it says about such high-sounding titles, and the rewards for such stilted claims. It rather appears as though the Lord was addressing the "doers" who knew, or, at least, made no monument of claims.

Did you ever hear the little story about the Yankee "globe trotter" in Rome? Well, listen! You know they were getting some rather high-priced information as to what Christianity(?) is by visiting the Vatican. After viewing numerous apostolic relics they were led out to a poultry coop. The polite and exceedingly cordial guide seemed to turn to an effluent body of didacticity as he came in the presence of the very ordinary-looking old Dominiques. The little, expectant group of travelers gathered closer.

"These," said the guide, radiant with pleasure, "are the direct descendants, by Apostolic succession, of the cock that crew on the dismal night of the betrayal."

The American gave vent to a long, loud whistle with the rising inflection. The over-modest Vatican attendant paid no attention to the irreverent tone, but proceeded to expatiate on the marvelous pedigree of the homely birds. The little group listened in silence, and then, suddenly, the Yankee called out: "But do they lay?"

Now, really, that's the only pertinent point about the famous Vatican fowls. Are they producers? And, sir, it is the chief point about your life, and you will do well to mark that point.

Solos.

BY JAS. A. SELL.

THERE is something beautiful and inspiring about a solo, when properly sung. Many of us are not singers and may be poor judges as to knowing when it is properly done. However, when appearances seem to show that the singer is on exhibition, one is apt to forget the song and remember the singer. When the tremolo is put on, and the words are smothered in the croaking that is somewhat of a cross between the owl and the crow, the effect is rather to destroy than to promote devotion.

While the song should spring from the deep fountains of the heart, the words should be uttered plainly, to give the full meaning of the poem, so that the "spirit and the understanding" may be combined.

"Then read from the treasured volume,
The poem of thy choice,
And lend to the rhyme of the poet,
The beauty of thy voice.

"And the night shall be filled with gladness
And the cares that infest the day,
Shall fold their tents like the Arabs,
And as silently steal away."

Temperance.

BY PETER BROWER.

THERE has never been a time when the good people of the fair State of Iowa have put forth such heroic efforts to rid themselves of the great evil of intemperance as at this time. The people in the cities as well as in the country have become aroused to their opportunities as never before. One place after the other is driving the saloon out of business, and I feel assured that the day is not far distant when liquor will not be allowed to enter her borders. The railroads have recently taken some strenuous measures along that line. The day seems to be dawning when the manufacture of intoxicants will be entirely prohibited. May God speed the day, and to this end let us labor and pray! The Temperance Committee of the District expects to put forth greater efforts to arouse our own people in the future than they have ever done before.

Always Be on Time.

BY EDGAR M. HOFFER.

THOSE who are always prompt, are very likely to make a success in life. We should always be on time. When we go to services, or any other place, we should be on time.

Did you ever miss a train? Why was it? You were not on time. In this world there are many things behind time. God is always on time, the sun is on time, but man is often late,—kept back by the vanities of this transitory life. Those that serve the enemy till they die, will be forever too late. Let us improve our opportunities! They may never return. If we make a promise, let us be on time. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God," and then the cares of this world will not hinder us.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' TOPIC

My Whole Life for Christ.

Psa. 119: 9-11; Col. 3: 23-25.

For Sunday Evening, February 19, 1911.

Prayer-motto: "Create in me a clean heart, O God" (Psa. 51: 10).

I. I will seek the Lord—(1) Early (Psa. 63: 1; Prov. 8: 17). (2) In my youth (Eccles. 12: 1; Psa. 71: 5). (3) Whole-heartedly (Psa. 119: 2; Col. 3: 23).

II. The promises are—(1) I shall find him (Jer. 29: 13; Matt. 7: 8). (2) I shall live (Psa. 22: 26). (3) The Lord is good to the seeker (Psa. 9: 10).

III. I will serve God—(1) By keeping his commandments (John 14: 15; 15: 10, 14; 1 John 5: 3; Jude 20, 21) (2) By glorifying him (Matt. 5: 16; John 15: 8; 1 Peter 2: 9).

IV. The blessedness resulting—(1) "It shall be well with thee" (Psa. 119: 1; 128: 1; John 14: 21, 23; Num. 14: 24). (2) Thou shalt "see good days" (Psa. 34: 12; 1 Peter 3: 10). (3) And shalt keep young (Joshua 14: 7-11).

Note.—(1) He who lives thus, lives not only happiest, but longest, and keeps youngest. (2) The above Bible ingredients wisely compounded, and held in solution by love to God and love to man, may be said to constitute the Elixir of perpetual youth.

PRAYER MEETING

Winning Power Through Service.

Eph. 6: 10-18.

For Week Beginning February 19, 1911.

1. We Must Make the Service Our Vocation.—The strength of our lives must be devoted to God's service; his business must be our life's sole end. Paul said, "This one thing I do." Too many of us are weak, empty-handed because we have failed to make God's service our vocation. Entire consecration is the secret of missionary accomplishment today (Philpp. 3: 13, 14).

2. Our Service Must Depend Wholly on God's Power.—Moses could not care for his sheep by his own wisdom, but he could not liberate a nation of slaves except through God's wisdom. Paul says again and again, "I come to you not in my own strength, nor my own wisdom," etc. God's chief trouble with us is not to "fill" us but to "empty" us. Self must move out before power can move in. The spirit of power works only through surrendered men (James 4: 10; 1 Peter 5: 6).

3. We Must Work According to God's Plans.—It is always safe to follow God's directions in every particular. No non-essentials with him. He who dooms Jericho will supply the method of taking it. "Not my will, but thy will," is the secret of power in service. It is ours to execute: it is God's to direct (Philpp. 2: 12, 13).

4. God's Glory the Sole Object of Service.—If we seek power for its own sake, or to gain the world's applause, it will not be given us. The work done must enhance God's glory,—not ours. All great men of the Bible were little in their own sight, but mighty for the Lord. This spirit must characterize our service (Eph. 1: 17, 18).

5. We Must Await God's Own Time.—Jesus lived thirty years for only three years of service. Carey worked seven years in India before he had a single convert. Patient waiting will finally bring the power. God does not build and fit up a man of power in a moment. Long and weary months or years of preparation will finally usher in the glad day when God's power comes upon us in its fullness (James 5: 7, 8).

HOME AND FAMILY

Dedicatory Hymn.

8s and 7s.

BY JAS. A. SELL.

Hear us, O thou great Jehovah,
While we lift our hearts in praise;
Make this place thy habitation,
Now and through the coming days.
May the burdened soul find solace
In the service of this place;
And enjoy the heavenly comfort
Given by the Savior's grace.

Chorus.

May thy spirit, Lord, be with us,
As we gather here to pray;
Fill our hearts with joy and gladness;
Lead us in the perfect way.

May this house become a refuge
To the weary, troubled soul;
As we strive, through pain and conflict,
For the Christian's happy goal.
While we linger at this altar,
Craving blessings from above;
Send thy Spirit down to comfort us;
Fill us with the Savior's love.

Strength for Today.

BY WEALTHY A. BURKHOLDER.

"Strength for today is all that we need,
As there never will be a tomorrow;
For tomorrow will prove but another today,
With its measure of joy and sorrow."

LIFE is real and every day we learn practical lessons. Each day presents new trials, difficulties and disappointments and often our stock of patience may get low. One of life's greatest battles is the one we have with ourselves. To curb our evil natures, to tame the "unruly member" so that we may always speak the right word and at the right place and time, and constantly be in the proper frame of mind, is a great and important work, and those who bring themselves into subjection achieve a glorious victory. But such victories are not common, because we are all very human.

But difficulties, trials and obstacles, which intercept our pathway, are for our good, and if received in the proper spirit, may help to develop us into stronger and better men and women. The stormy blasts of winter are needed to make the oak of the forest strong, just as well as the summer sunshine. So with us, as travelers on the highway of life. We need the tempests of adversity to try our strength, and thus enable us more successfully to meet the conflicts of life. We should not expect to get along without having our pathway sometimes obstructed, and then is the time we most need a quiet disposition, a submissive mind and a forgiving heart.

"For into each life some rain must fall,
Some days must be dark and dreary."

But let us ever remember that we have only the assignment of one day at our disposal,—we only live one day at a time. We should not concern ourselves about the trials of tomorrow. Only today and the duties of today claim our attention.

"Do your duty today, but borrow
No labors nor cares from the morrow."

But do we do as we know to do? No, too many of us peer into tomorrow and worry over what may happen when the light of another day comes. Could we always have grace and patience enough to accept what comes, gratefully, and make the best of it, we would be very much happier and no doubt would exert a better influence on those around and about us. Let us not forget that we have

"Only one day to bear the strain
Of living, and to battle with the pain.

"Only one day to satisfy
With food and covering as the hours slip by.

"Only one day, tomorrow's care
Tomorrow, if it come, itself shall bear.

"Only one day; then waste it not
In futile plannings where the Lord is not.

"Only one day God gives to me
At once. Oh, may I use it faithfully!

"Only one day to serve my King,
And to his feet some wandering soul to bring.

"Only one day to fight the fight
Of faith, and vindicate my Savior's might.

"Only one day, maybe, to sing
On earth the praises of my Savior King.

"Earth's day dies down, Lord, lift my eyes
Unto the glories of the heavenlies.

"One perfect day awaits me there,
Nightless and shadowless, beyond compare."

The Home.

BY MARY V. HARSHBARGER.

THE true home is the foundation upon which all other institutions are built. The church was not established until after the homes existed. The Sunday-school is no stronger than are the homes. The missionaries are the outgrowth of the homes. The weekly prayer meeting shows the pulse of the homes surrounding it. The spirituality of the church shows the beat of the home pulse.

Society, also, speaks for or against the home, in tones that sound far and wide.'

O ye parents, look well to your homes, for the influence of your homes will be here long after you are gone!

And, you, dear young woman, look well and pray earnestly, in regard to this most important step. Don't hurry, but wait and study the nature of that man to whom you expect to give your life.

And, young man, beware lest you fail of making sure of the very foundation upon which your home is to be built.

Homemaking is the most far-reaching in its effects of any point in life, for your companion will make you stronger or be the means of shipwreck in many cases. The Lord will lead you, if you ask him, "for he that asketh wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him" (James 1:5).

☞All business and communications intended for the paper should be addressed to the BRETHREN PUBLISHING HOUSE, ELGIN, ILL., and not to any individual connected with it.

DURING the recent Bible Institute at Huntingdon, Pa., twelve were added to the church.

THE revival at Sterling, Ill., conducted by Bro. S. Z. Smith, closed with twelve baptized and two reclaimed.

WE are requested to announce the change of Bro. Henry Brubaker's address from Fruita, Colo., to Newberg, Oregon.

OUR correspondent reports a good revival at Mount Garfield, Colo., with eleven applicants for membership, and one returning to the fold.

A SERIES of meetings was held in the Back Creek church, Ebenezer house, Pa., by Bro. M. R. Flohr, and eight persons made the good confession.

IN a revival at Altoona, Pa., some splendid work was done by Bro. Cassady, who had the pleasure of seeing forty-nine received into the church by confession and baptism.

DURING his Bible Institute work at Nezperce, Idaho, Bro. E. M. Studebaker is holding some revival services. When last heard from there were sixteen applicants for membership.

BRO. P. B. FITZWATER, of Manchester College, Ind., accompanied by Bro. Spitzer, paid the House a special visit last Monday. We were glad for their short call at the MESSENGER sanctum.

PLANS have been practically perfected for a churchhouse in Woodland church, Ill. Enough has been subscribed for the purpose, and it is hoped to have the building completed by July 4.

BRO. C. W. GUTHRIE, of 3301 Adams St., Chicago, Ill., has been a very sick man, and is not yet well, but he certainly appreciates the many letters and cards that have come to cheer him during his affliction.

BRO. J. W. KITSON, of Fort Wayne, Ind., wishes to announce that the District Meeting of Northern Indiana, for 1911, will be held in the Springfield congregation. The date of the meeting will be given later.

ON the mission page we are publishing three communications showing how Christmas was spent in India. It will be observed that Bro. Stover in his report says that thirty-two natives were baptized on Christmas Day.

WE understand that the General Mission Board would like to send one man to Denmark, one to Sweden, one to France, at least five to India, and two to China. The Board has the money; the trouble is to find the men.

BRO. GEO. MISHLER, Secretary of the State Mission Board of Nebraska requests us to say that all the churches in Nebraska should read 2 Cor. 9. It might be well for all of our members to read this part of Paul's second letter to the church at Corinth. It might also be well for the ministers in Nebraska, as well as in other States, to do some preaching about what is set forth in the chapter.

THE District Meeting of Eastern Pennsylvania will be held in the White Oak church, but the date and other particulars will be given later. So says Bro. N. B. Fahnestock, Manheim, Pa., corresponding secretary.

AT the District Meeting of Western Colorado and Utah Bro. D. M. Click was chosen a member of the Standing Committee. Later he resigned in favor of the alternate, Bro. J. E. Bryant, who, therefore, will represent his District at the St. Joseph Conference.

BRO. J. M. BLOUGH writes us from Johnstown, Pa., saying that from Feb. 11 to 20 he will be engaged in Bible study, India talks and preaching at the Rummel church, in the Shady Creek congregation, Pa. This congregation, he says, supports Sister Blough on the mission field.

BRO. J. W. TROSTLE, of Pasadena, Cal., an aged elder, passed away Jan. 24 at the age of seventy-one years. He preached the Gospel more than forty-two years, was highly esteemed because of his strong faith in his Master, and his high regard for the church and her interests.

BRO. H. C. EARLY did some evangelistic work in Bridgewater, Va., that was very much appreciated, but on account of sickness he had to close his labors and return home sooner than he had arranged to return. There were, however, a number of accessions, and possibly there may be others.

BRO. H. B. BRUMBAUGH, our Corresponding Editor, of Huntingdon, Pa., is spending the remainder of the winter in Florida, and until April 1 may be addressed at St. Petersburg. We notice that an unusual number of our people have gone South this winter, and we are sûre that they will enjoy the genial climate.

BRO. S. G. NICKEY, of Cerro Gordo, Ill., did a good work in his series of meetings at Wayne, Miss. Eleven were received into the church by confession and baptism, and three await the rite. This shows that successful mission work may be done among the southern people, if we go at it in the right way.

BRO. H. I. BUECHLEY, clerk of the late District Meeting of the First District of Arkansas, writes us that since Bro. C. H. Steerman, a duly-elected member of the Standing Committee, is to move out of the State soon, Bro. W. T. Price, alternate, will represent the District on the Standing Committee at the St. Joseph Conference.

THE Annual Meeting queries, so far as received, will be found on page 92, this issue. If there are other papers, they have not yet reached our desk. It may not be amiss to state that when a query is published in the MESSENGER it then becomes an open question, and so remains until the Annual Meeting, in some manner, disposes of it.

As is known to most of our readers, Bro. Edward Frantz, President of McPherson College, on account of overwork, has found it necessary to seek rest from mental labor for a season or two. He writes us from Lordsburg, Cal., saying that picking oranges is his occupation these days; and, judging from the cheerful tone of his letter, we would conclude that he is enjoying the work. But he writes solely for the purpose of telling us how he is delighted with "Our Saturday Night," and adds that "there is nothing blue about the book, except the cover."

The United Presbyterian enters its protest against fortifying the Panama Canal and, among other things, says that we are living in a new age, the age of armies and navies having passed, and this, too, in spite of the fact that Great Britain, Germany and the United States are building a number of warships. We would like to see all other religious papers join in the protest, and do what they can to arouse public sentiment against further war preparations. The Independent is decidedly opposed to any further military expenses, maintaining that there are more sensible ways of settling the differences that may exist between civilized nations than by an appeal to arms.

WE learn from the Committee of Arrangements that the program for the Annual Meeting, to be held at St. Joseph, Mo., beginning June 6, is practically completed, and in due time will appear in the MESSENGER. One auditorium is to be kept solely for evangelistic work, which is to be made a very prominent feature, in connection with the Conference. Bible Institute work will also figure quite prominently. The people of St. Joseph are becoming much interested in the meeting, and some of them have already offered to receive our people into their homes and care for them.

WRITING from Vyara, India, Bro. A. W. Ross says: "We are feeling the need very much of reinforcements, and hope the church will not only arise to present need, but to the grand opportunity we have, here in India, to more than double our membership. As I survey the field, it looks to me as one big opportunity challenging the church to unity of belief and practice, and a mighty effort for soul-saving. What a wonderful apologetic and apostolic Christianity if we could arise in the full strength of our initial powers, and in the unlimited powers given by the Holy Spirit for the salvation of the unsaved around us and in other lands! The best way to make other souls believe we have the truth of the Gospel, as taught by Christ and the apostles, is for us to show it in our lives and in our activity for the salvation of others."

A COPY of the new and greatly improved Inglenook Cook Book has just come to our desk. The work contains over 400 pages, is neatly bound in oil cloth, and contains probably more reliable and well-tested recipes for cooking than may be found in any other cook book in the country. It is adapted to the needs of the common people, and this is what makes it especially valuable. We understand that all the recipes have been tested and can therefore be depended upon. The book is worth $1 to any family, and yet is not for sale. It is given as a premium with the Inglenook. Any one sending $1 to the Brethren Publishing House will receive the Inglenook one year and the cook book free. The price of the Inglenook is $1 a year, and with the book thrown in, it means $2 worth of reading for $1. The proposition should be the means of greatly enlarging the Inglenook subscription list.

WHILE it is shown in the church statistics for 1910, just published, that the Catholics claim a membership of 12,000,000, it is also shown that their gains for the year have been astonishingly small,—110,100. This means less than 10,000 to the million, or less than 1,000 to each 100,000. That is, for each 100,000 Catholics there has been a gain of less than 1,000. With nearly everything against them, save the Gospel itself, the Brethren do better than this. Then it will be well to bear in mind that the Catholic immigration from the Old World is considerably more than the increase stated. Considering these facts, it would appear that for 1910 there has been a decided falling off in the native Catholic membership of the United States. Cut out the foreign immigration, and the decrease will be alarming in the eyes of the devout Catholic. We are saying this to correct certain reports about the growing strength of the Catholic church in this country.

A CORRESPONDENT wishes to know whether Elijah, the prophet, and John the Baptist were the same person. We answer by saying that they were not. The former lived nine hundred years before the time of Christ, while the latter was contemporary with Christ, being only six months older. In the New Testament we have a full account of the birth and death of John the Baptist, while in the Old Testament we have the interesting history of the Tishbite and his final translation. While in some general respects there may be a resemblance between the two remarkable men, still their separate histories give no just occasion whatever for regarding them as the same individual. John, coming in the spirit and power of Elijah, and in a sense representing the faithfulness and fearlessness of the prophet, has led some to regard the two as the same character. Each one was a man of God, and each one filled his mission with credit and honor to the cause he represented.

Mack Memorial Services.

NEXT week we are to publish a Mack Memorial issue of the MESSENGER, containing a number of well-prepared articles regarding the life, history and teachings of Alexander Mack, the first minister in the Brethren church. He was born in Germany in 1679, was baptized and helped to organize the Brethren church in 1708, emigrated with a large number of his people to America in 1729, settling at Germantown, Pa., and died Feb. 19, 1735, at the age of fifty-six years. Since Feb. 19 falls on Sunday this year, a memorial service on that day will be quite appropriate. Those wishing to deliver an address regarding the devout man, the church he organized, and the work he did, will find much valuable information in Brumbaugh's "History of the Brethren," Falkenstein's "History of the German Baptist Brethren Church," and Flory's "Literary Activity of the Brethren in the Eighteenth Century." After the arrival of the Memorial Issue of the MESSENGER, they can avail themselves of the helpful information it will contain. An address on Eld. Mack and his work, as a reformer, would prove interesting and helpful to any of our congregations. Ministers who do not find themselves prepared for a full address, will do well to give at least a short talk about this earnest, Christian man, who, in the midst of the lifeless formalism of his generation, helped to organize a church containing all the gospel ordinances, with the New Testament as its only rule of faith and practice. Not for some years will Feb. 19 fall on the Lord's Day again, and it may not be wise in our ministers to let this splendid opportunity go by without saying something about the minister of wealth, good social standing, and fine intellectual ability, who sacrificed everything in the interest of the reform work that he took up when but twenty-nine years old. It is a marvel, indeed, that a man of his years could give to the world a system of religious truths that should stand the test so well.

Church Growth and Development.

IT is proper for a church to grow and develop, and, governed by the law of growth, it is but natural that it should change in methods more or less. The members composing a congregation come and go, and one generation takes the place of another. The overseer of the flock, however efficient, must be replaced by another, and the faithful helpers of the past generation must retire and let the helpers of another generation assume their responsibilities. The old meetinghouse must, in time, be torn down and a more convenient structure must take its place. These and other changes may be accounted for by the law of growth and development. The conditions of the past may have been as satisfactory to the former generation as the conditions of today are to the present generation. The interior of some of our commodious meetinghouses might have seemed out of place to the members who worshiped in the houses that they erected a generation ago. Even the present appearance of what we consider a desirable congregation might not have appealed to our good and faithful fathers and mothers. And while we must expect such changes, from one generation to another, it is very unfortunate when changes become so marked that the older members can no more feel at home with the worshipers of a congregation that is making strides too rapidly to be considered reasonable.

We are just in receipt of a letter, indicating that this is the feeling of some members who hold their membership in a congregation where the change in methods would appear to be abnormal. The feelings of these substantial members have probably not been taken into account. The congregation has a disposition to grow in directions that do not appeal to saints who worshiped with the tried and true forty or fifty years ago. To them it looks much like growing worldward, but they can not change the conditions. Possibly they may not be as aggressive themselves as the good of the cause demands, while, on the other hand, the new generation is just a bit unreasonable. The happy medium would bring better results. But we pity members who, after years of faithful service, can not feel at home in the congregations that they have worked so hard to build up. Then, on the other hand, we pity the aggressive part of the membership that chafes under the retarding methods of those who fail to recognize the law of proper growth and true development, for churches as well as for other institutions. How fortunate it would be if these two classes could be induced to plan for each other's mutual good and edification! The older members should not be made to feel that those in charge of the Lord's work have no regard whatever for their wishes and spiritual comfort. They ought not to have the impression that the church is moving away from them so rapidly that they can hardly consider themselves at home any more. Where this condition prevails, there surely must be an absence of the Spirit of Christ, for Jesus never intended that the growth and development of his church should be along lines that would render the situation unpleasant to those who have grown old and feeble in his service. The body of Christ on earth should be made the refuge of the young, the stay of the strong, and the comfort of the aged, and when these conditions are lost sight of, it must be evident that there is a lack of the love and tender regard that should, at all times, characterize the people of God.

Where Is the Supply of Paper to Come From?

TO the making of books, magazines and papers there is no end, but there seems to be an end in sight to the material from which the paper for all these publications is manufactured. The forests of America are already denuded of trees that can be used for paper pulp, and the Canadian forests are furnishing a large per cent of the material used each year. When these sources of supply are exhausted, where will we get paper? The publications increase each year, and the paper supply decreases. We have two periodicals in the United States with a circulation of over three million copies,—more than the combined circulation of all the papers three quarters of a century ago.

In a recent article in the London Graphic, quoted in the American Review of Reviews, we have the interesting statement that an effort is being made to restock the swamps and low places along the Nile with papyrus,—the paper reed of the Bible,—to be used for the manufacture of paper, and that the attempt is proving successful beyond the most sanguine hopes of its promoters.

Are we to fall back on the papyrus for our supply of print paper? Seven hundred years before Christ, Israel's great prophet, Isaiah, declared "that the reeds and flags shall wither. The paper reeds by the brooks, by the mouth of the brooks . . . shall wither, be driven away, and be no more (Isa. 19:6, 7). Never was a prophecy more literally fulfilled. The papyrus plant—paper reed—upon which ancient Egypt depended entirely for her supply of paper, withered and was driven away, so that for many years not a single reed of this kind could be found in all the land of Egypt. Search as you might, from the second cataract to the mouth of the river, you would find that the "paper reeds by the brooks, by the mouth of the brooks," have withered, are driven away, and are no more. You will find them in abundance on the upper waters of the Jordan, on Lake Merom, but not a single stalk in all the land of Egypt.

As already indicated, Ancient Egypt depended entirely upon the paper reed for her supply of paper. Her ancient writings,—many of them preserved unto this day,—are written on papyrus. Not only did Egypt use the paper reed, but the then known world depended upon her for its supply of writing paper, and it became a great source of wealth to the Pharaohs. Gold flowed into their coffers, for they had a monopoly on the papyrus. But the greed of monopoly soon overreached itself. Substitutes were sought out, and paper was manufactured from other materials, and the paper business of Egypt collapsed. The papyrus withered, was destroyed, driven away, and was no more.

And now, after the lapse of many centuries, the paper reed is to be replanted in Egypt,—in fact has already been replanted,—and is being successfully used in the manufacture of modern print paper. The paper reed grows to the height of from ten to fourteen feet in a surprisingly short time, and yields a great abundance of raw material.

The Graphic says, "A plantation near Alexandria has been sown, reaped and the produce gathered under Mr. Norton's directions, and transmitted to a well-known English paper-mill, where it has been manufactured into paper of excellent quality, which has already been utilized in the printing press with every success. Both the raw material and the finished article have been tested and favorably reported upon by the leading paper-experts, and it is apparent that capital and enterprise are alone needed to develop the industry to enormous dimensions."

The possibilities of the culture of the paper reed are not to be confined to Egypt alone. In the swamp lands and everglades of our Southern States, south of the frost line, the paper reed would grow luxuriantly, and these great wastes could be turned into revenue-producing industries, far exceeding in value the mining of precious metals. The romance connected with this question may be realized when, some day, our readers may have the MESSENGER printed on paper made from the paper reed of Egypt, after the papyrus had withered and vanished from the land of the Pharaohs for more than a thousand years.

Our Ups and Downs.

WE say, our ups and downs, because they seem to be a common possession. They belong to us all. We all have them in our life's experience. Some may have more of them than others. Some get higher up and, correspondingly, lower down than others. But the paths of life are too rugged for any of us to pass over them without coming more or less in contact with the "highs" and the "lows."

Today some of us, like the apostle Paul, are caught up into the third heavens, and tomorrow are cast down into the depths of the slough of despond. If you were to ask: Why is this?—we might answer, "Because God has made us so," as too many seem to think,—and often say. But, in saying so, we fear we are giving God credit for doing things that are not at all in harmony with his creation.

Just why it is that we have so many of these ups and downs in life, might be very hard to explain,—indeed we shall not attempt a general explanation.

Some years ago, on our voyage homeward bound, the captain of the ship gave us a copy from his log book, of the daily sailing, showing the distance traveled, and also the direction. The zigzag markings on the map proved to be an interesting study. And, as we occasionally look at it, we are reminded of the ups and downs of our life's journey homeward. Whether upward or downward, each day we make so many knots forward, and where our landing shall be depends not on how God has made us, but on how we are using the possibilities which he has given us.

Our up-days and our down-days are largely of our own making. Much depends on our temperaments, dispositions, environments, and our trusting in the Lord. All of these are shaded and graded by the use of our will power. A consecrated will power will most wonderfully take care of, and hold in check, all the things that tend to upset our equilibrium and disturb our peace. We have men and women who are impulsive, impetuous and hot-tempered,—disposed to fly off the pivot at the least provocation. They are of the "hylo" class,—a turn to the right gives them a blaze of glory, while a turn to the left produces a low-down light. Still a little more to the left, and you have no light at all.

Such persons need more will power and the grace of God than do the less excitable and more even-tempered. We often speak in a commendatory way of the even-tempered, unexcitable folk, because, say we, they go on in the even tenor of their way—no loads and loud words, no hasty acts, and, as a result, get into few troubles with their neighbors and associates. They live, what is generally called, the easy and even life, so filled with the sweet Christ-life that, like the warm sunshine, they illuminate and bless all they touch.

This class of people experience few of the ups and downs of life. They commit their way to the Lord, and the things which come into their lives that otherwise would seem distressing and calamitous, they accept as being of the Lord and, therefore, for their spiritual and eternal good. They accept them as patients accept the bitter doses from their physicians. They are willing and often anxious to make present sacrifices that future good may come. We have seen this class of people more patient and happy under severe afflictions than are many under most favorable conditions.

Godliness, after all, is the great panacea for our ups and downs in life. It is the abiding faith and trust that it is our privilege to have in Jesus Christ, and it enables us to be as cheerful and happy in our downs in life as in our ups. Just as soon as we can feel, in the depth of our consciousness, that "all things do work together for good," so soon are we prepared to meet the trials and seeming adversities of life in a way and spirit that becometh God's children. We are glad to believe that there are many that can do this so far as to say: "Not my will but thine be done."

We know very well that it is harder for some to thus commit themselves into the Lord's hands and care. But there are none of us so impulsive and high-strung, in our natural makeup, but what we can, through a determined will and the grace of God, overcome all of these hindrances and learn to subdue our most determined passions into a ready and willing submission to Jesus Christ. It may take time and determined perseverance,—yes, we know that it does, through personal experience. We have been working at it for almost a lifetime, and it has been a hard fight. But we are glad to believe that we have met with some success, and, as we advance in years, there is no one thing that has given us so much sweet peace and Divine assurance. We have had our good share of fight born in us, and to fight against our quick, impulsive and fiery nature and disposition was no small affair. But we have succeeded far enough to feel sure that through Jesus Christ, who strengthens us, we can do all things. We know of no better way to begin this warfare than "to be slow to speak." We are sometimes told, "When angry, count ten before speaking." The better advice would be: "Never speak when angry or in a passion." We seldom say the right thing in the right way, if we do. Many of our downs come to us as a result of our speaking unadvisedly. If we would enjoy a satisfying, even and desirable life, first of all seek the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and then go forward toward the Christ life in thought, in action and in purpose, ever feeling that it is our meat and drink to do acceptable service for the Master. If we can live and work with this purpose in mind, there are no ups and downs that can come in our way to disturb our peace and our enjoyments, because we are sure that we always have about us that Divine care that will make our pathway safe, pleasant and satisfying.

Pushing New Converts to the Front.

We are asked to say whether it is wise to push a new convert right to the front and place him in charge of important work before he has time to become acquainted with the workings of the church, and our manner of doing things. Some congregations, and especially some leaders in church management, display a weakness along this line, to the detriment of the cause and to the spiritual injury of the new converts that are rushed into responsible positions. In the army no general would think of placing a newly-enlisted and untrained volunteer in command of an important position. If the new man should possess unusual attainments, the general might give special attention to his preparation, with a view of fitting him for a position of responsibility. This is also true of great business concerns. Untrained men are not rushed into important positions, but are given time to become acquainted with the line of work that they are to take up. Newborn babes in the kingdom ought to have a little time to think and to study the inward workings of the church before they are placed in charge of important departments in church work. This will be good for them as well as for the church, and avoid occasion for self-exaltation on the one hand, and jealousies on the other. Paul, in 1 Tim. 3: 6, says that a bishop, or elder, should not be a "novice, lest being lifted up with pride he fall into the condemnation of the devil." By novice is meant "one newly come to the faith," and what is said, in this particular, as applied to elders, may well apply to members filling all positions of great responsibility in the church. And while wisdom should be exercised in moving new converts to the front, those especially talented should not be held back until all their zeal for active work in the Lord's vineyard has disappeared. As early as advisable they should be given work and then gradually moved up to the positions for which nature and grace seem to have fitted them.

About Swindlers.

Bro. A. J. Bricker, of Baltimore, Md., says that a young man, who claims to be from Illinois, has been swindling some of the members in the East out of small sums of money. He claims that some dealings in Washington, D. C., did not "pan out" as planned, and for that reason he is borrowing money here and there among our people to help him on the way. It would serve no good purpose to give the name under which he passes, as we are requested to do, for it is an easy matter for a swindler to change his name to suit his convenience. Before our people see this notice the young man will probably be in some other part of the country, and dressed quite differently from the way he attired himself while in Baltimore and for that reason the description furnished might not help in identifying him. But we say, once for all, that if our patrons do not wish to be swindled they should quit giving money to strangers. If they are hungry, feed them, and if they need money, and you feel disposed to help them, let them remain in the neighborhood long enough to furnish satisfactory proof of their honesty and reliability. It may also be well to consult the chief of police about any stranger who comes into your community begging money. The police department may be looking for that very man, and may have his photograph and a description of him. We should not neglect the poor and the needy, the hungry and destitute, but when a well-dressed and well-informed stranger comes around begging for money, we may rest assured that there is something wrong.

The Triple Action in Baptism.

A writer in the Christian Standard affirms that among the Catholics sprinkling and pouring is in doubt, but not so with immersion. In support of his position he thus quotes from "Sincere Christian," page 294, saying that Bishop Hays' book is one of the greatest expositions of the Roman faith in these latter days:

"Q. 5.—How is the action performed?"

"A.—By pouring water on the person to be baptized, or dipping him into it; and it is the order and custom of the Catholic church to pour or dip three times, at the names of the three Divine persons, though the three times are not necessary for the validity of baptism."

It will be observed that the Papal Church pours or dips three times. While Pope Gregory, in the seventh century, sanctioned single immersion, it never became general with the Catholics. When performing immersion, they prefer the triple action, and when pouring, the invariable custom is to pour the water three times. There was a time, however, in the early history of the church, when trine immersion was the general mode. Regarding the change from trine to single immersion, we quote from Hinton's "History of Baptism," page 158. Hinton was a noted Baptist historian, and by the Western or Latin Church the Catholic body is meant. But we quote:

"The practice of trine immersion prevailed, in the West as well as in the East, till the fourth Council of Toledo, which, under the advice of Gregory the Great, in order to settle some disputes which had arisen, decreed that henceforth only one immersion should be used in baptism; and from that time the practice of only one immersion gradually became general throughout the Western or Latin Church."

Sickness and Revival Meetings.

Sickness is interfering with a number of revival meetings. Sometimes it is because of affliction in the preacher's family, but more frequently because of sickness in several families in the neighborhood where the services are held, and to the extent that people become interested in the afflicted families, to that extent will their attendance at church be hindered. It ought not to be thus, but every evangelist knows that these conditions exist. When some of the people in a community are sick, and a few are near death's door, should be the very best time to hold a revival. There is no better time to appeal to men and women regarding the salvation of their souls than when death is staring them in the face. If Satan should be the cause of sickness, we can well understand why there should be so many sick people in the community while a revival is going on. It is one way of keeping men and women out of the kingdom.

Coughing in Church.

The editor of the Baptist Commonwealth feels confident that coughing in church can be controlled. As proof of what he asserts he relates the following: "We remember once attending a large Congregational church in Glasgow, and hearing the great Dr. Shepherd preach. The church was crowded to the limit and the preacher was at his best. Every now and then waves of coughing would pass over the congregation, much to the annoyance of the speaker and listener. Suddenly, in the midst of a sentence of a striking suggestion, Dr. Shepherd stopped and said, kindly but positively: 'Let this coughing cease; it is unnecessary.' And it ceased! And no one left the house. It only required a little effort to control it, and when attention was directed to it the control took place. It is, perhaps, true that ninety per cent of the coughing is unnecessary."

PASADENA, CAL.

Today there was joy in the presence of the Pasadena church and the angels of God, when two penitent souls accepted the cleansing blood of Calvary. Friday evening, while passing through Los Angeles, they attended services in the Los Angeles church, where Bro. Wm. Lampin was preaching, and were led to heed the Spirit who had been striving with them for some time. They start early to follow the Savior, and, by the help of the Spirit, may they follow him all the way!

Bro. David Rowland, of Lanark, Ill., preached for us today. His sermon was very helpful and much appreciated.

The aged veteran of the cross, our dear Bro. Joseph Trostle, is very sick. He is "of good courage" and willing rather to be absent from the body and to be present with the Lord." Those who feel that soon we shall miss him here, and be lonely till we meet again, we submit to the Lord's will and thank him that there are those in whom "Christ is magnified, whether it be by life, or by death." Mary Nill.

CHRISTMAS AT VULI, INDIA.

"Christmas is coming and what shall we do?" This was the question that was being asked among the Christian people of Vuli, a few weeks before Christmas.

Usually we have a meal all together on this occasion, but this year each family chose to celebrate Christmas in their own home. This we could not discourage and so it was the way we all did. All did their best to have a pleasant time, and good things to eat were plentiful too, nor did they forget us, but shared with their sweetmeats until we had more than we could eat.

Bro. Pittenger's were here with us and we certainly did enjoy their visit. On Saturday evening we had a Christmas service in the bungalow, and we all enjoyed it, for we have so few English services here in India. On Sunday evening we also enjoyed a season of worship together.

Our hearts were made to rejoice to see the Christian people enter into the spirit of Christmas. They not only feasted in a temporal way but they entered into a deeper appreciation of the day. Saturday evening, about eleven o'clock, we were awakened out of sleep. The Christian children had come to sing the Christmas songs which the school-teacher had composed. Afterwards they went into the village and kept up singing until after midnight.

On Sunday morning Bro. Lichty preached on "Why was Christ born?" At the close of the service some more Christmas songs were sung. Those who had sung during the night gave in an offering of a little over fifty cents which they had received from the people. The Christians and non-Christians had given.

Thus Christmas passed, and we all said, "What a blessed day it was." Nora Lichty.

DISTRICT MEETING OF WESTERN COLORADO AND UTAH.

The new District of Western Colorado and Utah met in its second Conference Meeting Dec. 30, 1910, in the Fruita congregation, Fruita, Colorado. Four churches were represented by eight delegates.

At 9:30 A. M. the organization was effected by electing Eld. A. C. Weaver, Moderator; J. D. Coffman, Reading Clerk; the writer, Writing Clerk. The spirit of the meeting was commendable. The mission work of the District elicited some of the most spirited discussions.

Eleven petitions and queries, relating to the various phases of church and District work, were considered, which shows that the new District is awake to its needs, and not wanting for laborers to push the work along.

The Grand Junction Mission aroused general interest and discussion. It seems that the Missionary Meeting, held the day before, had infused the missionary spirit into those in attendance, so that the interest taken in the District work is but a result of that meeting.

In the Ministerial Meeting the great and all-important question of the ministry, its work, its needs, and how to use the forces now on hand, to accomplish the most good, were duly considered. A discussion of plans that the many calls for preaching the Word may not go unheeded, awakened much interest. While, as yet, the problem seems to be unsolved, we have hopes that the proper solution of this great question is forthcoming.

Following are the names of our Mission Board: Chairman, Eld. A. A. Weaver, Route 2, Grand Junction, Colo.; Secretary, W. R. Hornbaker, Route 1, Grand Junction, Colo.; Treasurer, J. A. Austin, Fruita, Colo.

Anyone desiring to locate where he will find a great field to work, and where his labors are needed, may, by writing to any of the above-named brethren, get all the information he may desire. Especially is a minister needed in Grand Junction, Colo.

The District sends one paper to Annual Meeting. The voting for delegate on Standing Committee resulted in the election of Eld. D. M. Click, with Eld. J. E. Bryant as alternate.

Thus closed a very interesting and profitable District Meeting. The next Conference will convene in the Mt. Garfield church the day after Thanksgiving, 1911.

DAHANU, INDIA.

Some time ago there was a little sedition scare here. The Chief Constable came with a force of men and began searching the houses of the most prominent Brahmins in Dahanu. We have not learned much of the results, as the Government is very slow and cautious about giving out information. The English school was closed for awhile, however. It was reported as being a place where sedition was openly taught. The Brahmins implicated have land not very far away from our home. Some of the poor Varleys, who work for the landlords, were taken by police and tortured, to get information out of them, as to the places where the guns were secreted. Whatever the authorities found, things are quiet now.

We had an excessive Monsoon season. The rains lasted much longer than the expected time. The last heavy rain was the heaviest of all, and the water in the river near by rose five feet above high water mark. It tore out the iron railing, strong as railroad iron, and broke the irons like pine sticks. The floods destroyed much rice. In many places the crop was only one-fourth of a full crop. On the other hand, near Bombay the rice was a twenty-anna crop, that is twenty-five per cent above average.

During the rains a large, six-foot cobra fell into the well. We tried to fish it out, but failed. There was too much water for any one to go into the well, so we had to use the river water for a month or more. We put about thirty pounds of lime into the well. In the course of time, the smell all left and the water became clear as crystal.

Out about twelve miles, in the jungle, we have a man and wife located. He has been trying to start a school, but with rather indifferent success. The wife is one of the specially-supported women of the British and Foreign Bible Society. They have a hard place for work.

Now, the Davars and Dublos are two different castes, having much in common. Their children take the village cattle out to graze as one large day's labor. Davar Girl and a Dublo boy shared their scanty food with each other, and both became ceremonially unclean. The Davar community was much enraged and made the father of the girl whip her. That's caste!

We have a common servant, Godia. He is a Dublo, too. He has learned to read both Marathi and Gujerati since working for us, and is at heart a Christian, but can not be baptized unless his whole family leaves him. He is not strong enough to do that yet. His caste makes it hard for him as it is. Part of his work is to fetch our bread from the station. One of his caste fellows raised the story that he was carrying beef for the Sahib. That is one of the great sins of the Hindu casteman. There was a trial, and Godia was fined. He did not work for a few days. The caste people were to come and get our evidence. That did not suit them, as they wanted to have liquor that Godia paid for. And they got it. Unjust! But that is CASTE!

Karadoho, via Dahanu, India, Jan. 6, 1911.

CHRISTMAS AT ANKLESHWER, INDIA.

We had been wondering, for some time, how we had best celebrate this Christmas Day, so that the new Christians, as well as those who call themselves, now already, the older ones, would get something more of the spirit of Christmas, and with it the Spirit of Jesus.

Sister Himmelsbaugh and Sister Stover got thin cloth and made nearly one hundred bags. Into these we put peanuts, candy, parched rice and a whistle, or doll, or other little playthings for children.

We announced beforehand that we wished everyone to be partaker in giving gifts this year, for "it is more blessed to give than to receive." We placed several large baskets in our house, and said that they were open to all, for placing things in, but to none for examination or inspection. And any one who wanted to have the joy of giving should put his gift in the basket. During the day, a number of times men came quietly in, and placed bundles of varying sizes in the basket, and then slipped out. We prepared small night lamps, cups and saucers, and useful articles for our coworkers, and labeled all, so that every one who would come would get something. It was all ready, and we were all glad.

Sunday morning, very early, several came to our bedroom window, and sang hymns there till the break of day, when they went home. At nine o'clock was our usual Sunday-school, followed by church services. In the preaching, of course, the nature of Christmas was the theme, taken part in by all.

After dinner, we got together for examination and baptism services. And the whole number of Bhils that were added to our little Christian fold that day was thirty,—one of them a woman. Next day two more were added, the whole thirty-two being from ten different villages. There were other applicants, but when the Mohammedans learned that the "Bhils were to be made Christians today" they determined that it should not be, and by hook or crook kept them from coming to the services that day.

After the baptism, we all hastened back to the meeting room for what the children called "the really Christmas." Four baskets full were sitting in the front part of the room, and when one name after another was called, it was with much joy that the gift was received. Of course, some got small gifts, as there were friends to give to them. That helped things to be interesting. Several envelopes had written on them, "For the Collection Box," and the money on the inside, without any name, was turned over. I think every one felt it was a good Christmas, and all are increasingly glad when the blessed Christmas Day comes again. In the night we had a meeting which continued to a late hour. Brethren, remember our little flock of new, raw Christians, and pray for them.

W. B. Stover.

CHRISTMAS AT BULSAR, INDIA.

Christmas is the big day of the year for our Indian Christians. For several days before Christmas men and boys came to draw from the deposits they have in the bungalow for safe keeping. Some had but a few pennies, but it was enough to show the spirit of gift. Many came to buy books and tracts, others wanted leave to go to the town to buy, and in various ways preparation was made. It was a pleasing contrast with the custom of those not Christians, who come around at such times to get something; the idea of giving never enters their mind.

After dark on Saturday evening a dozen and more of the boys carried from the Bungalow baskets containing grain, vegetables, clothing, a blanket, a book, and Christmas greetings, to each of the Christian families. These baskets of good things were the gift this year of some friends in Covina, Cal., who sent us some money to be used at Christmas. Would that the dear friends might know just how much joy their gift did bring to the thirty-five and more families where the baskets went.

Far into the night singing continued, and perhaps ceased just at all, for at 3:30 in the morning we were awakened by hearty and joyous strains of music. The singers were on the front veranda. After we responded to their greeting by wishing a merry Christmas, they went to gladden other hearts and homes also.

Before 7 we had met with others of the Christian community at the home of Bro. Renchord Mhadev. We had prayer together, exchanged the greetings of the season, had a cup of tea, and a bit of food, rejoiced together in the great fact that we are as in Christ Jesus, and returned to our homes as the day began to dawn. The joyful songs of praise and adoration, sung by our people, are a striking contrast to the songs of our neighbors on festal days.

At seven o'clock the boys and girls met in their respective schoolrooms for the usual morning service. At the close of the devotions, several boys brought into their room a large basket, filled with presents from the girls and boys to the boys. A similar one was also carried into the girls' room. The recipients came forward to receive their gifts as their names were read. All were remembered by some one, and all were happy. The boys each received a good knife. These also were paid for by the gift from Covina, Cal.

Sunday-school convened at the usual hour, 8:30. Special joy and gladness were manifested in all the work of the school. The hour for preaching was used for a special Christmas service. The program was made out without aid of the missionary, and was rendered by India Christians. At least six special songs were sung by groups of boys or girls, and all of them were the composition of several of our boys. Bro. Lellu Jalem directed the meeting.

Two young brethren, both deacons, made addresses. Both addresses showed much preparation and a good grasp of the subject discussed. The one, Manji Govind, spoke of the "Humiliation of the Christ," the other, Soma Rama, presented "Christ as King." Both messages were helpful. Would that we all might soon learn to enter the valley of humiliation with our Lord, and obey him as our King! What a transformation it would make! Bro. Govind Kenghar, also a deacon, conducted the afternoon service, and used as his theme, "The Exaltation of Christ." In a land where the followers of Christ are despised and persecuted it is indeed a joy to know that our people, though scorned by unbelievers, are coming to see and know our Lord in his Exaltation.

Twenty-five persons were present at our English service in the evening. This is a large audience for Bulsar, where English-speaking people are so few. The discussion on "No Room in the Inn" was listened to with marked attention. J. B. Emmert.

THE CHURCH OF GOD—MADE SUCH IN CHRIST.

came the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him" (Heb. 5:9). He is Lord and Master of the household of the faithful, and as such he should be revered and obeyed.

He is going to be the judge of the quick and dead. "The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son." And "we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ" (John 5:22; Rom. 14:9, 10). None can be saved or enter heaven outside of Christ. "He that climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber," for by so doing the efficacy of Christ's blood is ignored, and his power and glory spurned. Thus God's prearranged plan of salvation in Christ is set aside. Such do not bow the knees in adoration to Christ, nor confess him as Lord to the glory of God the Father.

In order to salvation and membership in the church of God, we must have an application of the blood of Christ, and this can be had only by walking in the light as Christ is the light. Then "we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John 1:7). This means living the life that Christ has outlined in the plan of salvation, and obeying that form of doctrine he has delivered to us in the Gospel. The blood of Christ sealed the New Testament, and when we come to that, and obey from the heart the truths therein taught, then and there we meet the blood of Christ, which cleanseth us from all unrighteousness, and sets us aside to the worship of God.

Christ purchased the church of God with his own blood (Acts 20:28). He is set forth of God to be a propitiation through faith in his blood and righteousness for the remission of sins (Rom 3:5, 6). We are justified by his blood, and saved from wrath through him (Rom. 5:8, 9).

We have redemption throught his blood,—the forgiveness of sins according to the riches of his grace (Eph. 1:7; Col. 1:14; Heb. 9:12, 14).

Christ sanctifies us with his own blood (Heb. 13:12).

Christ has washed us from our sins in his own blood (Rev. 1:5).

Those who reject Christ have severed every means of purification and salvation, as ordained of God in Christ Jesus, and by so doing have closed and barred the gates of heaven against themselves.

Christ humbled himself, and died for our sins, and God wrought through him redemption and salvation, for all who believe in and accept of him as their Savior (Eph. 1:17-20).

The church is one body in Christ (Rom. 12:5; 1 Cor. 12:12).

The saints are represented as babes in Christ (1 Cor. 3:1; 1 Peter 2:2).

All are made alive in Christ (1 Cor. 15:22).

The saints are approved in Christ (Rom. 14:18; 16:10).

The Christian's hope is in Christ (1 Cor. 15:19; 1 Tim. 1:1).

The Christian is established in Christ (2 Cor. 1:21, 22).

The church of God triumphs in Christ (2 Cor. 2:14).

God gives the church victory through the Lord Jesus Christ (1 Cor. 15:57).

The darkness of the types and shadows is taken away in Christ, and the effulgent glory of God's eternal truth is made to shine into the souls of his children in clearness and beauty. Those who base their hope of heaven in ceremony have a vail over their vision, and the glorious "Sun of Righteousness" has never shone into their darkened hearts (2 Cor. 3:14-18).

The church of God is his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus, hence a new creation in Christ (Eph. 2:10; 2 Cor. 5:17).

God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself; those outside of Christ are still enemies of God (2 Cor. 5:18, 19; Eph. 2:16).

The covenant of promise was confirmed of God in Christ (Gal. 3:17).

All those who have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ, and are identified with the family of God in Christ (Gal. 3:27; Rom. 6:3-5, 11).

God blesses his children with all spiritual blessings in Christ (Eph. 1:3, 4). "In the dispensation of the fulness of times" God will "gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth: even in him, in whom also we have obtained an inheritance" (Eph. 1:10, 11).

Those who hear the Gospel, believe and trust in Christ, will be sealed as sons and daughters of God by the Holy Spirit (Eph. 1:12, 13).

All nations are made partakers of the promises of God in Christ by complying with the conditions set forth in the Gospel (Eph. 3:6; Acts 10:34-36). The church's steadfastness of faith in Christ leads her to walk in him, that is, in his teachings and doctrine (Col. 2:5, 6).

The Relation We Sustain to God in Christ.

Christ in the children of God, the hope of glory (1 Thess. 4:16; Col. 1:27).

"For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus" (Gal. 3:26; John 1:12).

The children of God fall asleep or die in Christ (1 Cor. 15:18-20). "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord" (Rev. 14:13). The only possible way to die in the Lord is to get into the Lord, and live in the Lord. Those who have lived in Christ and died in him, shall come forth in the first resurrection, and escape the power of the second death (1 Thess. 4:16; Rev. 20:4, 6), "and shall be caught up together with all the glorified saints in Christ in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord" (1 Thess. 4:16, 17).

Where is the hope,—the expectation,—of those who have rejected Christ, and lived a life of disobedience? In him is life, and entrance into the beautiful city, outside of him, is death and banishment from the glory world. Choose him and his salvation today!

BELOW will be found the queries for the next Annual Meeting, so far as reported:

3. (a) Whereas, especially in the West, much harm has been done because of Christ by ministers engaging in the real estate business, which is generally considered even by the world as a questionable vocation, and since many ministers, acting as traveling land agents, are not amenable to the churches which are affected by their work: Therefore, we ask Annual Meeting through District Meeting of Northern California to decide that no minister shall engage in the real estate business, and if he persist in so doing, his office shall be taken from him. (b) We further ask Annual Meeting to define "legitimate business in real estate," as used in Article 8, 1890, and if such can not be clearly defined, to advise that all Brethren refrain from the real estate business.

Passed to Annual Meeting.

Illinois, Northern and Wisconsin.

We ask Annual Meeting through District Meeting of Northern Illinois and Wisconsin to decide that when a minister becomes an active land, colonization or immigration agent, or a promoter of doubtful business enterprises, he shall not exercise in his office while so engaged, but his office shall be in the hands of his congregation and should he give up the business, the congregation shall decide whether he may again act in his official capacity.

Answer.—Because of the evils connected with said business we so decide.

Answer of District Meeting.—Passed to Annual Meeting.

Indiana, Southern.

(1) Inasmuch as there is confusion in regard to the authority exercised by the Committee on Credentials in accepting the delegates to Annual Conference, and

(2) Inasmuch as the duties placed upon said committee by the Standing Committee, in addition to those required by Annual Conference, often make it embarrassing both to the Committee on Credentials and to delegates, and

(3) Inasmuch as the Annual Conference has enjoined written credentials specifying the requirements essential to act as delegates,

Therefore, Will not the Southern District of Indiana ask Annual Conference more clearly to define the duties and authority of the Committee on Credentials? (Sent by Ladoga church).

Answer: Yes, we ask General Conference to do as requested in the query.

Nebraska.

Inasmuch as the sisters do so much teaching in Sunday-school, prayer meeting and other church work, we, the Beatrice church, petition Annual Meeting, through District Meeting, to use the sisters more frequently with the brethren in committee work.

Request granted and sent to Annual Meeting.

Kansas, Southwestern, South Colorado, and Northwestern Oklahoma.

1. Whereas, Jesus Christ was heralded to the world as the Prince of Peace, and his followers are enjoined to follow after the things that make for peace, and

Whereas, The Church of the Brethren has ever held to the principle of nonresistance:

Therefore, We, the Wichita, Kansas, church, ask Annual Meeting, through District Meeting, to appoint a committee of three Brethren whose special business it shall be,

3. The McPherson church, McPherson, Kansas, asks Annual Meeting, through District Meeting, that,—since the publication named Everybody's Friend, edited by D. E. Cripe, Stillwater, Okla., is the only paper in the Brotherhood published in the interest of homeless children; and since it has been adopted by five State Districts as the organ of the child-saving work in these Districts,—this publication be adopted by Annual Meeting as the organ for the child-saving work of our Brotherhood until the Brethren Publishing House can take charge of the paper and publish it.

Passed to Annual Meeting.

Notes From Our Correspondents

As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country

ALABAMA.

Wayne.—Bro. S. G. Nickey, of Cerro Gordo, Ill., came to our place Jan. 13 and began a series of meetings on the 14th. He preached eighteen sermons to interested listeners. Eleven came out on the Lord's side and gave their hand for church fellowship, of this number eight of the sixth received the rite of baptism, while the other three await the rite in the near future. Bro. Nickey's sermons were full of spirit and soul-cheering. While we had only been holding meetings at the Wayne Mission once a month, we expect to be with them twice a month hereafter. We would be glad for any visiting brethren to stop with us at the mission, while visiting this part of the South, to help us all they can.—M. Wine, Fruitdale, Ala., Jan. 30.

CALIFORNIA.

Reedley.—Our church enjoyed a two weeks' series of meetings, conducted by Bro. L. D. Bosserman. On account of sickness and the inclemency of the weather the attendance was not so large, but a good interest was manifested. Two united with the church, and were baptized, and others, we think, are counting the cost. Our love feast was held Jan. 29. Bro. Bosserman officiated. Sister Bosserman was also with us and assisted in the song service. On Sunday morning, Jan. 29, she gave a very interesting talk to the children of the Sunday-school. Seven letters of membership were granted since our last report, and those of Eld. James M. Neff, wife and daughter, were received. We were glad to welcome them among us.—Susie Michael, Reedley, Cal., Jan. 30.

COLORADO.

Lowland.—Our church met in council Jan. 14, at 10 A. M. Our elder, Bro. B. E. Keeler, presided. Considerable business was disposed of. Five letters were received. We decided to hold a series of meetings something to be conducted by bro. Root, of Colorado City. Officers for the coming year are as follows: Bro. B. E. Kesler, reelected our elder; Sister Minnie Heaston, clerk; Bro. A. A. Hoaston, treasurer; Bro. Roscoe Lake, church solicitor; the writer, church correspondent. Our Sunday-school was reorganized. Sister Ella Groff, our superintendent; Bro. Arthur Heaston, secretary; Sister Lila Groff, primary teacher.—Nellye Nice, Wayne, Colo., Jan. 25.

IDAHO.

Wendell.—Since our last report a number of brethren have been here looking over our country, but as yet no one has come. The outlook for a colony of members here is encouraging.—E. M. Snook, Box 184, Wendell, Idaho, Jan. 28.

ILLINOIS.

Macoupin Creek.—We met in council Feb. 4. A number of letters were granted. It was decided to send two delegates to the Local Option Convention Feb. 14, at the "Armory" in Springfield, Ill. Brethren Joseph Stutsman and Henry Roesch were chosen to represent this church. The Christian Workers' Meeting was reorganized by electing Clinton Brubaker, president; Sister Ella Brubaker, secretary; Sister Ida Roesch, treasurer.—Aurelia Watson Brubaker, R. D. 1, Farmersville, Ill., Feb. 8.

Martin Creek.—Our church met in regular council Jan. 23, with Bro. C. A. Schoonover presiding. Sunday-school, Sabbath, with brethren A. B. Hollinger and J. J. Scrogum as superintendents; Bro. Arthur Scrogum, secretary. A committee was appointed to look after the interests of members in our territory; a committee is also to solicit missionary funds.—J. J. Scrogum, Fairfield, Ill., Jan. 28.

Woodland church met in council on Wednesday, Jan. 25, three letters were granted. One letter was received. Quite a lot of business was attended to, but everything passed off pleasantly. We had a good time together. We are about to build a new churchhouse at Woodland, and expect to have it completed by Feb. 15. We already have enough money subscribed to pay for it. We have an option on an acre of ground to add to the cemetery. A plan is on foot to have a 100-day endeavor in the spring. We have $300 to start on. The meeting was closed by Bro. Charles Walters.—Fannie E. Stutsman, Stutsman, Ill., Feb. 1.

INDIANA.

Bethel congregation met Jan. 28 in a special council for the purpose of calling the congregation to order, as the time for this work was taken up. Eld. John Stout and wife were received by letter, and two letters were granted. We had with us the following elders, Brethren Wm. Myers, Lewis Nefi and Amsey Clem. Bro. Wysong officiated. The question of dress was taken up and discussed, and a vote was taken, which resulted in a line being drawn east and west through the two country places, Middle Indiana, Bear View Chapel, thus placing Pleasant View Chapel and the Milford church in the northern congregation, and all that is in the southern. It was decided that the northern congregation still retain the name of Bethel, Pleasant View, the church being the mother church. The Salem congregation then decided to meet in council Feb. 9, to effect a new organization. It is our earnest desire that both congregations may prosper, by no change made, and that both may prosper in the cause of the Master.—Amsey Clem, R. R. 2, Syracuse, Ind., Jan. 29.

Landess.—We have closed one more grand meeting at Beaver Creek, one of our mission points in Middle Indiana. Bro. George Swihart did the preaching. Five accepted Christ, and the church has been built up. We have had 14 added to us. Four more have accepted Christ at the Marion Mission, since my last report. Praise God for the increase.—J. W. Norris, Landess, Ind., Jan. 30.

Lick Creek congregation met in members' meeting Jan. 28, with our elder, Bro. L. T. Holsinger, presiding. Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Meeting were reorganized. Sister Dora Bantz was elected Sunday-school superintendent, and Sister Ethel Gonser, secretary. Sister Bessie Kieffaber was also appointed of the Christian Workers' Meeting. Our Sister Lillie Boomler, secretary. Bro. W. H. Shivius was elected Endeavor agent. Bro. Holsinger is now engaged in a series of meetings at Jasonville.—Ethel Gonser, Coal City, Ind., Jan. 30.

Logansport.—Our church is now enjoying a grand revival meeting. Our elder, Bro. J. W. Norris, came to us Jan. 22, and has preached the Word with power and demonstration each evening. A number seem to be near the kingdom. The church seems to be in good working order and the Sunday and Sunday-school is growing nicely. Sister Lottie Oberlin is our superintendent. The enrollment is now over sixty-five. The church has organized a Sunday-school at the Adamsboro house, with Bro. A. A. Oberlin as superintendent. We still have our services in the Adamsboro house on the south side of Michigan Avenue. The cars stop in front of the hall, by requesting the conductor. We also have a car line that can to visit our mission. We ask any one who has relatives or friends in Logansport, to write us so that we may go and come them to our services.—Dossie M. Webb, 1725 Spear St., Logansport, Ind., Feb. 3.

Missionsown.—We expect Bro. H. L. Fadely to assist us in a series of meetings at our Union Grove house to begin next Saturday evening. Yesterday (Jan. 31) was our regular Sunday-school Secretary, visited our Union Grove Sunday-school, which is now in some timely and good work. Let us rise up, and cause us all to do more and better work in the Sunday-school in the future than we have in the past.—Mrs. John P. Shoemaker, Shideler, Ind., Jan. 30.

Salamonie Valley church met in council Jan. 23, with Eld. Frank Kreider presiding. Elders I. L. Berkey and Levi Hoke were also present, and aided in the work. Three letters were received and one granted. A good representation of our members, and the kind, Christian spirit shown, were pleasant features of the meeting.—Mrs. J. E. Arnold, R. R. 5, Middlebury, Ind., Jan. 29.

Turkey Creek.—Bro. John Appleman and wife came to labor with us at Gravelton, Jan. 15, and stayed with us until Jan. 29. Bro. Appleman labored out the Lord's Word in the simplest of power and seal. Sister Appleman conducted the song service, and by some very interesting songs of praise. We were greeted with a full house each evening. Although there were no additions to the church, there was much good sowed and the church was greatly built up in the faith. Bro. and Sister Appleman will certainly have the prayers of the church for their faithful labor for the Lord.—Lucie Bistline, Box 1, R. D. 1, Nappanee, Ind., Jan. 31.

Yellow River.—We just closed a three weeks' series of meetings, conducted by Bro. C. S. Garber, of St. Joseph, Mo., who, in his sincere labors for souls, shunned not to declare the whole Gospel of Christ. Despite of bad roads, inclement weather, and much sickness, the interest was good and the earnest listeners nearly every night. As a result seventeen were made willing to walk in newness of life. The members were strengthened and built up in the most holy faith. Our evergreen Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Meeting are increasing in interest.—Rosa Shively, Bremen, Ind., Jan. 30.

IOWA.

Maple Valley.—Bro. Tobias Myers, of Philadelphia, Pa., preached for us Jan. 8 and 15.—Edith G. Faulkender, R. D. 6, Aurelia, Iowa, Jan. 27.

KANSAS.

Morning Star.—At the beginning of the new year we reorganized our Sunday-school. Bro. Ernest Albin is our superintendent, and Sister Ada Richardson, secretary and treasurer. We reorganized our Christian Workers' Meeting with Bro. Chas. Whitsler as president. Two years ago we held our meetings in a small schoolhouse. Now we have a new church. Then there were only a few members; now we number about twenty-five. As several families are moving away, we are still in need of more workers, interested in the Master's work.—Salome Harader, Buckberry, Kans., Feb. 1.

LOUISIANA.

Bolinger.—Bro. C. P. Rowland, of Lenark, Ill., came here Jan. 24 and held meetings over Sunday. He would have preached longer, but the house had been engaged by another denomination for a revival meeting, and they did not feel like revoking their appointment. We had a good meeting. Each sermon brought a larger crowd than the previous evening. On Sunday we expected to have a large crowd to the limit. The sentiment of the people was for Bro. Rowland to remain longer, but he had been over a year such good sermons as he delivered. We hope to have him come again.—M. S. Bolinger, Bolinger, La., Feb. 1.

MICHIGAN.

Black River.—We just closed a three weeks' series of meetings with Bro. C. L. Wilkins, of Middleton, Mich., assisting us. Although the weather was unfavorable, we had one of the most excellent. Bro. Wilkins held forth the Word with earnestness. Five were brought into the fold of Christ, a young lady, and a youth of fourteen years. All of them are our Sunday-school scholars. We now have the Elkton house, and the church is wonderfully strengthened. Bro. Wilkins left a host of friends. We visited about twenty-five homes.—Addie M. Fisher, R. D. 2, Bangor, Mich., Jan. 31.

Saginaw.—The little band at this place was made to replace, at the close of our Sunday-school service, when the wife of husband and wife,—were restored. Our Sunday-school is growing in interest and attendance.—Bertha Alhaugh, Bannister, Mich., Jan. 30.

MARYLAND.

Denton.—Our church met in council Feb. 2. Our elder, Bro. G. S. Rairigh, presided. Four letters of membership were received. An encouraging contribution for the year amounted to $132.19. We decided to call one brother to the ministry and one to the office of deacon. The ordination will be called Feb. 18 for the election of these brethren. Bro. Hoops was with us in our Sunday-school convention with the congregation on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, Eld. G. S. Rairigh, Eld. Jesse Ebey, Eld. Austin Hoff, Brethren William Krabill and Solomon Longanecker at District Meeting. Our love feast will be held May 7. We decided to have Bro. J. Kurtz Miller, of Dayton, N. Y., hold a series of meetings, to begin Oct. 28. Our District Sunday-school Convention will be held Feb. 21. We had a very helpful talk on Sunday-school work. A series of doctrinal sermons, preached by Brethren Bro. A. B. Hollinger, commenced Jan. 7 and closed Jan. 31, with three accessions. One has been baptized, the others received. All two will await the rite. The members have been greatly encouraged and strengthened. Bro. Hollinger is a strong preacher of sermons. Each evening he gave us a twenty-minute talk on the trip through Palestine.—Edna P. Pentz, Tuckahoe, Md., Feb. 3.

NEBRASKA.

Hancock.—On Sunday afternoon Sister Addie Prouser called for the anointing before going to Starbuck for a surgical operation. Bro. Jesse Ebey responded to the call, and attended to in good faith and, we believe, to the glory of God. She is the wife of our brother, Jesse Prouser. All our faithful friends pray for a complete restoration to health. Eld. J. Q. Dougherty, of Hastings, Nebr., expects to be at pastoral promise to hold a series of meetings this coming June, directly after the Annual Meeting.—Samuel Bowyer, Hancock, Minn., Jan. 31.

Worthington.—Our church met in council Jan. 30, which are to be held in the Worthington church, will begin Feb. 20. The Committee of Arrangements met with the elder, Bro. Hoff, of the year with Bro. Chas. Wolff, superintendent, and Bro. J. Scheidler, secretary. We had an excellent council-meeting members. We meet during the day until spring. The interest is good.—Minnie Scheidler, Worthington, Minn., Feb. 3.

MISSOURI.

Broadwater.—Our church met in council Jan. 21. Eld. C. H. Steerman presided. Church officers were elected for the year. Bro. H. J. Hoffman was chosen elder; Bro. C. E. Reed, reelected church treasurer; Bro. P. W. Boyt, minsion solicitor; the writer, church clerk. Our business session. Steerman gave us a very impressive sermon. The day following, Bro. Steerman left for his home in Colorado.—Ethel Hoffman, Princeton, Mo., Jan. 28.

Carthage.—Jan. 13 Bro. Salem Beery, of Colorado, preached for us at our church in the evening; also on Saturday evening, and Sunday morning and evening. Bro. Joseph Root, of Colorado Springs, Colorado, came to assist us. He is both morning and evening.—W. A. Lowry, Carthage, Mo., Jan. 30.

Mercham.—Our church met in council Jan. 30, with Bro. Weller's home, on account of sickness among the members. Five letters were granted and one received. After the examination we proceeded to the water where they were buried with Christ in baptism. Sister Weller's mother was a woman that has been in very poor health for some time. She passed away Monday night, and says that she feels better now than she did for months before. There are other coming the cost. We hope they will soon be able to make the profession.—Ethel Hoffman, R. D. 2, Princeton, Mo., Feb. 1.

Monteham church has enjoyed a season of refreshing from the Lord. Our series of meetings, conducted by Bro. C. A. Miller, were very interesting. Sunday-school, also conducted by Bro. Nicodemus, of Bethany Bible School. When Bro. Miller, who is a Jew, began to preach to the Gentiles wondered where the converts were to come from, as the members' children are nearly all in the church, but under Bro. Miller's ministry many have accepted Christ, and are trying to accept Christ. Five of them were quite young in years and one is an aged brother.—Ethel Hoffman, R. D. 2, Princeton, Mo., Feb. 1.

Shoal Creek.—Bro. G. M. Clemens, on his way from Arkansas, stopped with us on Saturday, Jan. 23, and carried out Christian Workers' Meeting on Sunday night, after which he preached a very interesting sermon. Sunday-school, also assisted Bro. Henry Etter to anoint Sister Rachel Santee on Sunday afternoon. Sister Santee is very low, and is not progressing nicely, with Bro. J. H. Argabright as president. We will gladly welcome any of the brethren who will stop with us.—Virgie Argabright, Joplin, Mo., Jan. 30.

NEBRASKA.

North Beatrice church met in special council in the Hope Memorial Church, Jan. 30, for the purpose of deciding who have moved out until too few are left to carry on the work, the elders of the Beatrice church and Sister Hope decided to consider the advisability of disorganizing. Elders Jas. Gish, S. E. Thompson and A. B. Hollinger were present. Jas. Gish was chosen presiding. It was decided to disorganize, and letters were granted to the remaining members. Both arms of this church were once in a flourishing condition, and the outlook was bright, but conditions changed. In the old North church, which was organized many years ago, and whose membership at times was large, there are but four members now. It was with sad hearts that we met to close the work. Much earnest, faithful work has been done at both places. Some of the members have gone to their reward, others have gone to other fields, there to engage in the blessed work of the Lord. The few who remain are striving to keep fresh their love for the cause of the Master, hoping to find another church home as soon as possible.—Lulu N. Miller, Firth, Nebr., Feb. 2.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Kenmare.—This church had the privilege of having Bro. Hilton give us four inspiring lectures on China. It is very gratifying to learn of the marked changes that are taking place in China. The field is white to harvest. May we untiedly contribute means and men that the wheat may be gathered into the garner of the Lord.—G. I. Michael, Kenmare, N. Dak., Jan. 30.

Notice to the Elders of North Dakota, Western Canada and Eastern Montana.—We, the members of the Temperance Committee, appointed by the last District Meeting of this District, do urge each congregation to have the oversight of its congregation or congregations, to appoint, or cause to be appointed, a temperance worker, who shall be in charge of the temperance cause and to arrange temperance programs as often as weather allows, keep temperance literature on hand for distribution, and to preach, or cause to be preached, at least one temperance sermon each year.—J. A. Brumbaugh, Secretary, Newville, N. Dak., Jan. 31.

Pleasant Valley.—Bro. Jesse Hilton, of Surrey, N. Dak., came Jan. 20, and gave us two illustrated talks on China and two sermons at the York churchhouse. He also had many interesting things to tell us of his visit to China at the 1914 Conference. We now have three preaching points and three Sunday-schools in this congregation.—Anna Vanch, York, N. Dak., Jan. 30.

OHIO.

Deshler.—Jan. 29 our hearts were made glad when one young brother submitted to the ordinance of baptism, and was received into the church.—Esther Hoover, Deshler, Ohio, Jan. 30.

Pataoria.—The waters have again been troubled. Two,—a husband and wife, were received into the church by baptism on the 23d inst. The husband was taken down with a sick bed. Our Sunday-school was reorganized some time ago, with Bro. Oscar Gnagey, superintendent; Sister Ida Hoffman, secretary. Bro. S. B. Newcomer is teacher of the class of the Old People's Home. There is considerable sickness among the members at present.—Cyrelia Gnagey, Pataoria, Ohio, Jan. 31.

Middle District.—Our elder, Bro. Jacob Coppock, was with us on Sunday and Sunday evening, Jan. 22, and gave two interesting sermons. Bro. Edward Frantz came Jan. 23, and on Sunday, Jan. 29, we were made to rejoice, by two little girls accepting Christ. Bro. Frantz will stay with us.—Y. Coppock, Ohio, Jan. 31.

Rock Creek.—Since the report, last week, of our series of meetings, conducted by Bro. J. W. Fidler, three more services were held, two of them by Lawrence Kreider, when three more wanderers returned to the church, yet the work of the baptismal gate, making in all thirty-six accessions to the church since the close of seven twenty-six are heads of families. Seven of this number have been members of the home congregation. The Christian Workers' and all of the others attended the main school. On account of many others taking part in the kingdom, there was a large attendance for Bro. Fidler to continue, but, seemingly, he had to close his meetings.—Lizzie Bowman, Ashland, Ohio, Jan. 31.

Pleasant Valley (Ohio).—Bro. E. Shank, of Dayton, Ohio, began a series of meetings Jan. 17, continuing until Jan. 32. SPECIAL BIBLE TERM AT DALEVILLE COLLEGE.

The Special Bible Term at Daleville was held Jan. 3 to 15 inclusive. In many ways this term proved to be the best we have yet had. There were more special students than ever before, more than four times the number of the brethren and sisters from the surrounding community took advantage of the opportunity than usual. A large number of the regular students attended some of the classes.

The theme of the term throughout was "Church Extension" and the Scriptural watchword, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth" (2 Tim. 2: 15).

Eld. T. S. Moherman gave one period daily on (a) The Christian Pastor and His Work; (b) The Working Church; (c) Church Government and Church Discipline. These real problems were handled with marked ability and many valuable suggestions were given their consideration. Bro. Moherman also gave one period daily on the Sunday-school: (a) The Field; (b) Graded Lessons; (c) Sunday-school Pedagogy; (d) Soul Winning and Temperance; (e) Methods of Teaching. The work given during this period was very valuable and much appreciated.

Prof. C. S. Ikenberry occupied one period daily in the discussion of the Book of Prayer (b) and the Interpretation of Parables. Bro. Ikenberry handled these important Bible themes in a most interesting and instructive way, leading the student into a more thorough and practical knowledge along these lines.

Prof. J. E. Flory, in two lectures, gave briefly the history of the Church of the Brethren in Virginia. Surely we have a most interesting ancestry! May we build upon the work of our fathers wisely and well!

Bro. E. C. Crumpacker, in two lectures, gave the "Crisis in Galilee." Just after the reading of the five thousand the disciples and the populace would take Christ by force and crown him king, but he withdrew quietly to a secret place and there communed with the Father. The points made by Bro. Crumpacker were very impressive.

The writer of this article, in three lectures, discussed on the Bible Doctrine of Prayer, based on the praying life of Jesus. This, with the examples of the praying men of the past ages, furnishes a most beautiful background for the elements of true prayer.

Eld. P. S. Miller, in his forceful way, in two lectures, gave the New Testament Teaching on Christian and on Fraternal Attire, contrasting the two. Bro. Miller handled this important theme so as to set the mind to thinking and investigating for itself, and thus reach a conclusion that the Holy Spirit will approve. His work was very helpful and much appreciated.

The last three days of the Institute Eld. Galen B. Royer, Secretary of the General Mission Board, was with us. Bro. Royer most impressively set forth the present needs of our own mission fields in India, in China, and in Europe, and made a strong appeal for more workers in these fields. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."

Jan. 19 was Educational Day. An enthusiastic educational program was given in the forenoon and a Sunday-school Conference in the afternoon, with a Sisters' Aid Society Meeting in the evening. At the latter meeting Sister Mohrman gave an interesting talk on the Sisters' Aid Society Organization of the Brotherhood.

On the morning of the 14th there was a conference of the Botetourt Memorial Missionary Circle, at which an India Program was rendered by members of the Circle, followed by an address by Bro. Royer gave another address, "Our Colleges as a Source of Mission Workers." In the evening a public meeting of the mission study class of the College was held.

On Sunday afternoon, Jan. 15, Bro. B. H. Funk gave a very instructive and interesting lecture on the interpretation of the Song of Solomon.

Evangelistic services were held each evening in the College Chapel; also both Sunday mornings, during the Institute, conducted by Eld. T. S. Moherman. The preacher impressed every one with his own sincerity, deep, spiritual conviction and his scholarly grasp of the truth of God's Word. The sermons were logical, forceful, thoroughly orthodox, and filled with Bible doctrine.

As a direct result of these meetings seven were led to confess Christ, of whom six have united with the Church of the Brethren.

Daleville, Va., Jan. 27. D. N. Eller.

LA PLACE, ILLINOIS.

The Okaw congregation enjoyed a rich feast during the Holidays. The Bible Institute and Sunday-school Meeting of the Southern District of Illinois were held at the La Place house. While there were not as many delegates present as might have been, the interest was good. We are glad that our District Sunday-schools are supporting one of our India missionaries, and hope that all the schools will help. A standard of excellence was adopted for the district which, we trust, will cause the grades, qualifications and unity the work in various places. Much stress was put on the prepared teacher.

Bro. Wm. Howe, of Johnstown, Pa., gave us many things to think about from the lessons he brought. We believe that all were helped. Prayer and personal work were given to us in a vital way. The impressions left us, as a congregation, from all the work done, was uplifting and spiritual.

Our Sunday-school started out this year with Elmer Wagoner reelected as our superintendent. We had installation services for the officers and teachers of our Sunday-school Jan. 1. After Sunday-school the teachers and a few others met and decided to have a teacher-training class, to be held some evening every two weeks. Bro. Amos Eikenberry is to teach us when he returns from Bethany, and Bro. Elmer Wagoner is to have the work until his return. Several of our home department people promised to attend Sunday-school. Sister Nevik Miller is president of the Christian Workers' Meeting.

Notes from Our Correspondents.

S. Filbrun, presiding. Bro. Daniel Wampler, from Idaho, was present. One letter was received and was very much enjoyed. Our pastor, Bro. D. S. Filbrun, and wife, returned Jan. 5 from their visit to Washington and Colorado, and have again taken up the work in West Dayton. We were glad for their return. —Cordie Murray, 2020 W. Third Street, Dayton, Ohio, Feb. 1.

OKLAHOMA.

Bright Star.—Our church met Jan. 28. Elders Boyd and Pitzer were with us for the purpose of ordaining one of our number, Bro. W. R. Brubaker, to the ministry. Two letters were granted. One of those leaving was our secretary and treasurer, Bro. P. S. Harman, who moved to Ola to fill the vacancy. Brethren Pitzer and Boyd each gave us a sermon while they were here.—J. A. Martzen, Reed, Okla., Jan. 30.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Alderson.—It has been some time since we have written anything for the Messenger. It is the only comfort we have through these long winter days, and especially when Sunday comes. Bro. Frets and wife were here last winter. We had preaching every Sunday and also a Sunday-school. Many nonprofessors attended, and they were getting quite interested. The first of April Bro. Frets moved home and since then the work unprovided for. May 1 Brethren Zigler and Herr were here, and each of them preached a fine sermon. We are asked every few days when we are going to have preaching here again. We do not know what the Mission Board will do, but we hope that there will be some one ready to take up the work by spring.—Elizabeth V. Smith, Alderson, Pa., Jan. 31.

Altoona.—A series of meetings was conducted during the first three weeks of January, in the Church of the Brethren at Juniata, by Bro. J. Cassel Johnstown. The Lord's presence was felt with power in that forty-nine persons have been received into the church through baptism, while others are working under conviction of sin. Out of the forty-nine about twenty-five came through the medium of the Sunday-school. Our pastor is W. S. Long.—Emma Kantner, Altoona, Pa., Feb. 3.

Black Rock.—Our church has been greatly encouraged again by a successful series of meetings at the Ebenezer house, conducted by Bro. M. R. Zigler, of Chambersburg, Pa. The meetings began Dec. 31 and closed Jan. 17. Bro. Flohr labored earnestly and faithfully for the salvation of souls, and as a result eight have made the good choice. Four have been baptized, and four still await the rite. This will make thirty that have been added to the fold during the last three months.—J. D. Wilson, R. D. 6, Greencastle, Pa., Jan. 30.

Chiques.—We had our second series of meetings in January. Bro. N. E. Fahnestock labored for us. Two confessed Christ and united with the people of God, yesterday we baptized them and five others who came out at our first series of meetings. It is encouraging to see young men, middle-aged men and women enter the service of their Master.—Henry S. Zug, R. D. 1, Grantz Ridge, Pa., Jan. 31.

Germantown.—We held our Mothers' Meeting on Friday evening, Jan. 27, with a good attendance and very interesting meeting. Love was received by baptism and two by letter since our last report.—Mrs. Anna Swigart, 6611 Germantown Ave., Germantown, Pa., Jan. 30.

Huntingdon church has been enjoying excellent Bible instruction during the past two months, and several services have been well attended. Five were baptized on Sunday, four on Wednesday evening, and others are expected soon. Workers gave us very good sermons, and Bro. Basinger helped with the song service. Bible teachers and church members worked together in love and harmony, to lead souls to God. Bro. Virgil C. Finnell was with us, and spoke to us on Monday evening about the interesting Bible lessons. He told us many interesting things about the Publishing House at Elgin. We are glad to learn that the profits from this source are used so largely for missions and to sustain worn-out missionaries. Each should encourage the reading of our church publications. Help the good work on!—Eleanor J. Brumbaugh, Huntingdon, Pa., Feb. 1.

Philadelphia (First Church of the Brethren, Dauphin Street, above Broad Street).—Bro. D. W. Wheeler, of Pennsylvania Bible Term at Juniata College. Bro. Paul H. Bowman, from the Bethany Mission, filled the pulpit in the morning and Bro. W. I. Book, from the Germantown, Pennsylvania, filled the pulpit in the evening. These services were very much appreciated. Five letters of membership were received.—Sallie B. Schnell, 1905 N. Park Ave., Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 28.

VIRGINIA.

Mountain View.—In company with Eld. W. H. Handy, I visited Bro. J. M. Peak, finding him and two of his daughters quite ill. The brother has not been able to stand on his feet for ten weeks, and the doctor had given us up hopes of the dear sister's recovery. They requested Bro. Handy to anoint them. There being no other elder or minister present, I being a deacon and the clerk of the Mountain View church, the brother called on me to assist him, which I did with all my heart. After the brother was anointed, he got off the bed and sat up for two hours, and is now able to take good exercise. After the dear sister was anointed she wanted to get up. She said she was well, and she is now improving fast. So, when we, in faith, call on the Great Physician that is able to cure all manner of disease, we are healed. The anointing was a miracle to the many witnesses present. May God help the Brethren to go on in these good works, preaching and practicing all the commandments of Jesus.—W. F. Suit, Volney, Va., Feb. 4.

Staunton church met in council Jan. 26. Our elder, Bro. E. D. Kindig, presided. The minutes were read and accepted. Committee of Bro. Geo. Wilkinson and Sister Steffy were relieved. Two members were received by letter since our last council. Bro. J. S. Hall was reelected as our Sunday-school superintendent; Bro. Dave Gilbert was reelected president of the Christian Workers' Meeting. Some very fine speeches—all pertaining to the great need of the Staunton church,—were delivered by Brethren Kindig, Miller, Hartman and others. The brethren decided to call a minister this church as a mission point, struggling with the upand-down-hill-principle of life. Let us remember in prayers are united and our faith is strengthened. The committee in charge of the tent-meeting, Bro. Dave Gilbert and sisters, that we may come out more than conquerors through him who died to save us.—Sister Ida Long, Staunton, Va., Jan. 31.

WASHINGTON.

Tacoma.—Owing to certain conditions over which we had no control, we only continued our series of meetings two weeks, which resulted in one baptism. At our regular monthly members' meeting, last Friday night, one was restored to fellowship. Bro. Stiverson will leave for Chewuah next Monday, to hold a series of meetings. During his absence the pulpit here will be supplied by brethren Hostetter, Ritzralla and Olympia.—Sarah A. Stiverson, 712 South Fifty-second Street, Tacoma, Wash., Jan. 31.

NOTES NOT CLASSIFIED.

Sterling.—We have been having a glorious revival. Bro. S. Z. Smith and wife have been laboring earnestly with us from Jan. 1 to Feb. 5, at which time we have baptized and two reclaimed. The membership was much encouraged and built up. The outlook for our future is quite encouraging, but we are in need of more workers. Who will come and help us? Our Sunday-school has increased 16 per cent in average attendance during the past year and 50 per cent in average collection. This may not be as large as some, yet it is a steady increase, and we hope to do more the coming year. We have baptized nine of our Sunday-school scholars during the year. Our pastor will be in a series of meetings in Lanark during February, and the pulpit will be supplied by brethren Myers and those from nearby churches. Bro. P. R. Keltner is to preach for us Feb. 12.—Lillie A. Pierce, 1104 Fifth Avenue, Sterling, Ill., Feb. 6.

Mount Garfield.—Our revival work at this place closed last night. Brethren and Sister A. C. Root came to this place Jan. 8, remaining with us over three weeks. Our progress was hindered some by muddy roads. Seven precious souls united with the church by baptism, and one awaits the rite. Three others were hindered from uniting with the church. Four were reclaimed. The membership that we had wandered away returned to the fold. We had cottage prayer meetings almost every night, and these with the preaching were in our meeting. Sister Root was such a help to us. She conducted a praise service every evening a half hour before the preaching began, which we all enjoyed to the fullest. It was such an inspiration to every one. Jan. 28 we had our love feast. Twenty-seven sat at the Lord's tables—some of them for the first time. Bro. Root officiated. The church was much strengthened by the good services of Brethren and Sister Root, and we all rejoice because of the precious souls that came to us. We will have preaching every Thursday evening at the church. Brother and Sister Root go from here to the Bethel church, where they will also go with them.—Clara Clark, R. D. 1, Palisade, Colo., Feb. 1.

KANSAS CITY, KANSAS.

We are now holding meetings each evening in our mission on the south side. The attendance and interest are good. Our Sunday-school has come out for the Lord with good prospects for more. On the evening of the 14th we expect to hold a love feast for the special benefit of the mission members.

We have been connected with the work here for twenty years, and in our experience we never had such an epidemic of sickness and actual suffering for the necessities of life as there has been, and will continue until the spring work opens up. We have been in homes where children died for the lack of medicine and food with which to give relief are exhausted, we were unable to help them. This sad condition is caused through sickness, and thousands of people are out of employment. This applies to the packing house and manufacturing district, and not to the church in the city.

We are very careful and investigate every case where we give help. Will you remember us in donations of clothing and share the blessings in the Lord's work?

THE WEST BIG CREEK MISSION, KANS.

This mission point is in the bounds of the Quinter church, nineteen miles west and one mile south of Quinter, Kans. About two years ago this winter, Eld. J. W. Jarboe, of Quinter, Kans., held a series of meetings here, and since then there has been regular preaching here. The writer moved here from the Grenola church about one year ago. We have been doing what we could for the Master. We have an evergreen Sunday-school, with Bro. J. B. Sensenbaugh as superintendent.

Two have been baptized as this point since it was opened. The meetings are well attended, and the people seem to be very much interested in the way the Brethren preach and practice the Bible. There are seventeen members here, including one elder and two deacons.

Bro. E. D. Steward will move here as soon as he can arrange to come. This is a fine country. I have spent about eight weeks in evangelistic work since coming here, and expect to be at Decatur, Ill., to begin a series of meetings Feb. 11. After that I can not do any more evangelistic work till next fall and winter. Jan. 7, Eld. E. D. Steward began a series of meetings. The services were instructive, interesting and well attended. One was baptized during the meetings. Any one expecting to change location may write to me. Geo. R. Eller.

Progress of Missions During 1910.

The statistics of missionary societies throughout the world, as published in the "Missionary Review," show a total of $26,890,104 contributed, while $5,249,405 was raised on the field in addition. The means furnished sustain a force of 6,637 ordained missionaries, and a total missionary force on the field of 21,248. To this must be added 91,513 native helpers. During the last ten years there has been an increase of fifty per cent and more, in missionary money and forces. World evangelism, it will thus be seen, has made marvelous advancement, and yet, with multiplied millions of souls still in darkness, and going down to Christless graves, there is need of greater diligence in the "teaching of all the nations," as enjoined in the Great Commission.

How to Know a Good Sunday-school.

Some one, in describing a good Sunday-school, says we should judge it, "not by its size alone, nor by its noise, but for its efficiency as an educational organization and for the seriousness with which the church supports its work." Schools of this kind restore the Bible to its lawful and proper sphere in the church and community,—the place where it was designed to be by its great Author. It is the primary aim of the Sunday-school to furnish the highest development of Christian character and efficiency by educational methods. After all, the real test of a wide-awake school is found in the results which its workers secure. Schools, as well as churches, should frequently test themselves by the results accomplished, not simply in mere numbers but in thorough character development.

Everyday Activity.

It is one of the greatest mistakes of any congregation to defer special efforts until the beginning of a series of meetings is upon them. The congregation that counts on the first half of the meetings to be devoted to getting the members stirred, and the latter half to the ingathering of the lost, makes poor calculations. "I must be about my Father's business," should be the daily testimony of the child of God. With the entire membership wide-awake,—united and active at the very start of the meetings,—a great and effective work can undoubtedly be accomplished. Revival meetings can do much, but the members can do far more by practical and effective Christian living during all the months preceding the meetings, and then continuing their undivided interest in the work after the evangelist has entered upon his labors.

When the Women Took Hold.

While woman has been regarded as "the weaker vessel," be it remembered that occasionally she surprises the sterner sex by an unusual amount of "snap" and determination. It appears that at Pearsall, Texas, husbands and sons had been spending time and money at places of gambling, to the serious loss and neglect of the various homes represented. Two hundred women, whose husbands and sons were thus traveling the broad road of vice and dissolution, thereupon went in a body to the town authorities and demanded the immediate and effective suppression of the gambling dens. As a result repressive measures are now in operation, and a healthy public sentiment prevails. Thus, without the least tendency to violence, a most effective reform was speedily accomplished. It shows what may be done by a united and determined effort for the enforcement of law and decency.

The Chinese of the United States.

There was a time when the Chinese were looked upon with disdain, and subjected to gross maltreatment. That time, happily, has now passed away. We have learned to treat them as human beings, with hearts and minds and souls to be won, educated and saved for time and eternity. Some of the fruits of long and patient labors will be seen for the Chinese are already becoming apparent. In Sacramento, Cal., they have destroyed their idols, and have changed their temple into a schoolhouse. "The First Chinese Christian Church" has been organized in New York. In Chicago our own people have made a fair beginning in the work among the Chinese, and a number of promising young men have already identified themselves with our church. As these become further indoctrinated and trained, they will doubtless be instrumental in winning many of their countrymen from the bondage of idolatry to the truth which "will make them free indeed."

Will the Mormons Leave Utah?

Through Hamilton Smith, a priest of the Mormon church, 50,000 acres of land in the State of Coahuila, Mexico, have been purchased by the "Latter Day Saints." This body of land adjoins the 65,000 acres previously purchased, and again revives the pertinent inquiry propounded from time to time, "Are the Mormons about to leave Utah and the adjoining States?" President Diaz has given them a most comprehensive and liberal assurance that "in no way will they be interfered with." This, it appears, is a very congenial outlook to most of their members. They probably want liberty,—license,—to follow the reprehensible practices so strenuously objected to by the authorities of our country.

No Time to Read the Bible.

In view of the fact that the excuse of most people, in their neglect of Bible study, is an alleged lack of time, an eastern minister has taken the trouble to compare the number of words in the average Sunday newspaper with those contained in the New Testament. He has found that there is no great difference. This suggested the question: "How much time is actually necessary to read the New Testament through?" While this may differ with various people, and may depend somewhat on the amount of study given to each portion of the Sacred Record, one thing is sure: There is no way in which the hours of the Sabbath may be spent more profitably than in a careful and conscientious study of God's Word. We sing of the "home over there." Why not study, more carefully and frequently, the Guide Book that alone can point the way from earth to heaven?

Commendable Legislation in Nevada.

Whatever may have been at fault with the law and social order of Nevada in the past, the State is nobly redeeming itself of late. By the most recent enactment it is unlawful to sell or give away cigarettes or cigarette papers to any man, woman or child. Any one who has noticed the pernicious effect of the cigarette habit upon those unfortunate enough to be affected by it, will rejoice in the triumph for right in Nevada. Better yet would it be if a similar prohibitive law were enacted and duly enforced in all the States. It would prove to be a great protection for the rising generation against this most objectionable habit. Every young man owes it to himself to follow the injunction, "Keep thyself pure," and it is the evident duty of the State to assist in this matter by legally ruling out cigarettes and all kindred agencies of evil.

Children Offered for Sale.

So pitifully extreme is the destitution in the famine-stricken portions of China that the poor are trying to sell their children, though they obtain but a pittance for them. Under date of Feb. 8 the State Department at Washington is receiving most distressing reports. Over 200,000 people in the district of Hwai-Juan are absolutely destitute. In the entire famine district,—as Dr. Lobenstine estimates,—at least 1,000,000 people will die of starvation, if not aided. One cent a day for each person is the smallest amount that will support life, so that $1,500,000 will be necessary to sustain the unfortunates for the five months during which the crop will ripen. Think of it,—one cent a day will save a life in famine-stricken China! Remember it when you are tempted to spend money for something that is useless or even worse. "Whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"

Signs of Promise in India.

The caste spirit has ever been India's greatest barrier to real progress. Recent reports show that slowly the old-time customs are giving way to more liberal ideas. At many places the high caste eat with the low caste or those of no caste at all. Widows of high caste are now encouraged in defiance of all prohibitions hitherto in force. There are strong movements everywhere throughout India to suppress child-marriage. This is especially true in the native state of Baroda. Schools are multiplying and the grade is rising. Less respect is being paid to the Brahman. Presents are not showered upon him as in the past, nor does he receive the extreme veneration of the people as in former times. Old temples are decaying, and few new ones are being erected, while the number of churches and mission schools is being rapidly enlarged. The phenomenal increase in the number of native Christians, and the progress of Christian work in general, is one of the marvels of the century.

The Passing of Confucianism.

Competent authority assures us that it is now becoming exceedingly difficult to procure, at the bookshops of China, any copies of the works of Confucius,—once the leading religious work of the Empire. The change which has taken place is a most momentous one. It is the most significant commentary on the depth and breadth of missionary influence in China. Still more remarkable is the fact that many of the bookshops are exceedingly anxious to obtain a stock of Bibles and Testaments,—a conclusive proof that there is considerable inquiry for them. There is hope for the future of any country which is anxious to obtain the Bible. It means that effectual Bible reading is to be done, which, in itself, is a great gain. "The entrance of thy Word giveth light."

Christ's Kingdom Not of This World.

Notwithstanding the direct command of Christ, prohibiting the participation of his followers in distinctly political affairs, Archbishop Ireland, in a recent address, advised Catholics "to promote, in every possible way, the election of Roman Catholics to Congress." He is not slow to make clear that "they can never expect to get their rights unless they put forth every effort to be properly represented." It will be seen that the future will witness some strenuous efforts, on the part of Rome, to gain control of political matters in this country, if at all possible. And yet, such an attitude of his professed followers was never contemplated by Christ when He distinctly affirms, "My kingdom is not of this world." His followers, we are told, "must not strive, but be gentle unto all men."

Temperance Losses in Indiana.

It will be regretted by all of our readers that Indiana has lost important ground in the matter of liquor suppression. The county option law of last year has seemingly been repealed, and local option by towns only is to take its place. This is a serious loss to the cause of temperance in Indiana, and extremely humiliating to the reform advocates of the State, as hereafter the larger towns and cities, unaided by country districts, will be unable to enact effective temperance measures. If, as is alleged, a general apathy among temperance workers has brought about the present result, there is need of renewed efforts for the cause of right, remembering that only by continual vigilance can there be hope of success. The apostle says, "Be not weary in well doing,"—an excellent motto for all lines of human endeavor.

Missions the Greatest Reform Agency.

Some weeks ago we referred to Andrew Carnegie's generous donation of $10,000,000 toward providing a permanent fund for the promotion of world peace. Since then the matter is being discussed, pro and con, by the various journals. While the generous and noble impulse that inspired the act is not questioned by any one, it will, in the opinion of many, hardly accomplish all that the donor anticipates. It is urged that if this great-hearted man had been a firm believer in the Word of God, he would have given his money to missions, so that the Gospel might be preached everywhere, thus ushering in more speedily, the benign reign of the Prince of Peace. It is a fact, beyond all question that all real reforms must originate, be nurtured, and finally be consummated under the auspices of gospel agencies. Only as men become imbued with the spirit of Christ, will they be real exponents of "love and good works."

Broken-down Family Altars.

In Old Testament times the altar of the Lord bore silent testimony to the spirituality of its worshipers. A departure from the service of God soon recorded itself in the decay of the altar. The same decay, spiritually speaking, is seen only too often when the altar has been allowed to go down. It is stated by one of our exchanges that in their large and influential denomination not even one-half of the families maintain religious services in the home, and that the same thing is probably true of other churches. The editor ascribes much of the corruption and dishonesty, everywhere apparent, to the lack of religious influences in the homes of the land. We do not know just how many families in the Church of the Brethren fail to have seasons of worship in the home, but we are sure of this one thing, that none can afford to have a broken-down family altar. The blessing of the Lord, promised to the two or more who "agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask," is a precious benediction to the entire household, that none can afford to miss.

First Minister of the Church of the Brethren

The Church He Organized.

BY T. T. MYERS.

He who does his best in the present, builds well for the future. Alexander Mack did larger things than he planned. He did the best he could. His work was bound to grow because it was wrought by a sincere soul in the truth. Truth abides. They who build their lives and their work in it will flourish. Mack did not seek the renown of starting a new church. All the records show that he wanted the least possible mention of himself in the new movement. He would not have his followers called "Mackites." With him it was all purely a leading and work of the Holy Spirit. The blessed Christ was to be supremely honored and exalted. His feeling was like that of John the Baptist when he said, "He must increase but I must decrease." The work of the Baptist grew with Christ increasing. The work of Mack also grew under the leadership of the blessed Jesus whom he sought to honor and glorify. We observe:

1. The Church He Organized Was a Truth-seeking Church.—To the few who came together at Schwarzenau in the beginning of the eighteenth century, on account of religious conviction, the Bible was a daily companion. They were earnest seekers after truth. They were not interested so much in what men said of the Bible as in what the Bible said. They wanted to be what the truth would have them be. They were willing to go where it would lead them, and to do what it would have them do. The very nature of the conditions prohibited them from adopting a closed creed. The Bible was an open book full of ever-revealing truth. For this they must have open hearts and lives. It must be an open book for us. The whole Bible, with all its light and all its possibilities for enlarging life, must be in our homes, and Sunday-schools, and churches, and at the Annual Meeting, as an open Book. We must bring to it an open spirit, willing to be guided by it. In all our worship and work we are to honor its truth.

2. It Was a Spiritual Church.—Mack and his associates were surrounded by so much dead formalism that they felt the need, all the more, of spirituality. Their study of the Bible led them to see that formal worship was dead worship before God. Not only was the Spirit to be a dominant factor in their worship, but also in their lives. Those little meetings they used to hold, in and near Schwarzenau, were full of the Spirit. Religion was a real work of grace in the heart. They had a blessed experience. Spirituality must characterize our worship and work. Mere form is without life. "The letter killeth but the Spirit maketh alive." I have to wonder if formality is not creeping too much into our churches. Let us pray that we may be kept from dead formalism.

3. It Was an Obeying Church.—The true church must have just as much form as Jesus gives it. Form without spirit is dead. Spirit without form is abnormal, if not impossible. Justifying faith has obedience. The church organized by Mack has the balance of form and spirit. It emphasizes, as important, all the doctrines and ordinances of the New Testament. Faith, repentance and baptism are at the door of entrance to its communion. Christ himself is the door. Within the church, for observance, are feet-washing, the Lord's supper, the communion, the kiss of fellowship, and the anointing. Christians must not take the oath; they must not go to war; they must not go to law with one another. These are contrary to the Word. By prayer and every possible spiritual help they are to build up in the holy faith.

Into the daily association of Mack there came many who did not consider it necessary to give literal obedience to the injunctions of Jesus. Many times, no doubt, they were asked to reconcile their belief with the words of the Savior, "Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" The faith and practices of the New Testament must characterize the church of Jesus Christ.

4. It Was a Church of Protest.—Both the civil and ecclesiastical conditions compelled them to be such a church. They did not believe in the union of church and state, because the state asked the church to do things that she could not consistently do. Her faith demanded her protest. She protested against taking the oath and going to war. She protested against the dead formalism of the state church. Her protest against worldliness, in all its forms, was fearless and strong. When we consider the nature and character of the world and the nature and character of the true church, we need not be surprised, nor should we be discouraged if large numbers do not come into her communion. A church of decided protest against evil is not likely to grow rapidly. While such a growth may be slow, it will be healthy and strong. We must be careful, however, to put the protest at the right place and not keep people out who ought to be in. The church is a training school rather than a house of saints. In it, by her culture, care and discipline, the weak are to be made strong and the strong stronger.

5. It Was a Missionary Church.—Its members were Spirit-impelled to pass the good things they experienced on to others. Every one was a missionary. Every one was a soul winner. Their religion was their chief concern. If the zeal and activity that characterized them had been continued, very, very much more would have been done up to this time. We have been too self-centered and self-satisfied. The religion of Jesus Christ is essentially missionary. While we regret that we have not made more progress with the good things that God entrusted to us, we are grateful for the progress we have made. The splendid missionary and educational spirit of the church today is certainly a revival of what she had in the beginning. When we consider the resources and opportunities of the church at this time, and the large vision that she has of blessed things, we ought to expect great things from her in the next decade or two. Personal consecration throughout the church will be the measure of her progress.

Our latest reports give us about 900 congregations and about 90,000 members. These are chiefly in the United States. We are also represented in Canada, Cuba, Denmark, Sweden, France, India, China and the Philippines. If all these become centers of power, there will go forth from them influences of faith and activity that will tell. When we look at the church which Mack organized appreciatively, and consider her faith and activity and work as they are to be seen today, we are made to say, "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." We show our gladness best by giving faithful devotion to her and to her Christ. Her mission in the world is worthy of the best that we can give.

What We Owe to Alexander Mack, Sr.

BY S. Z. SHARP.

Alexander Mack, Sr., born in 1679 at Schriesheim, in the Palatinate, Germany, and who died Feb. 19, 1735, at Germantown, Pa., stands as a unique figure among the reformers of his age. While Luther, Calvin, Zwingli, Wesley, and other great leaders of the Reformation, did much to eliminate many human traditions and practices from the church of their day, it was left for Mack alone to organize a church, free from all human creeds and practices, and build it according to the pattern shown by Christ and the apostles, upon the New Testament alone, as the only rule of faith and practice.

In determining what the Church of the Brethren owes to Alexander Mack, the elder, we must take into account his natural disposition, the influence of his teachers in molding his Christian character, the effect of his environments, the obstacles he encountered and surmounted, what he accomplished, and the legacy he bequeathed to the church he organized.

By nature he was of a generous and sympathetic disposition, as evidenced by the great sacrifice he made in giving up his wealth to save and protect the persecuted and distressed members of his church. He loved peace and eschewed controversy and used his best efforts to quiet all discord or dissension whenever it arose in the early days of the church. However, he exhibited a firmness and decision from which nothing could move him, whenever he had taken a position that he knew was right. To these mild, discreet, yet firm traits of his character, the church owes much that enabled him, as pilot, so skillfully to direct the little ship, Zion, safely through the turbulent sea of persecution when it was first launched.

His first religious teachers were his pious parents, reared in the Reformed Church. He started out on his earthly career "to fear God and keep his commandments." He soon discovered the hypocrisy, avarice, intolerance and tyranny of the three State churches,—the Catholic, the Lutheran, and the Reformed,—which then dominated Germany. Disgusted with their lack of evangelical religion, he became a Separatist, and turned to the Bible to learn the true way of salvation. He also became acquainted with the great reformers, Pietists and Separatists of his time, and their works which shook all Europe with their influence. Among these were Huss, Wycliff, Arndt and his "True Christianity," Philip Jacob Spener, who sought to gather those spiritually awakened in each congregation into little groups for study of the Bible and for prayer,—a practice which Mack and his company afterward followed.

From Jean Paul de Labadie he learned that spiritual mysticism which afterward disturbed some of our early members and from which Mack succeeded to steer our church clear. He was acquainted with the tracts of William Penn, teaching nonswearing, nonresistance, nonconformity to the world. He knew that eminent scholar and theologian, Jeremias Felbinger, who renounced infant baptism and taught believers' baptism, feet-washing, the Lord's supper, nonswearing,—in short the true doctrines of the New Testament. Through Gottfried Arnold, another ripe scholar and theologian, Mack became acquainted with church history from the time of the apostles to his own age. Mack himself was a scholar and untrammeled thinker, uninfluenced by religious enthusiasts like Böhme, or by the lower class of Pietists like the Münster fanatics.

His teachers were ripe scholars, university professors and students of unquestioned piety, and strenuous advocates of New Testament religion as taught and practiced by Christ and his apostles. Above all, the New Testament, which he so carefully studied, was his principal teacher and the final judge to which he appealed in all matters of religious controversy, and to its directions he conformed to the minutest degree.

We are indebted, as a church, to a man of such excellent natural disposition, so well equipped, intellectually and religiously, to clear away the rubbish of ages of degenerate religion, to build again the true church of the living God "upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Christ Jesus himself being the chief corner stone."

In estimating what we owe to Alexander Mack, as the organizer of the Church of the Brethren, we must also take into consideration his environments and the state of the religious world at the time the organization of the church was effected. For more than a thousand years, after the third century, the Catholic Church held undisputed sway over the Christian world. Every man's life and conscience was in the hands of the papal hierarchy. The Reformation in the sixteenth century broke this power in Germany. For more than thirty years the valley of the Rhine was a battle-field. War, rapine, murder and all forms of excess prevailed. When the yoke of the Catholic church was lifted, every form of religious cult sprang into being, from the rigid rule of the Catholics to absolute religious anarchy. Finally the Catholic, the Lutheran and the Reformed churches entered into a compact under the civil government, to be the only authorized churches in Germany, and then they became the persecutors of every dissenter. It was during these stirring times that Alexander Mack became a Separatist and cast his lot with the persecuted and despised dissenters from the established churches. He counted the cost, for it cost him his valuable mill and extensive vineyards, but he "esteemed the reproach of Christ of greater riches than the treasures of earth."

Persecuted by the three State churches, the dissenters of every type fled to Schwarzenau and Berleburg where a mild count for a while granted an asylum to all who were persecuted for conscience' sake. Here Mack associated with the Pietists and other Separatists for a while peaceably. They called each other brethren, but the various forms of religious beliefs which had obtained could not be harmonized into a compact body. There was no organized body and no means of correcting excesses that naturally spring up where there is no religious government. The injunction to turn over an offender to the church for correction after the first and second admonition, could not be carried out, for there was no church organization. This impressed Mack with the necessity of a religious organization. At this time Mack's intimate friend and colaborer in the ministry was Ernst Christoph Hochman, a fine scholar of wonderful eloquence, and of the purest life and character. The corruption in the State churches made him a Separatist. In doctrine, he and Mack agreed on the main points as now held by the Church of the Brethren. He had stirred all northern Germany with his powerful preaching, and had prepared the soil for extensive sowing. He had often accompanied Mack on preaching tours, and had received stripes and imprisonments for his wages. Mack advocated the organizing of the faithful into a church. Hochman, seeing the corruption that obtained in other organized churches, feared to take such a step, and let the auspicious opportunity pass by.

The faithful believers selected Mack as their leader, who organized them into a church after the exact pattern shown by Christ and his apostles. He went beyond all other reformers in rejecting all the human traditions and practices of the Catholic Church, and omitting none taught by Christ and his apostles. Though his church was greatly persecuted, it never persecuted any one. It fell to the lot of Mack to defend his church against the specious attacks of learned men of his day. Unlike Luther, Calvin, Zwingli, and Wesley, he left us a church untrammeled by human creeds, confessions of faith, church constitutions and disciplines, giving, instead, the New Testament, the whole New Testament and nothing but the New Testament to be our rule of faith and practice,—a church,—and the only church,—observing ALL the commandments of the New Testament,—the Church of the Brethren.

Some Incidents in Mack's Life.

BY L. A. PLATE.

His Love and Self-Sacrifice.

Of the early Christians it could be truthfully said, "Behold, how these people love each other," and even their enemies conceded this commendable attribute to them. That in the closing years of the seventeenth century a like spirit of loving-kindness should have been so conspicuously manifest as it was in Alexander Mack, is as remarkable as it is rare. To understand the full import of Mack's unprecedented concern for others, we must get a correct understanding of the circumstances affecting the genesis and later history of the church. The Brethren were able to organize, and enter upon congregational duties, at a time and place especially favorable. This, however, was not a permanent blessing vouchsafed to them. As dissenters from the State churches they were not popular with the ruling powers of the country, nor with the clergy who viewed new "isms" with decided disfavor. Persecution, therefore,—strong, vindictive and unrelenting,—descended upon Mack and his little flock. Dire forebodings as to the future filled the minds of the humble believers, for who could pay the excessive fines and penalties continually levied by the authorities? It was here that Mack came nobly to the rescue. His extensive vineyards, his remunerative mill and other property were freely sacrificed to help the persecuted ones in their struggle for liberty from loathsome prisons and even death itself. Had not Mack so willingly and cheerfully given of his substance, it is quite possible that a serious thinning of the ranks,—if not entire dissolution,—might have come upon the early church at Schwarzenau. His abounding love and self-sacrifice are an everlasting monument to the genuineness of his religion, and a credit to us as a church.

Among the Hollanders.

Not until the death of Count Henry, at Schwarzenau, did the hand of persecution become strong enough to drive the members of the Schwarzenau church entirely away from Germany. Forced to flee for their life, Mack and his flock went northward, and found a safe refuge among the Hollanders of West Friesland. Like the disciples of old, who, upon the persecution at Jerusalem, went everywhere preaching the Word, so this little flock seems to have made the most of their opportunities while in a strange land. Somehow Mack's influence must have so fully permeated the lives of his members that they became a power for good, and we read that a number of Hollanders espoused the faith of the Brethren. The refugees must have succeeded, by consistent and commendable living, to endear themselves to the people of Holland, for when finally the Brethren determined to embark for America, ample provisions and many gifts were bestowed upon them by the Hollanders. Thus, like the apostolic church, Mack's little flock found "favor with all the people."

Mack's Ministry in Sower's Residence.

Paul, in referring to the work of Priscilla and Aquila, sends greetings to the "church that is in their house," and, later on, speaks of "Nymphas, and the church which is in his house." It seems to have been the common practice, in apostolic times, to use the commodious dwellings of the saints as places of worship, and the church at Germantown apparently followed apostolic precedent in making use of Sower's large residence for their meetings during the early years of their congregational activity. Here Alexander Mack labored earnestly and faithfully, ably seconded by Peter Becker, who had arrived some years previous with a little company of members. To the credit of the mother church be it remembered that harmony and cooperation characterized the work of the congregation under the watchful care of the devoted Mack. Never were the results of competent and faithful leadership more completely shown than during those early days when the little band, united by the well-directed efforts of the consecrated Mack, bent every effort to the upbuilding of the Lord's cause. Were a like spirit of harmonious cooperation to prevail in all parts of our great Brotherhood today, many of the puzzling questions, now disturbing the serenity of the Lord's people, would flee like the mists of the morning at the approach of the noonday sun.

Mack's Keen Perception.

As a true shepherd of the sheep, Mack was ever intent upon the spiritual well-being of his flock and he always sought to guard the membership against the erroneous doctrines of religious adventurers. History records that on one occasion a traveling preacher, who had charmed the entire neighborhood by his dazzling and ornate eloquence, came to Germantown. Mack was prevailed upon to hear the modern Boanerges, but being forewarned by John to "believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God," he soon noticed the utter shallowness of the man, as well as his erroneous teachings. At once Mack warned the members against any further attendance at the meetings of the traveling preacher, maintaining that his pronounced anti-peace sentiment could not help but pervert the minds of his hearers. Mack further alleged that the man would finally end up by becoming a "field preacher" (military chaplain). Only a few weeks later Mack's keen perception was fully vindicated. The preacher joined a military company in the capacity indicated by Mack, and his later history proved the correctness of the forecast given, concerning his general make-up, and amply justified the warning why peace-loving people should not hear him.

How Mack Sought to Restore Beissel.

Too much emphasis can not be placed upon the most commendable efforts of Mack to win the recreant Beissel into church fellowship again. Perhaps the love and union characterizing Mack's own congregation brought out the more clearly,—in sharp and hideous contrast,—the deplorable disruption instigated by Beissel. The matter weighed heavily on the heart of Mack, and in October of 1730 he resolved to make an attempt to restore the wayward leader and his deluded followers. Meeting Beissel at a gathering in the Falckner Swamp house, he proposed that a solution of the difficulty be sought by means of fervent prayer, with the proviso that the one finding himself at fault make an humble confession. Beissel, however, rejected all overtures of reconciliation, though they were lovingly proffered by Mack on this and a later occasion. Thus the first unhappy division in the church,—which might have been so easily adjusted, had Beissel met the advances of Mack in a similar spirit of love,—passed into history, though, unfortunately, not the last fruitless attempt along that line. May not the church in these latter days learn the great and momentous lesson from Mack's saintly and tender solicitude for the erring, that love,—that greatest of the heavenly graces,—"will never fail" in its gentle mission to those who go astray or fall by the wayside, even though at times we apparently fail in our effort at reconciliation?

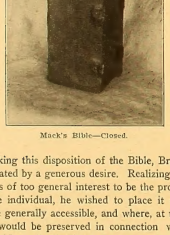
Alexander Mack's Bible.

BY JOHN S. FLORY.

In Two Parts.—Part One.



I HAVE often wondered about Alexander Mack's Bible, whether anything were known about it, or whether any trace of it could be had. If it could be recovered, what a precious relic it would be! And is it not strange that it should be entirely lost? The prominence of the great leader and the importance of the work he inaugurated were understood in his day. These things, together with the high esteem in which he was universally held, would have invested any of his possessions with unusual interest; and this would have been especially true of his Bible. Had he left it at his death, his family would certainly have cherished and preserved it. Thus it would have become a family relic and heirloom, its value and interest would have been recognized, and would have increased with the years. Nothing but a great family calamity could thereafter account for its loss, and of this there would certainly be some record. Yet not a word of such a misfortune has come to us.

Such reflections are almost inevitable when one thinks of the interest that naturally attaches to the Bible of a great religious leader, and of the possibility that it may still be in existence. But if this were true, why is nothing known of it? In all of our church histories not a word of mention is made of it. In no other writings, to my knowledge, has it ever been referred to. Might it not be stored away in one or another of the great libraries of the country? But then it would be known. Might it be lurking in some out-of-the-way garret or heap of rubbish? Sad fate of such a treasure! Above all, would not the noted antiquary of the Brethren church, Abram H. Cassel, have discovered it, if it had been in existence?

But these speculations bring us no nearer to a discovery. The facts are that Bro. Cassel never discovered it, neither did it find lodging in any library or garret. Yet it has been in existence all these years. It now lies before me on my desk, as I write. As I turn its soiled pages, worn and begrimed by long years and much usage, it seems to emit a sacred exhalation. Of course this is only imagination; but the marks of genuineness are so positive in its every detail that there is no room for doubt that this is the identical volume owned and used by the great leader and organizer of our church.

How It Was Preserved.

Here, then, in brief, is the history of its transmission and preservation. When Alexander Mack died, in 1735, he left the Bible in the possession of his son, Alexander Mack, Jr. After his death in 1803 it became the property of the Germantown congregation, the church in which both the Macks had lived and died. After some years the congregation at Germantown presented the volume to Eld. Philip Rothenbarger, who had been an ardent admirer of the second Alexander Mack. Philip Rothenbarger gave the book, in turn, to Eld. Henry Kurtz, his life-long friend, in 1841. On his death, in 1874, it was left, with numerous other valuables, to his children, and in time became the property of his son, Eld. Jacob H. Kurtz, of Poland, Ohio, who is now in his seventy-fourth year. A short time ago Bro. Kurtz gave the book to the writer of these lines, to be placed in the Bridgewater College library, where it is at last to have a permanent home.

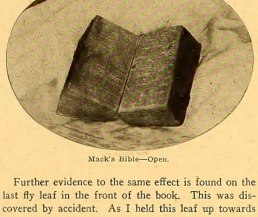
Mack's Bible—Closed.

In making this disposition of the Bible, Bro. Kurtz was actuated by a generous desire. Realizing that the volume is of too general interest to be the property of a private individual, he wished to place it where it would be generally accessible, and where, at the same time, it would be preserved in connection with our church. Naturally the library of one of our colleges is where this could best be done.

The Evidence.

Bro. Jacob H. Kurtz vouches for the correctness of the statements made above. They are also corroborated by an inscription in the Bible itself. This is on the second fly leaf, and is written in German script, with an unsteady hand and a bad pen. With some difficulty Bro. Kurtz and I deciphered it. It may be translated as follows:

This House Bible,



Formerly the property of Bro. Alexander Mack, Sr., who died already in 1735, and from Alexander Mack, Jr., who became very old and lived even into the present century, came into my hands as a present from the church in Germantown through Bro. Philip Rothenbarger in 1841

Henry Kurtz.

On the next to the last fly leaf of the volume is written, in the well-known artistic hand of the second Alexander Mack this inscription:

My Fa., A. M., born 1679, married 1700,
died 1735, the 19th of February.
My M., A. M. M., born 1680, died 1720,
in the month of September.

These abbreviations for his father, Alexander Mack, and his mother, Anna Margarita Mack, are, of course, clear beyond question.

Mack's Bible—Open.

Further evidence to the same effect is found on the last fly leaf in the front of the book. This was discovered by accident. As I held this leaf up towards the light, a short time ago, I detected something written on it. Examination, however, showed each side of the leaf to be free from any sort of writing. Further investigation revealed the fact that two leaves had been pasted together. With some difficulty and the partial mutilation of one of them they were separated. And here was found, in a plain, legible hand this inscription:

This Book the property of Alexander Mack.
Received from my father in the year 1735, the 23rd of January.

These words make clear that the Bible was a gift from the founder of the church to his son and namesake, less than a month before his death. So the identity of the volume can be vouched for, I believe, beyond all question.

Here, then, is the very Bible used by the organizer of the Church of the Brethren near the beginning of the eighteenth century. Here is the volume through which he loved to leaf, in which he marked some of his favorite texts, and from which, doubtless, he preached many an edifying discourse. Would it not be a great satisfaction to have preserved, even in outline, some of the sermons he preached from this book? This pleasure may not be granted us, but there are certain markings of interest, to which further reference may be made later.

I am glad the evidence is so convincing, and that we can have such full assurance that the volume before us is none other than the one owned and used by the great leader and organizer of our Fraternity. But as this paper grows too lengthy, a description of it must be left till another time. May our contemplation of the volume inspire in us the same devotion to duty and the same earnest desire to live out all the principles of its teaching, as it did in the case of our great leader and guide.

Mack's Grave at Germantown.

BY G. N. FALKENSTEIN.

[This article reached us too late to be entered on the list on page 98.]

When I located in Germantown, in June, 1893, I discovered, what was a great surprise to me and many thousands of members throughout the Brotherhood,—that Alexander Mack, Sr., was not buried in the Brethren cemetery at the old church. He was not buried where he is now, and my subject might properly read, "Mack's Two Graves at Germantown."

It was not difficult to find his grave, where he had been laid to rest so long ago. The church knew the place,—always has known it,—but, strange to relate, the descendants had largely lost sight of the sacred spot, as a little incident, alluded to later on, will clearly show.

I soon found some very interesting things connected with his death, and also with his burial place. When Alexander Mack., Sr., died, in 1735, he probably died on the premises of the present church property,—for the Brethren had built there, some years before that date,—but positive information along this line is lacking. We do know, however, that the Brethren cemetery was not opened until about fifty-five years after Bro. Mack's death.

There was a general custom prevailing in that early day, that persons were buried on their own ground. A public burying-place had, however, been opened, for some years, in upper Germantown. This place was often called the "Upper Burying Ground," but more generally "Axe's," after the man who gave the ground, or from whom, perhaps, the ground was purchased. Into this public cemetery the Brethren, therefore, tenderly laid their beloved leader.

Buried One Hundred and Fifty-nine Years.

As I stood at this grave for the first time and often afterwards, as I revisited it, a feeling of inexpressible loneliness came over me. It seemed such a hard decree, that he, who was so beloved of his people, and is still so endeared to the hearts of his Brethren in later generations, should sleep here in the midst of strangers. Could his body be removed?

Legally, I had no right; neither had the church, likely, any right. His descendants had, I knew, but these were widely scattered, and, perhaps, not interested. After so many years, would there be anything to move? Had not his body crumbled to dust, long before now? But, if only dust, I argued, that dust should repose in the midst of his Brethren and his family, and so near the altar, where the sacred fire, which he had kindled, had been kept burning by his faithful followers. These, and many other questions and problems came up for answer and solution.

"A. M."

What hollow mockery in epitaphs,—in untruthful ones! On the other hand, what unwritten volumes may be expressed in a truthful one, or, it may be, in its absence!

Some time before his death, Bro. Mack called his sons to his bedside, and said to them, "When I am dead, don't mark my grave, or they might some day want to erect a monument over my grave." He seemed to have a realization of the importance of the work which he established. As dutiful sons, and with sincere regard, they protested against the distressing idea that their dear father should sleep in a nameless grave, and the grave itself be lost sight of. He listened to their plea, and then compromised with them, by giving them permission to put simply his initials on his gravestone. And so it happened, that he never had an epitaph; and so it happens, he will never have a monument.

How faithfully these sons carried out their father's wish, is proved by the plain, small blue marble gravestone, with this simple record: "Hier ruhen die Gebeine A. M., geboren 1679; gestorben 1735." (Here rest the bones of A. M., born 1679, died 1735.)

But is not here written his life's history? The man of God needs no monument; but when a man desires and builds for himself a monument of marble or granite, it is much to be feared, he needs it in the absence of something more enduring.

The Lost Grave.

There were many months of inquiry, of effort, of disappointment, and yet hope, but still delay. At one time I approached one of the most prominent descendants of Bro. Mack in regard to this subject of removing the remains to the Brethren cemetery. "Why, yes," said he, "I would be very glad to do so, but I can not find where he is buried. I have searched in every old cemetery in and around Philadelphia and I can not find his grave." I not only told him where he is buried but I took him to the grave. As we stood before the unpretentious, blue marble slab, he said, " I saw this grave many times, but did not know what 'A. M.' meant."

This illustrates what I intimated above,—that the family had largely lost sight of the grave of their forefather.

In course of time I met Mr. J. Z. D. Davis, of San Francisco, Cal., a man of great wealth, who afterward gave the money to build the new church. He showed me great kindness, and manifested much appreciation of my interest in trying to build up the mother church. He listened to my expressed desire to have the remains removed, and then said, "Make the necessary arrangements, and proceed with the removal, and I will pay all expenses, including a tombstone for the new grave."

The Remains and Their Removal.

The time set for the removal was 3 P. M., Nov. 8, 1894,—the day of our love feast, but as it proved to be a very rainy day, the matter was postponed. The removal then took place the following Tuesday at 3 P. M., Nov. 13, 1894. This is more than sixteen years ago, and as there is perhaps no one else living who has original notes and records, I shall, therefore, put some things on careful record in this "Memorial" Messenger.

As such matters must become a part of official records in Philadelphia, I employed a regular undertaker, who had charge of the exhuming and removal, from one cemetery to the other. The remains consisted of almost a complete skeleton; only a few small bones were missing. This was owing to a peculiar condition of the ground.

I tenderly held in my hands the shapely skull. Of its size and shape, and of its squarely set, strong jaw, etc., much might be said, as indicating strength of character, and powerful leadership among men. The animal matter had all decayed, and so all hardness and toughness were gone, and only the mineral matter remained in the bones.

On being exposed to the air many of the smaller bones crumbled in handling. All these bones, with the dust surrounding them, were carefully placed in a strong box, two feet seven inches by seventeen inches in size. The dust, or ashes, indicated that Bro. Mack had been buried in a walnut casket, and we found eight small coffin handles. The new casket, or oak box, had two large handles, and on top an engraved copper plate, with the following inscription: "Alexander Mack, 1679-1735. Removed from Axe's Burying Ground, 1894."

The Services.

I requested permission of the descendants to hold brief services. It was gladly granted, and many expressed their appreciation of this proposition. The services were held in the old church, and thus, for a brief period, the mortal remains of Bro. Mack, Sr., reposed there. Bro. T. T. Myers, then pastor of the Philadelphia church, now teaching in Juniata College, assisted in the services. The opening of the services consisted of singing No. 598 (old Hymnal), the reading of 1 Cor. 15: 50-58, and prayer. Then followed a brief account of the life, the character, and the work of Bro. Mack, ending with a closing prayer. In accordance with the life and character of Alexander Mack, simplicity marked the final funeral services. The same simplicity also characterizes the humble surroundings where now his dust reposes.

Elizabethtown, Pa.

Alexander Mack, Jr.

BY SAMUEL B. HECKMAN.

Alexander Mack, the second, was an illustrious son of an illustrious father; illustrious through unselfish and untiring devotion to a work for making simple and pure the worship of God, for bettering men's lives, and for the saving of souls.

Born but four years after the organization of the church to which the father's life was so earnestly and consecratedly devoted, the son grew up with and in this church, and after the father's death the son took up, with equal zeal, the father's work, and became, as minister and elder of the congregation at Germantown, one of the most influential forces in shaping and guiding the church during its early history in America.

When, on account of persecutions, the members of the first congregation were obliged, in 1720, to leave their homes at Schwarzenau, Alexander Mack, who was then a lad of eight years, went with his family to Holland. Here the next nine years of his life were spent. No definite account of these years is given us. Perhaps he was in school part of the time, for he seems to have known the Dutch language, but this can only be surmised. According to the record, young Mack was received into membership of the church, through baptism, when he was in his seventeenth year, which would mean the year 1728, and, therefore, previous to the family's leaving Holland for America. The year following this event in the young man's life, he came with his father and family, and members of the church sojourning in Holland, to Germantown, Pa. The succeeding six years were comparatively quiet and uneventful ones, spent in close association with his father, to whom he was always very greatly attached, and in the service of his church.

The death of Alexander Mack, Sr., in 1735, brought a crisis to the son's life. Having lost the wise counsel of his father, he seemingly lost the guiding spirit of his life. He was overtaken by a melancholy which weighed so heavily upon him that he felt that his death was near, and he made preparations for it. At this distressing time he came under the influence of Stephen Koch, who had been once a member of the church but had wandered away because of strong mystical doctrines which he had absorbed. In October, 1737, Koch persuaded Mack to take up his abode with him in a house on the Wissahickon. Others joined them and they spent several months here in quiet living, in meditation and in prayer. This experience led Mack to seek further retirement, and in March, 1738, he joined the Ephrata Society at Ephrata, Pennsylvania.

This Ephrata Society was founded in 1732-33 by Conrad Beissel who had been for a brief time a member of the Brethren church, but had to withdraw because of his pronounced mystical tendencies, and the unusual doctrines which he wanted to practice. The society flourished during Beissel's life and became an important center of several industries, of hymn-writing, of book-binding, and of printing. It was communistic in government. The members practiced a monastic system of life; they wore a kind of monastic garb, advocated celibacy, observed the Seventh Day as their Sabbath, and had various other unusual and mystical tendencies in their life. Unfortunately this society has often been considered a part of the Brethren church, and, as a result, the queer customs and ceremonies and beliefs of the followers of Beissel have been attributed to the church itself.

There is little to be said of Mack's life during the few years he spent at Ephrata. He participated in the religious rites of the society but he seemingly had no prominent part in its affairs, and, so far as can be learned, he did no literary work. That he was not altogether satisfied with his life there, can be inferred through his readiness to leave whenever opportunities offered themselves. Mack left Ephrata for all time and returned to his old home in Germantown probably in 1746. It is known that he was given joint oversight, with Christopher Sower, of the congregation of that place in June, 1748. In order to have been intrusted with such responsibility he must have been fully received again into the church some time previous to this date.

This marks the end of Mack's unhappy, restless spirit. He was now done with the Beissel Society and all forms of religious extravagances. This is especially emphasized in a letter he wrote to his brother, who was at Ephrata, and who had urged him to return to that place. He refused kindly but very decidedly.

Alexander Mack now began his long career of usefulness in his community, and in his church as minister, elder, and bishop. He was married Jan. 1, 1749, to Elizabeth Nice, and had a family of two sons and six daughters. He lived a quiet, happy life with his family, reaching the advanced age of ninety-one years. He was always strong and vigorous, and kept busily engaged in the affairs of life until the very end of his days. He was engaged in the weaving business in Germantown, and conducted an establishment of considerable proportions. Records in his private account book show that among the things he manufactured were shirts, caps and stockings. Bishop Mack labored quietly but unceasingly for the welfare and upbuilding of the church. His love of God and of humanity, his sane judgment, his kind-heartedness, and his broad-mindedness made him a strong and popular counselor in the church and in the community. He was not a powerful public speaker, though an active and a much beloved minister. His greatest influence was wielded, probably, through his wise counsel and through his writings. His ready and forceful means of expression of opinions was through letters. He carried on an extensive correspondence, relative for the most part to church affairs and Christian citizenship, and in this way his influence reached far beyond the limits of his home congregation.

It is greatly to be regretted that to most members of the Brethren church, Alexander Mack is known only as a pious worker in his congregation and a worthy leader and counselor in shaping the policies of the church. He was all this, it is true, but he was much more. He was decidedly the most literary character of the Brethren church during the first century of its existence. He deserves to be known as an author, and to be recognized as the first poet of the Church of the Brethren.

Claim cannot be made, of course, that Mack should be ranked among America's greater poets, but when the religious writers of the Colonial period are considered, he deserves prominent recognition. His poems are all religious in character, and often contemplative but not melancholy nor morbid. They are healthful, and show that their author lived among men and things, and that he was alive to the happenings of the world. In many of his verses occur real gems of language and thought. Among the shorter productions are a number of hymns, and occasional poems of great charm. Mack was fond of paraphrasing passages of Scripture and arranging them in meter and rhyme. Several of the great narratives of the Bible are thus beautifully retold. The author's longer poems were contributions to the Geistliche Magasien, a religious periodical published by Christopher Sower in the years 1763 to 1772. This magazine, it should be noted, was the first of its kind to be printed in America, and among the first periodicals of any kind, to appear in the New World. This is a distinct tribute to the zeal and early literary activity of the Brethren as well as a tribute to the energy and achievement of the Germans in America. In all sixty-four numbers of this magazine were published, and five of these were given entirely to the printing of poems of Alexander Mack. One of these longer poems is especially attractive. It consists of a series of short poems called, " Poems for Young People."

During the later years of the author's life he established a custom of composing a short poem in commemoration of his birthday, which custom he continued until his death. These verses, written in the author's private diary, reveal his innermost feelings and show how clear and vigorous was his thinking to the very end of a long life.

While Mack was distinctly a writer of verse, it should be noted that he also wrote several doctrinal prose works. In 1803,—a few months later than he, himself, believed would be the close of his life,—at the age of ninety-one years, one month and twenty days, Alexander Mack fell asleep, to awaken in the Father's house.

New York City, 450 West 149th St.

To ignore the missionary command of the Bible is to reduce the whole book to an absurdity. It is not that here and there are missionary texts, injunctions or suggestions, and that a careful student might painfully extract from certain proof-texts a defense of missionary effort; but it is that the whole book is a clear, ringing and everlasting missionary injunction.

THE ROUND TABLE

The Aged Ministers.

BY D. H. BAKER.

I HAVE been reading in "Our Saturday Night" what the author has to say about the kindness and courtesies shown to an aged minister, years ago. The writer feels that it might be helpful to give an incident, too, on the other side of the question.

About twenty-five years ago one of aged ministers, after preaching, stood at the gate, outside of the church. The people were nearly all gone. I asked him where he wanted to go. He said he wanted to go to a certain place, but the people merely spoke to him and did not invite him to their home. His eyes were filled with tears. Of course, some one took care of him and saw that he got home on Monday. This dear, aged brother spent his money and time serving the church, and died a poor man.

I will tell you of another incident. In this case an aged minister and wife drove eight miles to fill an appointment. After meeting was dismissed, he spoke to several brethren, and the wife also talked to a number of the sisters, but no one invited them. They had to drive the eight miles back home for dinner. The wife said that those with whom she conversed treated her coolly. Even Sister A and Sister B treated her rather frigidly. Then, thinking of the past, the old minister said: "Do you remember that cold, snowy day when we buried Sister A's father?" Then he again mused on past occurrences and said: "We also helped to bury Sister B's mother. It was right in harvest, on a week day, I went to town for a hand to take my place in the field. I finally got a carpenter to drop his tools and come. I had to borrow a horse, so that the harvester could be kept going. After the funeral, I bade the weeping people good-bye, but not a word of thanks or appreciation was offered. The children were not members of the church at that time, but the family was quite wealthy."

The minister would have been glad for enough to have paid for the man he hired. But he was out of pocket to that extent. Possibly it was partly the fault of these aged, well-meaning preachers. They might have taught the people better, and yet it is quite possible for us to know better and to do better, even without any special teaching. We should see to it that those who preach the Word do not have to suffer.

A New Plan of the Enemy.

BY OTHO WINGER.

IT was a general cause of much joy among the Christian people in Indiana and some other States, to know that the State Boards of Education were recommending to the teachers and high school students a greater study of the Bible. The Bible as a literary study has been taken up in teachers' institutes. Special classes in the high schools have been conducted with the apparent purpose to teach the students more about the Sacred Book.

It now appears, however, that in many places the truth of God's Word will be very poorly taught. It is a sad fact, but one that is certainly true, that our high schools are rapidly being filled with many men who are thoroughly in sympathy with the theories of Darwinian evolution and spurious criticism. In many places the teaching of the Bible falls into the hands of these men and women—those who know absolutely nothing of the great spiritual truths of the Bible, and have only a very imperfect knowledge of its historical facts. Many of them are outspoken enemies of the church. Then, into the young, impressionable and unsuspecting minds of the youth, they pour their poisonous teachings, when there is no one present who is able to present and defend the whole truth. The future and eternity alone will reveal to us the awful harvest from much of this sowing.

You may imagine, my brother, that such is not the case in your town. A good elder recently said that if he had a son to educate he would send him to his home high school. At the same time the principal of that high school was a free and outspoken enemy of the Bible. Your situation may be a similar one. In some cases you may not be able to withdraw your child altogether from such an environment, but you should at least be alive to the situation and strive to counteract the baneful influence. Better, by far, no academic education whatever, than a Godless and Christless education. Once inject the poison into the minds of the youth and it will be hard to eradicate. By far the better way is to place your son or daughter in a school where the atmosphere breathes of trust and implicit faith in the truths of God's Eternal Word.

Don't Worry.

BY A. G. CROSSWHITE.

TODAY, as I sit looking out of the window at the ceaseless downpour of rain, I naturally wonder when it is going to cease, as I have my plans laid for certain things that are materially affected by this kind of weather. There are other times when rain would be welcome, and the more the better; but what of it? Who's doing this? What produces the "blues" any way?

The settling-down process is likely to drive one into a corner where "selfishness" holds sway, and where conditions are not much improved. Let the weather be what it may, we are apt to find our sweetest consolation in the thought that I am prepared for it. If it rains, my family and stock are well protected. If it snows, my supply of clothing and fuel is adequate. My crops need just the kind of weather we are getting, and so we are comforted, while others are distressed and in actual need.

How long can we admire the beautiful, invigorating sunshine without wondering when the rain will come? Our restless human nature demands a change every few days, and the best of us are prone to worry.

It is hard to tell which is better,—worrying over what has been or that which is to come. But to tell the real truth about it, we might just as well spend the day in blowing soap bubbles and watching them burst into invisible atoms of nothingness as to worry over, either what cannot be corrected, or what might be made better; for a new path can be made in half the time that it requires to straighten up an old one.

So, don't worry, for it makes you look older, and wrinkles and frowns are hard to iron out.

The Pulse of the Church.

BY MARY V. HARSHBARGER.

IF the pulse of the church is the prayer meeting, what about the church that has no prayer meeting? It would seem as though the church that fails to feel the need, should be "instructed in the ways of the Lord more perfectly."

It surely will weaken the cause, if the church doors are allowed to remain closed from one Lord's Day till another, with enough members in walking distance to keep up a live and interesting midweek prayer meeting. Satan might take advantage of the opportunity, if we neglect the assembling of ourselves together. "Be not slothful, but fervent in Spirit, serving the Lord."

"Man."

BY RUFUS A. ROBINSON.

MAN is a wonderful being. He comes into this world not of his own accord, and leaves not as he chooses.

Man is born, not made. Scientists have labored for years to produce life, such as in man, but have failed. Never will they be able to produce life such as that with which man has been endowed, because "it is of God."

In unfolding life we look into the very face of God. Man cometh into the world as a flower, but soon is withered and is gone. We joy at his coming, we weep at his going, yet we know not from whence he came or whither he goeth.

Man seeks out many wonderful inventions. He perfects many wonderful works, yet he, with all his thoughtfulness and mighty power of invention, hath never been able to change the way of his coming into the world or his going out thereof.

The intent of man's heart is to do good, but he is often overcome of evil.

Man will labor through life to accumulate wealth, and at death would give it all to live one hour longer.

He will live through life thoughtless of his God, and at death call on him for mercy. "Oh, man, set thine house in order while thou livest, for thou shalt die."

Just beyond, in eternity, before the great judgment bar, we must meet the great judge who holds in his hand the book which records the deeds of this wonderful man. It seals his great destiny in the beyond.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' TOPIC

The Schools That Made Joseph Great.

THE HOME SCHOOL.

Gen. 37: 23-33.

For Sunday Evening, February 26, 1911.

In Joseph's ancestry there were all sorts of people—good and bad. He inherited every phase of human nature.

I. Family Influences.—(1) The household was composed of his Shemitic grandfather, Isaac, his father and three wives (Rachel, his own mother, dead; 35: 18), their ten sons, and his own brother, Benjamin. (2) A home with four sets of children (30: 5, 10, 12, 17). Think of it! (3) Peace and love, or quarrels and bickering? Joseph chose to repeat the good traits, and overcame the evil tendencies of his inheritance.

II. Joseph's Place in the Family.—(1) A favorite son. "A coat" (V. 3). "Hated" (V. 4). (2) "Brought . . . evil report" (V. 2). An act of falsehearing or righteous courage? (3) Three evils of this partiality: (a) It was a wrong to the older brothers; (b) It endangered the favorite son; (c) The coat came back a plague (Vs. 31-34).

III. Joseph's Dreams and Visions (37: 5-11).—(1) Were they the outgrowth of his ambition or of his prospects as the future heir? Did he feel that his day was coming? (2) Their value as ideals in his preparation.

IV. Entrusted with a Difficult Mission (Vs. 12-22).—(1) A long (70 miles), dangerous journey on foot and alone (Vs. 15-17). (2) The plan: (a) To slay (V. 20). (b) Put into pit (V. 22). (c) To sell (Vs. 25-28). (3) The wronged father: (a) "Sent the coat"—by a servant. (b) "This we have found" (V. 22). (c) Cruelty, cowardice, falsehood.

Note.—(1) Almost every sin requires lying. (2) As favorite son, Joseph was in great danger of being spoiled.

PRAYER MEETING

Two Ways—Two Destinies.

Matt. 7: 13, 14.

For Week Beginning February 26, 1911.

I. The Way into Life.

1. It Is an Open Way.—While narrow, thank God, it is open to all who will enter. "Behold, I have set before thee an open door" (Rev. 3: 8). Fenced up by the law and closed by sin, Christ opened the way of salvation by bearing our sins and being obedient unto death. It is "a new and living way,"—consecrated for us. No back doors into God's kingdom (John 14: 6).

2. It Is a Narrow Way.—Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way. Sacrifice is the condition of entrance. Man must dispose of all human besetments. Self-righteousness will fail. The "straitness" is not due to God's design but to man's unfitness (Matt. 16: 24-27).

3. It Is thy Way of the Few.—There are but few, because the many prefer darkness to light,—their deeds being evil. Some put off their entrance, while others hope to stumble into it by chance. No chance work here. "STRIVE to enter." "SEEK me with all your heart" (Matt. 6: 33).

II. The Way to Destruction.

1. A Broad Way.—It suits the carnal mind. Plenty of room for sinful pleasure. The world, the flesh and the devil have full scope. Broad enough for the staggering drunkard, the dishonest, the unclean, the scoffer, the proud, the haughty, the religious formalist (Luke 13: 24-28).

2. A Crowded Way.—"Many go in thereat." Easy going downhill. The broad way attracts. The heart of man is caught by the glitter of Satan's deceit. His craftiness ensnares many (Gal. 6: 7, 8).

3. A Fatal Way.—There is but one possible end to this way,—destruction! The man who loves and follows sin is sure to perish. "The wages of sin is death." The choice is with us. What will it be (Deut. 30: 15)?

HOME AND FAMILY

Only a Word.

Tell me something that will be
Joy through all the years to me.
Let my heart forever hold
One divinest grain of gold.
Just a simple little word,
Yet the dearest ever heard;
Something that will bring me rest
When the world seems all distressed.

As the candle in the night
Sends abroad its cheerful light.
So a little word may be
Like a lighthouse in the sea.
When the winds and waves of life
Fill the breast with storm and strife,
Just one star my boat may guide
To the harbor, glorified.

Sackcloth Within.

BY ELIZABETH D. ROSENBERGER.

"And when the king . . . rent his clothes. Behold he had sackcloth within, upon his flesh" (2 Kings 6: 30).

THE city of Samaria was besieged by Ben-hadad, king of Syria. The siege was a long one and the people in Samaria were in sore distress. The famine was severe, and many people died of starvation. One day the king passed by on the wall, and a woman told him her tale of suffering. As the king listened, he rent his clothes and they saw that he had sackcloth within upon his flesh. This must have been unusual, and this is the reason we have this record. The king's garments usually were costly, and of a splendor suiting his rank. That a king should wear sackcloth, was a matter of comment; and that he should wear it hidden from view, was a circumstance peculiar enough to excite interest and comment.

Everybody wears sackcloth somewhere, and at sometimes. The only difference lies in the fact that some people wear it as an outer garment, with ashes on the head, while here and there one, like this king, wears it where it cannot be seen. The sorrow of a kingly man or queenly woman is never worn conspicuously. One of these women had a great sorrow, one of those terrible misfortunes that cannot be hidden. Her little world all knew of it and commented on it. Although the woman knew that she was an object of pity to those who loved her, she wrapped the mantle of silence about her, shrinking from the slightest allusion to the affair. In her reserve and seclusion she hoped to be able to forget and take up her life with its burdens again. She had sackcloth within upon the flesh. And I grieve to say it, this every reserve was misunderstood by some who should have known better; they thought she should have confided in them at least.

Surely, pityeux is a privilege that grief may claim. When the veil of silence is thrown over some sorrow, let no curious hand draw it aside. There are people who have the instinct of the wounded animal that goes off from its kind to hide itself and its agonies. Such a one cannot cry aloud to friends when hurt, in dumb anguish he endures in silence. There are wounds so sore that even the soft fingers of pity may not touch them without making them throb afresh.

The place for our sackcloth is where this old king wore his. It is a grand thing to bear our burdens by the help of God. There is something inspiring, something fine about the man who says, "I can squeeze the shoulders to bear the load that is laid upon them,"—who locks his lips that no sound of complaint or murmuring may escape them, who faces the world with a smile instead of tears.

"The brave man prates not to the world the woes
He has been given.
In silence and in solitude he shows
His hurts to heaven.
The brave man fronts his fate with even eyes,
And smiling lips.
And none save God knows when his stars are seen
In black eclipse."

Many a one who greets you pleasantly has sackcloth upon his flesh; and makes no sign. The burdens of today will not crush us; it is the great bulk of trials and afflictions that belong to a course of years that wring from us a cry of pain. Carry the burdens of today until the sun goes down. In the Old Testament we have picture after picture of the tragic accumulation of sorrows which may overwhelm a life. Jacob complains that all things have gone against him, Job fills our heart with the wail of his bitter lamentations, but the king of our lesson wore sackcloth within. When hopes are shattered and friends are lost, then how do we carry our share of the world's sorrow? Let us remember the words of Jesus and say, "The cup that my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?" The truly brave will bear all the burdens of life, knowing that God is ready to make the load lighter if their strength is not equal to the load. "When he hath tried me then shall I come forth as gold," said Job.

When the dark hour comes upon us, the intolerable hour, the forlorn and unfriended hour, when life seems unendurable, when the way seems closed before us, what are we to do? The answer of Jesus is, "Endure unto the end." Hard and dark as things may seem, trust in God, and wear the sackcloth within. He who nobly endures shall surely wear the victor's crown around the throne were those who had come up out of great tribulation.

"What can these anxious cares avail—
These never-ceasing moans and sighs?
What can it help us to bewail
Each painful moment as it flies?
Our cross and trials do but press
The heavier for our bitterness.

"Only your restless heart keep still,
And calm your fears in hope, content
To take whate'er his gracious will,
His all-discerning love, hath sent;
Nor doubt our inmost wants are known
To him who chose us for his own."

SISTERS' AID SOCIETIES

PRESCOTT, IOWA.—The following is a report of the work done by our Sisters' Aid Society during the last six months, with Sister Bessie Utley as our president. We paid $17.44 for papering the parsonage at our mission church; sent a box of fifteen chickens to the St. Joseph Mission, and also a box of clothing containing forty-one articles to Ottumwa, Iowa. We had six treasury meetings; received from work done, articles sold and by free-will offerings $12.46, making $28.06. Our expenses were $6.23, leaving $4.79 in the treasury at the beginning of the year.—Anna V. Ramsey, Prescott, Iowa, Feb. 2.

LAWRENCE, KANS.—During last year the Sisters' Aid Society met eleven times, with an average attendance of four. We aim to have a meeting every two weeks, but on account of being so few in number, and sickness and other hindrances, we did not always succeed. We sewed for our comforts; amount made, $22.15; collections and donations, $2.85; amount in the treasury, $4.79, which we will turn into our building fund. It was through the persistent effort of our society that we bought our building lot, and we are thankful to the Sisters' Aid Societies who helped us. When our churchhouse is completed, we expect to give a report of all who donated to our building fund.—Mrs. B. Katherine Lawrence, Box 221.

DALLAS CENTER, IOWA.—During the year 1910 our Sisters' Aid Society met seventeen times, with an average attendance of eighteen. We quilted thirty quilts, made sixteen comforts and four bed-mats—a pack of clothing to the St. Joseph Mission, and one sack to the Orphans' Home at Council Bluffs, Iowa. Amount on hand Jan. 1, 1910, $88.39; received from work done and donations, $44.05; total amount received during the year, $233.81; paid toward our new churchhouse, $100; for rug carpet for church, $6; paid sheriff, $114.83; to the Orphans' Home at Council Bluffs, $6; other expenses, $1.83; total amount paid, $228.66; balance on hand, $9.13.—Ida Rowe, Secretary, Dallas Center, Iowa, Feb. 1.

FAIRVIEW, PA.—Our Sisters' Aid Society was organized in April, 1910. During the year fifty-two meetings were held, six of which were half-day meetings. The average attendance was ten. Dues, one cent per month, collected by fifteen. We made caps, aprons of different kinds, dust caps, dresses, comforts and quilts to the number of 107. A box of clothing was sent to the Brooklyn Mission; amount of money received during the nine months was $44.55; cash on hand, $16.09; amount in the treasury Jan. 1, 1911, $28.79. The society reorganized for the year 1911 with the following officers: Sister Cora Holsinger, president; Sister Sarah Shelly, vice-president; Sister Flora Shelly, secretary; Sister Sannie Shelly, treasurer.—Flora Shelly, Secretary, Fairview, Pa.

COVINGTON, OHIO.—The Sisters' Aid Society of this place was organized in March, 1895, but we have been on a new lease of life during the past year. We meet every week and our average attendance is good. We are always glad to help where there is need, in our own church, and these occasions are not few. With a Sunday-school attendance of 276 and a Christmas Day attendance of 236, it is plain that there are chances for work in our home church. Near Christmas time we also sent three bags of clothing to Chicago for needy ones. We now have $25.31 in bank, and no debts. We held our Thanksgiving session on Dec. 29. Officers elected as follows: Sister A. F. Mikesell, president; Sister Rose Conover, vice-president; Sister Elizabeth Brant, superintendent; the writer, secretary-treasurer; Sisters Pearl Snowberger and Tenia Morris, committee on investigation.—Ella Rosenberger, Secretary, Covington, Ohio, Feb. 2.

GREEN SPRING, OHIO.—Our Sisters' Aid Society held thirteen meetings during the past year, with an average attendance of nine. Our expenses during the year were $11.17; dues, $7.30; received for work done, $41.97; gave to the Old Folks' Home, $5; to the Toledo Mission, $5; to our missionary, $10; for window shades and book racks, $13.10. We sent one sack of clothing to the Toledo Mission. Our members live so far apart that we can not do as much as we should like. We want to do better this year.—Mary E. Miller, Tiffin, Ohio, Jan. 30.

FLEASANT HILL, OHIO.—Our Sewing Society held forty-five meetings during the year, with an average attendance of nine. We made fifty-two bonnets, eighty caps, three clothespin sacks, eighty-four comforters, and sewed carpet rags one-half days. Hess, treasurer; the writer, secretary. Twenty-nine meetings were held during the past year, with an average attendance of eleven. We made bonnets and comforts. We quilted fifteen quilts, sent one box of clothing to the Dayton Mission, one box of clothing and $10 in money to the Chillicothe Mission in Ohio, gave $5 to the Toledo Mission, and paid $5 for help at home. Donations to the society amount to $4.35; amount paid for sewing, $16.05; expenses, $32.12; leaving $20 in the treasury.—Dora V. Cool, Pittsburg, Ohio, Jan. 26.

Dues, with an average attendance of five, and an average collection of twenty-nine cents. We sent one box of clothing to the Mission in Grand Rapids, Mich. We are few in number here, but we feel that we can do something for the Master's cause. We hope to be able to accomplish more in the future than we have done in the past. We will make a complete record of the work when the year is up. We desire the prayers of the brethren and sisters in behalf of the work here.—Bessie F. Chumney, Secretary, Shelby, Mich., Jan. 31.

NEW DALE, VA.—Our society, formerly a part of the Linville Creek congregation, met twenty-three times during the past year, with an average attendance of thirteen. During the year we received donations to the amount of $21.15; for work done, $62.12; donations, $11. BLACK CREEK, IND.—The Sisters' Aid Society reorganized the last Wednesday in December. We elected a president, vice-president, superintendent and secretary to serve six months. Our regular time of meeting is the last Wednesday of each month; although, if we have much work to do, we call an extra meeting. We held seventeen meetings in the last year, with an average attendance of nine members. Our work consisted of piecing comforts, piecing and quilting quilts, making comforts and sewing for any one who wishes to hire us. Amount in the hands of collector, $3; Joseph, Missouri, Mission, valued at about $16; also sent $20 to the Mexican Mission; $10 for the support of an orphan in India, whom our society has been supporting for several years. We have a balance in the treasury of $8.73.—Effie Orr, R. D. 2, Spencer, Ind., Feb. 2.

We quilted fifteen; Sister Lizzie Bagwell, president; Sister Maria Stoner, vice-president; Sister Mary Bagwell, treasurer; the writer, secretary. To the St. Joseph Mission we sent $5; to the Old Folks' Home, $15; to the Home Mission Fund, $6; and to our Hymnals, $5; sent a box of clothing to the Chicago Mission, valued at $25; to the Mexican Mission we sent $10, valued. Our next aim is to make a payment on our church. We feel that we have not done more accomplished during the past year, but hope to be of much more service to the Master this year.—Birdella Printz Thompson, Bremen, Ohio, Feb. 2.

PLEASANT VIEW, ILL.—Our Sisters' Aid Society is still evergreen, with the exception of occasional interruptions through the harvest and threshing seasons. We have a membership of fourteen. We have from five to seven regular attendants, and those who can not attend the meeting, pay in their share, which helps to swell our income. Most of our work is quilting, but we do any kind of plain sewing. Here is a list of the quilts we have had, and we have done since you last heard from us: We gave $3 to the Hutchinson Mission; $3.50 to the Lawrence Mission; $10 for shoes to the Hutchinson Mission; $3.50; also two sacks of clothing. We have eight quilts ready to send to the Kansas City Mission. The brethren have kindly given us $4.62 in cash for rags. We will send it to help on the building of the Bethany church. We have again reorganized, with Sister Sista Pitsrock as president; the writer, secretary-treasurer. We have a balance on hand of $17.86.—Annie Hollinger, Durlow, Kans., Jan. 31.

KLAMATH, ORE.—Our Aid Society met Jan. 18. The following officers were elected: Sister Bettie Shultz, president; Sister Ella Mendenhall, vice-president; Sister Angelie Olinger, superintendent and treasurer; Sister Martha Ulrich, assistant superintendent; Sister Minnie Ulrich, secretary; Sister Millie Wike, assistant secretary. BRO. J. B. LEHMAN, an aged elder residing at Crowson, Lawrence Co., Tenn., passed to his reward Jan. 30, after having faithfully served the church for many years.

BRO. JOHN F. APPLEMAN, of Plymouth, Ind., gave us a short call last week. He has devoted a few months to evangelistic efforts, and says that there is no work that he enjoys better.

THE Brethren Temperance organization consists of J. W. Lear, Cerro Gordo, Ill., Chairman; W. M. Howe, 1012 Bedford St., Johnstown, Pa., Secretary, and P. J. Blough, Hooversville, Pa., Treasurer.

TWENTY-ONE gospel sermons were delivered by Bro. D. A. Stayer in the Martinsburg house, Clover Creek congregation, Pa., and as the fruits of the efforts put forth, five united with the church, and another awaits baptism.

BRO. E. M. COBB, whose place of residence has been at Elgin for some years, is now located at Raisin, Fresno Co., Cal., where he should be addressed. He has purchased property there and is planning to make the place his home.

IT will be noticed that the articles prepared especially for this issue fill the entire Essay Department, and for that reason all other essays must be held over. Some of them should have appeared this week, but there happened to be no room for them.

WE are requested to say that a pleasant surprise is in store for the District Temperance Committee, who have not yet reported their organization to the General Temperance Committee through its Secretary, W. M. Howe, 1012 Bedford St., Johnstown, Pa. Such Committees should report without delay.

ON account of the health of his wife, the superintendent of the Old Folks' and Orphans' Home, at Fostoria, Ohio, has resigned, and the trustees are looking for another superintendent. They will be pleased to consider propositions from man and wife, who are willing to take charge of the institution after April 1, 1911. For further particulars address David Lytle, Deshler, Ohio.

BRO. ANDREW HUTCHISON is engaged in a series of meetings at Garden City, Kans. He writes us that this winter he enjoyed the longest vacation that he has taken in a score of years, and that he is in better health than he was fifty years ago. He is planning to spend April and a part of May in Johnson County, Mo., where he resided before removing to McPherson, Kans., his present home.

NEXT Lord's Day there are likely to be a number of talks by our ministers regarding the life and work of Alexander Mack and the church he helped to organize. We should certainly be pleased to receive reports giving the sum and substance of at least a few of the addresses. We should like to know what our ministers may have to say about the man who did so much in the interest of New Testament Christianity.

THE MESSENGER list shows a very encouraging increase. Not for years have we received so many new subscribers, and though we print an extra number of papers each week, we run short of some of the back numbers. Last week we printed nearly 2,000 copies more than were printed for the corresponding week of 1910, and still only a few copies are left over. Of this issue we are printing several thousand extra copies, hoping to have enough fully to supply the growing demand.

WE would be pleased to have given a picture of Alexander Mack in this issue, but we presume there is none in existence. The best we can offer is a picture of the Bible he loved and studied, and left to future generations. Bro. John A. Flory has something interesting to say about the Blessed Book, and we are sure that the two photographs he had made on purpose for this issue will be appreciated by our patrons. Concerning this Bible he has a second article, that is to appear next week.

BRO. S. CHRISTIAN MILLER, of McPherson, Kans., is now with us in the Publishing House, and the first of March will assume editorial charge of the Inglenook, to which position he was appointed by the General Mission Board at its last meeting. Bro. Miller is not a stranger among us. While completing some literary work in the University of Chicago, he frequently visited Elgin and preached for us. He and Sister Miller reached our city last Saturday, and we are pleased to have them in our midst.

BRO. J. L. GUTHRIE, one of the elders of Northwestern Ohio, writes us from Waring, Texas, saying that he is very much pleased with the mild and healthful climate found in that part of the Southwest. He went there on account of his wife, who is afflicted with tuberculosis. So far her condition has not improved much, but the mild climate and dry atmosphere may help her. Bro. Guthrie is giving special attention to Sunday-school work and has also done some preaching. He and his wife long for the time when they can again work among the people of like faith.

IN the Ladies' Home Journal, for December, 1910, will be found an article about a Christmas barrel, packed and sent by a wealthy church. We suggest that, before packing any more barrels and boxes for our mission points, those having the work in charge, secure this issue of the journal, and read the article referred to. Here we are told of a barrel of old clothes that was sent to a minister's family, and instantly returned with some very appropriate scriptural quotations. Next week we shall publish an article by Sister Grace E. Gnagy, of Minneapolis, Minn., regarding the class of goods sent to the city missions, that will put a number of people to thinking.

IT has been suggested that our churches should not take too seriously what we said last week about the General Mission Board having the money to send more men into the field, as soon as the men can be secured. It might have been more appropriate to say that as soon as the men are found the Board will make its appeal for the money, so far as it may be needed. The Board has formed the good habit of not running the Brotherhood into debt. When there is an urgent demand for money, an appeal is made to the churches, and as a rule the means are forthcoming. In order to avoid the necessity of a call, it will be found best to keep the treasury well supplied. The regular donations should be kept up right along.

WE have a good letter from Bro. John Barnhart, of Mansfield, Ill., who will soon be eighty-one years old, his wife being one year younger. A few days ago they celebrated their sixtieth marriage anniversary, and all their children save one, were present. Bro. Barnhart is one of the pioneer elders of Southern Illinois, and has done his share of preaching. There was a period in his early ministry when he would preach every Sunday, offered all the prayers in his meetings, and led the song service besides. He has raised a large family, and writes us that his children are very good to their parents. While our dear brother is growing old, and has worked hard to maintain the principles of the church, he rejoices because so many strong young ministers are on hand to take up the work laid down by the older ones.

WE are printing an extra number of this issue, feeling sure that many of our patrons will want copies to hand to those who are interested in the early history of the church. It is the first Memorial paper of Alexander Mack, first minister in the Church of the Brethren, ever published, and contains more information regarding the devout reformer than it has been the pleasure of most of our people to see. The different writers have done their work well, and we are certain that their efforts will be greatly appreciated. We invited Bro. M. G. Brumbaugh to write the biographical sketch, but his health does not permit him to undertake any mental work at this time, and so it devolved upon your office editor to prepare the sketch. Those wishing copies to place where they are certain to be appreciated, and where they are likely to do good, will please let us hear from them.

A SISTER who does some good writing for the MESSENGER has a nice way of testing her communications before sending them to us for publication. She says they are placed on the "cooler" over night, and sometimes are left there a whole week, but she has observed that when an essay remains on the "cooler" any unusual length of time it gets so thoroughly revised that very little of the original is retained. This is the rule in the family, and applies to letters as well as matter for the press. We recommend the rule to those whose temperaments lead them to do some hasty things.

An Ounce of Energy.

ABOUT thirty-two years ago, while residing in Lanark, Ill., and engaged on the editorial staff of the Brethren at Work, there came into our office a well-educated, young clerk, whose business it was to keep books, assist in proofreading, and take some of our dictations. He remained with us a few years, and then drifted off into other business. His experiences have been varied and at times interesting. After these many years he writes us a long letter from the Pacific Slope, telling us that he still reads the MESSENGER and keeps posted regarding our work. In this letter he says that, when he entered our office in the winter of 1878-79, he found this motto pasted on our desk: "An ounce of energy is worth a pound of talent." He adds that he has discovered this to be true in every line of work in which he has engaged. This motto is in keeping with a statement made by Edison, when he said that what people call genius consists of two parts genius and ninety-eight parts of hard work. The man of energy usually does something, whether he has much talent or little. This is true of what has been looked upon as genius. It is not so much the unusual ability as the downright hard work that tells the story. We talk about brilliant writers, able preachers, profound thinkers and skilled mechanics. It might be better to speak of them as men of energy and pluck. They do things because they stick to what they undertake, and are not afraid of plenty of hard work. This applies to the religious life as well as to the business life. Men and women attain the higher standard in the realm of grace because, in their efforts to reach the object in view, they "stretch every nerve and press with vigor on." A little girl one time said that her father was a Christian, but he did not work much at the business. Men make shipwreck of their religion, not because of a lack of talent, but because they do not put enough energy into that part of life. They fail not on account of a lack of ability to do the right thing, but because of their indifference. If they would work half as hard at serving the Lord as they work serving the world, they might become noted for their fine attainments in the higher order of Christian piety.

Biographical Sketch of Alexander Mack.

We probably owe more to Alexander Mack than most of us have been led to think, and he was doubtless a much stronger man, both intellectually and spiritually, than he has been generally regarded. He was the leading spirit in organizing a church which, from the very start, had all of the New Testament doctrines restored to their place, and so well did he do his work that it has successfully withstood every test and opposition brought to bear against the organization. To form such an organization in the midst of cold, lifeless, indifferent religious formalism was a marvelous achievement. It was the work and planning of no ordinary mind. He builded well. In fact, he builded better than he knew.

Mack descended from a very influential, respectable and wealthy family. He was born in Germany in 1679, and was educated in the faith of the Reformed church, of which his parents were very devout members. While he may not have enjoyed the advantage of a university course, his education was by no means neglected. He was a good Bible student, a fine thinker, well read in history, thoroughly informed regarding the religious teachings of his day, and had the ability of expressing himself clearly and logically, both as a preacher and a writer. By occupation he was a miller, and seems to have possessed several mills, along with considerable other property, inherited from his parents. Being thus favored with an ample income, he had time and means that enabled him to avail himself of a broad and extended course of reading.

At the age of twenty-one he was married to Anna Margaretha Klingen, about one year younger than himself, who became a most faithful wife and mother. Mack's reading led to his becoming dissatisfied with the faith in which he had been brought up. In search of more light he associated himself with the Pietists, a class of people who stood for a thorough reform in the state churches. Sometime prior to 1708 persecution drove him to a section of Germany ruled by the mild Count Henry, and he located in the little village of Schwarzenau, on the river Eder. He did a good deal of traveling and preaching, and often accompanied Ernst Christoph Hochmann in his preaching tours. Hochmann was a well-educated and eloquent Pietist preacher, somewhat older than Mack. In their search for the apostolic order of worship and service, they agreed in many points, but Hochmann was not prepared to come out squarely and stand for a full and complete reformation.

Mack and his wife, along with six others, entered into a close study of the Scriptures, with the avowed purpose of restoring the New Testament order of service. They soon discovered that there was no church known to them that, in spirit and in truth, observed the form of doctrine handed down by the inspired apostles, and others who wrote as they were guided by the Holy Spirit. They, therefore, dispensed with every form of confession known to them, took the New Testament as their sole rule of faith and practice, and decided to organize a congregation in which the full faith and all of the ordinances of the New Testament might be found.

Having fully agreed upon the order of worship, early one morning the eight, in a quiet way, went down to the beautiful river Eder, and on the bank of the stream held a season of prayer. After this one of the men, who had been chosen by lot, led Mack into the stream, bade him kneel, and dipped him three times, using the Divine formula,—baptizing him into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. He then laid hands on him and offered a short prayer. Mack then baptized the one who had baptized him, and also the other six.

After they had returned to the house, and changed their clothes, there was great joy in their hearts, for they felt that they had cut loose from all religious entanglements, and must henceforth rely solely on the Word of God and the guidance of the Holy Spirit for the light and help they might need. An election was held, and Mack was chosen minister. Though but twenty-nine years old, he was already a preacher of acknowledged ability, and at once entered upon his work with renewed zeal. Services were held at Schwarzenau and the surrounding towns and villages, and wherever he went he was listened to with great interest. His plea was for a return to the New Testament form of worship and service, and to the pure and simple life which characterized the early Christians. Scores of people accepted the teachings of the earnest young preacher and were baptized. A large body of believers was soon gathered at Schwarzenau, men were called to the ministry and churches were organized at other points.

About five years after the organization of the first church there was considerable opposition to the new reform movement. The doctrine taught was assailed on every hand, and it became necessary to publish a clear, logical defense of the teachings for which Mack and his associates stood. Mack, who was the leading spirit among his people, was equal to the occasion, and prepared the two small works referred to in Bro. Miller's article in next column. The two works were printed, were widely read, and did much in confirming those who had accepted the faith, and aided in convincing others.

The common people of Germany seemed to have been ready for just such a religious reform, and there is no telling what might have happened in the way of building up churches all over Europe, had not persecution interfered. A number of members were cast into prison, others had heavy fines to pay, and in various ways they were made to feel the heavy hand of persecution because of their religion. This induced a number, under the leadership of Peter Becker, to emigrate to America in 1719, and settle at Germantown, Pa. One year later a violent persecution compelled Alexander Mack and his large body of members to leave Schwarzenau. They found, as they thought, a safe retreat in West Friesland, where a number were won to the faith.

But ten years later they decided in favor of emigrating to the New World in a body, so they chartered a ship, crossed the Atlantic, and landed at Philadelphia Sept. 15, 1729. Here they received a hearty welcome by the members who had preceded them. When Alexander Mack reached America he was a poor man. Fines, the losses on account of persecution, and other expenses, had swept away his splendid possessions. But while poor in this world's goods, he was rich in grace and faith.

As pastor and elder in charge, he at once took charge of the Lord's work in Germantown, where a considerable body of members had located. He also visited the different points where churches had already been formed, and aided in establishing other congregations, and in ordaining men to take the oversight of the different flocks. The faction that had been led off by John Conrad Beissel, who established himself at Ephrata, Pa., filled his great heart with sadness. He did his utmost to close the breach, but without avail. He labored faithfully and earnestly to place the church on a good footing, and to encourage love, loyalty and harmony among the members everywhere. He went about among his people, doing good, and to them he was an inspiration, as well as a strong support in time of need.

But he was permitted to continue his labors only six years. Feb. 19, 1735, he closed his eyes in death, and his body was laid to rest by the earnest people who had learned to love him as a father. He was but fifty-six years old; not an old man, but as a minister of the Gospel he had worked hard, and his strength gave way early. He had preached twenty-seven years, laboring most earnestly for those whom he had helped to a higher plane of Christian living, had spent his fortune in the interest of the principles he had espoused; and at the end of his pilgrimage, left his people and the doctrine he had taught to the guiding influence and protecting care of the Holy Spirit. How well these principles have been maintained is fully evidenced by what may now be found in the faith and practice of the thousands constituting the Church of the Brethren. We shall do well to pause next Sunday, Feb. 19,—the 176th anniversary of his death,—recount his valuable services in the interest of primitive Christianity, retell the story of his exemplary life, and dedicate ourselves anew to the noble cause for which he lived, labored and died.

The Doctrine Taught by Mack, Sr.

THE teachings of Alexander Mack, Sr., come to us in two booklets written, doubtless, soon after the baptism of the eight at Schwarzenau, Germany, in 1708. In his introduction the author says, "It was deemed expedient by the church of the Lord in Schwarzenau to issue the publication for the instruction of those pure-minded persons who are seeking after the truth." The work was printed in 1713 and marks the beginning of the literature of the more fully-organized Church of the Brethren.

The book is in two parts and has two titles. The first, "Rites and Ordinances of the House of God, Arranged in the Form of a Conversation Between a Father and a Son." The second, "Eberhard Ludwig Gruber's Ground-Searching Questions, Proposed to the New Baptists of Witgenstein, to Be Answered Each Separately; also a Brief and Plain Reply to the Same, Formerly Given Out in Manuscript by a Member of the Church in Witgenstein." After the work was circulated in manuscript and fully proven, the church decided to have it printed and bound in book form.

In this work the doctrine held by Mack, and those associated with him, in reëstablishing primitive Christianity, are set forth in clear, logical, terse language. There is no circumlocution, no needless or useless words, no effort at literary display. The reader is impressed with the fact that the writer is in dead earnest, believes every word he writes, and defends the truth ably. He strikes from the shoulder and every blow counts for the truth. To him the Bible is the Book and he shows wonderful familiarity with the Holy Scriptures. Incidentally he quotes from the early church fathers, where their testimony is helpful in proving the practice of the primitive church, showing his wide range of reading. One can not read his book without being deeply impressed with the strong and abiding faith of the author in the Word of God, his thorough acquaintance with the Scriptures, his knowledge of the historical setting of the subjects discussed and of his earnestness and heartfelt belief in the doctrine taught.

"Gruber's Ground-Searching Questions" placed Mack in the role of defender of the faith, and the ability, and at the same time the spirit of humility, with which he defends the positions assailed, marks him as a man of more than ordinary strength and power. The questions cover the ground of the faith of the newly-reorganized church, and many of them are adroitly and shrewdly put. They are met with frankness and candor, and in a spirit that at once disarms the mere desire for controversy. The Church of the Brethren held firmly to Trine Immersion, and claimed that those who had been sprinkled in infancy, or when reaching the years of maturity, had not received Christian baptism and when such were converted and accepted the whole truth, they were rebaptized by the Brethren. This, of course, gave deep offense to the church authorities and brought upon them the hand of persecution. Gruber's first questions cover this point. I have space here but for the first question and answer:

"Query 1. Whether you do not suppose that, for more than one thousand years, there had been no true, genuine baptism, and also no true church on earth?

"Answer.—We hold and believe that God at all times had his church, which observed the true baptism and order, but which was always hidden from unbelievers, and consisted often also in but few members; still the gates of hell could not prevail against the church of the Lord Jesus. Yea, it is evident from history that God has caused his order to be revealed to unbelievers in all ages as a testimony or a witness."

It is worthy of observation that this answer of Bishop Mack shows conclusively that he did not consider himself as heading a new sect, but only the instrument in the hands of God, with those associated with him, in reëstablishing more fully the doctrines of Apostolic Christianity.

To set forth in detail the doctrine taught by Mack would require a pamphlet of many pages, rather than an editorial restricted to fifteen hundred words. Only a very brief mention of the Doctrine can here be made.

In "Rites and Ordinances" the questions put by son to father are so arranged as to bring out fully every detail of the faith and practice of the church. The first question is the only one that can be given:

"Son.—Tell me, then, where outward water-baptism is found in the Holy Scriptures.

"Father.—The eternal and almighty God is the proper author of water-baptism. Already in the days of Noah he began to reveal a figure or type of water-baptism in the New Covenant."

The author then proceeds, showing the types in the Old Testament, the baptism unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea, the great laver or fountain before the tabernacle, all prefiguring water baptism in the New Covenant. He then says:

"When God, the Father, was about manifesting his beloved Son in the world, a forerunner had to precede him, namely John, who came by Divine command into the land of Judea and preached to all the people that they should repent. He also baptized them in the water unto repentance, directing them to believe in him who should come after him, that is Jesus the Son of God. This is followed by the baptism of Jesus himself in the waters of the Jordan and then his commands and finally the great commission, 'Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.'"

After the discussion on baptism, the Lord's supper is considered fully and exhaustively. He refers to those who come to the Lord's table with great extravagance in dress, with pride, vainglory, etc., etc., condemning such things and holding fast and firmly to the position that only those who have entered into his kingdom by true repentance, faith and baptism, and who keep all the rules and ordinances of the house of God willingly, in obedience to faith, are proper communicants at the Lord's table. He follows this with an earnest teaching that is as much needed now as it was two hundred years ago:

"Whosoever wishes to partake of the Lord's supper in a worthy manner must be separated from the body of Satan, from all unrighteousness of the world, and from all false sects and religions; he must adhere to Jesus, the Head, as a true member in faith and in love, and be ready, if it should be required according to the will of God, in an evangelical manner, to yield up his body, even his life, for the sake of Jesus and his doctrine."

Excommunication is thoroughly discussed, and the author holds that continuance in sin and in an obstinate refusal to hear the church can only result in expulsion. Speaking of those who trespass and refuse to hear the church, as recorded in Matt. 18, he says:

"Now this is a separation of such whose sins may be forgiven without their being disowned, not on account of their sin, but for their pride and obstinacy; because they reject the counsel of God's Spirit, and despise and grieve the whole church, while it would have been their duty rather to die for their fellow-members than to grieve them and despise their good counsel."

Following the foregoing teachings come Discussions or Schisms, Taking the Oath, Examination, Love, Faith, The External and Internal Word, Of Things Strangled and of Blood, Matrimony, Adultery, Avoidance and the Ban, Outward Worship, Excuse of Unbelievers, Reward of Believers, Everlasting Torment. The treatise closes with words of Paternal Advice.

Reference must yet be made to the so-called doctrine of baptismal regeneration. Gruber asks the question:

"Whether the principal passage, Mark 16: 16, does not prove rather the contrary, when Christ so emphatically says, 'He that believeth not (and not, "He that is not baptized") shall be damned'?

"Answer.—We believe, indeed, and confess this, that not on account of baptism, but on account of faith in Christ, eternal life is promised (John 3: 15, 18). Why, then, should a believer not be willing to do the will of him in whom he believeth? Now, since it is the will of Christ that a believer should be baptized, it is also the will of the believer, and thus, believing and willing as Christ willeth, he is saved, although he should, by necessity, be prevented from obtaining baptism. Just as Abraham, who was willing to sacrifice his son Isaac, and it was not done,—the son was not sacrificed, but the obedience was fulfilled,—obtained the blessing, so, likewise, a believer, being willing to be baptized, and from necessity not being able to obtain it, as the thief on the cross could not, is still saved. But if a person will not be baptized, he will righteously be judged an unbeliever and as disobedient, not on account of baptism, but on account of his unbelief and disobedience. Hence it is quite right when Christ says, 'He that believeth.' Else, if Christ had confined salvation to baptism, men would be more willing to be baptized, and retain their self-will in other things: as Antichrist is doing, ascribing salvation only to water, though a person may do in other things as he pleases."

The pleasing work of following Mack in his teachings must close here. Our readers are strongly urged to secure Mack's works, and make a careful and critical study of them. The pamphlet may be had from the Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Ill., for ten cents, as long as the limited supply lasts. Every member of the church should have a copy.

Preaching Against Secret Orders.

While the popular evangelists of this generation are doing a great deal of good, for which we feel to give them due credit, it is to be regretted that they can not be induced to preach the whole Gospel. On some points they are strong, and their clear and forcible denunciation of sin has sent conviction to many a heart, and led to a reformation of life, but on some other points they show a decided weakness. They never tire speaking of the evils of intemperance, the ball room, the gambling den, the card party, the theater, and the divorce court, but most of them can not be induced to preach against the evils of secret, oathbound societies. In the pulpit they are strong men, but they are not strong enough to undertake to point out the dangers that are likely to come out of secret orders in this and other countries. They can condemn the card parties that take the women from their homes and families and develop in them a love for card playing, but they have not one word to say against the lodges that take the men from their homes, night after night, and sometimes expose them to worse temptations than card playing. They may denounce men for becoming a party to wrong-doing, but they do not have the moral courage to denounce them for being unequally yoked together with unbelievers in secret societies. Surely, it takes stronger men to preach the whole Gospel than can be found among the popular evangelists in most churches.

For What We Stand.

One of our patrons calls attention to an instance when an intelligent stranger asked a group of members,—and two of the group were deacons,—for a statement, in a brief way, of what the Brethren church stands for. He noticed some of the members on the street and, observing that they did not look and act like other people, seemed anxious to know more about them. It is said that not one in the group ventured to supply the information the stranger was seeking, yet, at the same time, each member knew, when he had time to think a little, what our people believe and teach. It is suggested by our correspondent, that it might be well for our ministers occasionally to devote a sermon to the subject, and let the public know just what the Brethren church actually teaches. Then we further suggest, that it will be found a splendid mental and spiritual training for each member, young and old, now and then to repeat to himself, in detail, the points for which we as a religious body stand. A few attempts in this mental process will broaden our information amazingly. Members who do something of the kind, and then do some careful reading in the New Testament, will not find themselves embarrassed in the presence of intelligent people, who, in a civil way, ask for information regarding their faith.

Some Church Statistics.

The church statistics of the various religious bodies in the United States for 1910, just published by Dr. H. K. Carroll, make interesting reading for people who delight in figures. The tables show that all told, there are in the country 35,332,776 people who hold to some form of religion. The Catholics place their number at 12,321,746. This, of course, includes a million or more of small children. The Baptists claim a membership of 5,774,066, while the Methodists, seventeen bodies, are credited with 6,596,168 members. The Lutherans number over 2,000,000 and a few others exceed the million mark. The increase for the year is given as 628,955, something less than that of the year previous. It will also be observed that less than one-half of the population of the United States are affiliated with churches. But, on the other hand, it should be borne in mind that the small children are classed with those not connected with any of the religious bodies, and, after all, it will be safe to conclude that fully one-half of the people, capable of thinking for themselves, are connected with some religious organization.

Keeping House Without the Messenger.

A young sister who married an unconverted man, writes us that she is trying to get along without the Messenger this year, for the reason that she does not feel able to pay for the paper, and this, too, to her sorrow. She has been accustomed to seeing the Messenger in her father's home ever since she can remember, and now to be without the paper that has so long been a part of her home life, often brings sadness to her heart. She longs for the familiar friend to cheer her on life's journey. But there are others having the same sad experience. They have gone from under the parental roof, are making homes of their own, but do not have the comforting influence of their church paper to help them fight the battles of life. It might be well if parents would, so far as necessary, follow up their children with the Messenger. It will help to keep them in touch with the church and her work, and might be the means of bringing unconverted husbands and wives into the fold.

Address,
General Mission Board, Elgin, Ill.

COLORADO CITY MISSION, COLO.

We are sure that all who have been helping us buy our lots to build a churchhouse, will be interested to know that the lots have been bought. Now we are anxious to commence building. We are praying that God will bring to remembrance the promises made for this very purpose.

Bro. Groff and wife, of Wayne, Colo., were with us over Sunday. Bro. Groff preached a good sermon. He helped us to keep up appointments here before we had a resident minister. All were pleased to have him with us again.

On Sunday evening, the Young People's Societies of Colorado City had a Union Meeting; subject, "India—What Our Church Is Doing and the Special Need of India." Bro. Van Dyke represented us.

Our weather has been very beautiful for the last two weeks. Should it turn cold, there will be much suffering. During cold weather, the first part of January, Bro. Root and wife found many needy ones,—little feet bare and purple with cold. Some families were without fuel and food. We are always thankful when we can help such, because of getting into closer touch with them.

Six young members have come into the city to work. We are so glad for these faithful young people. One young sister, who belonged to the church six years ago, brought her letter and was reclaimed on Sunday.

We have organized a teacher-training class with ten members and Bro. Root as teacher. Minnie A. Johnson.

715 N. Wahsatch Avenue, Colorado Springs, Colo., Feb. 3.

NORTH ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI, MISSION.

Almost one year since, we moved here to assume charge of this work. Our experience has been quite varied, and yet, withal, profitable.

The work is steadily advancing, with a permanent pace. The little band is becoming more alive to our responsibility and possibility. They are of a thrifty, intelligent, respectable class of people.

Among our Sunday-school classes, there has been some destitution, occasioned by sickness and other difficulties, but we have been able to relieve same in a fairly satisfactory way through the kindness of the Sisters' Aid Societies of Kansas, Missouri, Illinois and Ohio. Little boys are, apparently, forgotten. We even receive clothes for men, but for boys comparatively none. It is very difficult, even with the large amount of clothing received, to equip those most needy. For this reason it would seem better to send money instead of clothing, and allow the ones in charge to purchase clothing that will fit.

We have paid, during the year, by the help of some of the adjoining Districts, six hundred dollars of the one thousand dollar mortgage on our church. And even now we have one hundred dollars on hand. This will reduce our indebtedness to three hundred dollars. We are making a special effort to pay all before our coming Annual Meeting.

May the Lord bless all, that the Gospel may be preached to all, that the captives may be delivered, and that his name may be glorified. J. S. Kline.

SOUTH ST. JOSEPH MISSION, MO.

Many phases of our mission work in South St. Joseph have been presented to the readers of the Messenger, but this winter we have been telling you of our Mothers' Meeting which has been new among us. We have always realized how generous our brethren and sisters have been in helping us in our work among the poor and needy, and this winter we are doing what we can among ourselves to help encourage mothers and needy children.

Our Mother's Meeting was organized Nov. 1, and we herewith give you a report of our three months' work. We have held twelve meetings. Number of women present, 244. Number of children, 144. Amount received, $44.56. Amount expended, $44.31. Garments made for children, 97. Other garments made, 28. Comforts made, 14. Several have sent us cash, amounting to $20. The remainder of our funds we have raised by making aprons and comforts for sale.

We meet at 1:30 on Wednesday afternoons, and sew until 3:30, after which we have devotional exercises. Each mother can make one garment each week. In this way we have been the means of helping many to clothe their little children, and all feel blessed for their part in this good work. We have reason to feel that we have been abundantly blessed. The spirit of Christian love has prevailed and even our poorest mothers are eager to do all they can to help us for the garments they get in return.

We are grateful to any one who may feel like assisting us in our work. Aid Societies wishing to help the Mission with ready-made clothing should send same to E. N. Huffman, 502 Ky. St., but those desiring to help our Mothers' Meeting with cash, or with material to make up clothing, should send it to the writer. We will appreciate your effort and know that our Father in heaven will bless you. Mrs. Anna M. Loc.

THE HOME MISSION SITUATION.

There are evidences that some of the most thoughtful of our Brethren are coming to the conclusion that there are too many centers in our mission activities. I am sure that no one feels this more keenly than do the men who, by the Brotherhood, are put in charge of the various missions. Those brethren have curtailed their expenses and are denying themselves and their families of some of the real necessities of life.

Meanwhile some of the District Mission Boards seem very little concerned about the brethren who have been placed in charge of the work. They refrain from using the expedient of appeals that are insistent enough, and repeated enough, to bring to the attention of the great Brotherhood the facts of the actual distress and actual crisis. We see the "wolf"! They say, "No wolf." We see the desperate animal seeking a fold of the sheepfold many a time when we say nothing. But there is danger that the Brotherhood shall get so tired of hearing the cry that they will leave us to the task of combating the wolf unaided. And, as sure as they do that, the charge committed to us will suffer greatly. We have no strength except as it is given to us by the great Brotherhood, whose servants we are.

The situation seems to point to the dawning of a better day in the method of conducting the financial side of our church work. We devoutly long for that day. There seems to be promise of it also in the efforts being put forth by the Brethren in various States for systematic giving among the churches.

We ask the elders, ministers, and the elect sisters to give heed to the great demand for help. "The harvest truly is great but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."

VYARA NOTES, INDIA.

These are the winter months and how glad we are for them! While the climate of this part of Gujerat is not as hot as some other parts of India, yet the long stretch of hot weather, from March to November, is trying on one's strength and we welcome the cooler season.

Since our last report two more have been baptized. In the same village are several others who are very hopeful. At Songhad the sentiment in favor of Christianity is growing. In this District there is a comparatively large number of the aboriginal people, educated by the Gaekwar Government, and we have hopes now of being able to win these people to the Lord, that they, in turn, may become leaders among their own people.

But reaching this class of people is not without its problems. As it were, they must be recast. Their education has not been such as produces very much humility and kindred characteristics. The question of their Bible and religious training has its peculiar problems. The success of the work in these aboriginal districts, where the Christian is bad, depends on our raising up workers within the territory itself. To this end boarding schools and training schools will have to be established. Our greatest hope is with the children of those who become Christians.

Constant additions to our workers, reared under more favorable circumstances and in better climates, gives us a growing realization of the need of raising up men from among these people, and to this end we shall bend every effort.

In Vyara Taluka there are some seventy-six saloons and about ninety schools. Nowhere in India have I seen more saloons than here. The temptation to drink is constantly before the people. However, it is encouraging to know of those who have quit, but as yet they are few. To break off the habit without some religious support is more than most of them can do.

That the Brethren church has a great opportunity for a great and mighty work, here in India, is a growing thought among us. Excepting in this District, nearly the whole of the several hundred thousand of aboriginal people are without schools. With the primary education of these people in our hands, we see also the importance of directing their higher education. We are impressed also with the thought that this opportunity may not always be open to us. Now is the golden opportunity for a forward move. But first we must make greater efforts to raise up a native constituency, and then a large force of teachers and workers. Whether your missionaries are able to do it or not, depends on your prayers and your continued efforts with us. We are your representatives and able to do as you give us the recruits and the means, backed by your petitions at the throne of grace.

Vyara, Surat District, India., Jan. 12. A. W. Ross.

MISSION WORK IN THE SOUTH.

In the articles which I have heretofore written on this subject I have advocated strongly the sending of workers to this southern field, as there is great need of work being done. Last winter, as you will remember, Bro. S. G. Nickey came to us, and several were baptized by his efforts. From here he went to the Wayne Mission, in Mississippi, where we have a mission point. Here two were baptized. Bro. M. Wine has kept up the appointments since then.

Jan. 13 Bro. Wine met Bro. Nickey at the Wayne Mission again. They labored earnestly for over two weeks, making a house-to-house visit in the day-time and preaching in the evening, thereby working on a good interest.

Jan. 27 the Brethren sent for wife and me to go to the Mission and help with the applicants for baptism. On Sunday, our services, eight precious souls were baptized. Two not being prepared are to be baptized Feb. 19. Feb. 5 Bro. Wine goes to State Line, Miss., to baptize one that made application at the Mission, making eleven in all that united with the church during the efforts of the Brethren at the Wayne Mission.

When bidding them good-bye, many shed tears and asked for us to pray in their behalf. We feel as if many are near the fold at that place. Several of our sisters,—Sister Alice Wine being among them—started to help with the love feast and baptizing. All appearing in the plain garb of the sisters, made a favorable impression on many.

This mission point is an outgrowth of the work started and carried on by Bro. J. D. Smith and the writer, several years ago. I would ask, Is it worth the effort? Bro. Nickey and those of us who have been on the ground and have seen the growth, think it is. I truly am convinced that there should be a greater effort put forth. The harvest surely is ripe, but where are the reapers? Who has this work at heart enough to say, "I will go"? Eleven souls saved is surely a great reward for the efforts the Brethren have put forth.

Again; much good can be done with your Gospel Messengers after you have read them. A sister in Pennsylvania, in answer to one of my articles, asked me to give her the name of some one to whom she could send her Messengers. I did so. Some time ago I was talking to this lady and she said she was so glad to get them. A brother and sister in Ohio send theirs to me and I have a place for them where they are greatly appreciated as soon as they are received. Much good can be done in this way, but there is still room for many more to be placed, if any one cares to assist in this way. Bro. Nickey commenced his series of meetings with us Jan. 31. We are in great hopes of a large ingathering. Brethren and sisters, we ask an interest in your prayers in behalf of the work in this great southern field, that, instead of one congregation of the Church of the Brethren in Alabama there may be, ere long, many of them. F. M. White.

Fruitdale, Ala., Feb. 1.

A CHINESE CHRISTMAS DINNER.

On Christmas Day we gave a dinner to fifty of the men and women who attend services. The men ate with Bro. Crumpacker at the chapel and the women ate here with us, in our home. We did not have the turkey, pies, cakes and candies, as at home, for they would not appreciate such things. No, Chinese cooks prepared it in the Chinese way, and served it in Chinese style. How we wished many of the home folks could have eaten the Christmas dinner with us! I am sure you would never have forgotten it.

No tablecloth covered the table. Each person had a pair of "chopsticks" and a tiny bowl of vinegar in which to dip his meats. Various dishes of food were placed in the center of the table. Each person first, very politely, gave the other a dainty morsel; then helped himself until the dishes were empty, and another set, of other kinds of food, was brought on.

It really did not look rude at all to see the Chinese eating, for they handled their chopsticks so nicely, and spoke so politely that the occasion was quite pleasant and sociable.

The food consisted chiefly of various meat preparations, with a few vegetables, and bread and rice. The meats seemed to be of all sorts, from fattest pork to dainty bits of chicken. Everything was chopped into small bits, so it could be easily taken up and eaten with the chopsticks. Lotos root was used quite freely. In all there were twenty-four kinds of food. And they did eat as though they appreciated it. We wondered where they put it all. We had to stop long before they had their fill.

These people usually live on grains and vegetables, so meats are a great treat to them. Little meat is eaten except on their feast-days, when it is the greater part of the feast.

Three services were held during the day,—morning, afternoon and evening,—and the Christmas story was told to them for the first time. The chapel was nicely decorated with Christmas verses, written with gilt on red paper. A number of plants and other things also made the place cheerful. This was all the work of our native helpers and friends. A dollar's worth of dinner five dollars in our money was taken,—the first collection taken here.

The people continue to be friendly, and not so many are afraid. Each week new homes open their doors, and ask us to come and see them. The sick continue to come, and many are treated every day. But many we cannot attempt to cure, and they turn sadly away. This, indeed, makes our hearts ache, and we again pray more earnestly that a physician may soon come to help us.

This week is the week of prayer, and each afternoon we missionaries meet to pray that the grace of God may come more fully into the work, that the heathen world may, indeed, feel the spirit and power of God, and that the Christian church may, indeed, have a vision of the world's needs.

During the evening the natives have their prayer meeting and many now are offering up their first prayers. The Lord is in their midst and some seem to be calling on him with their whole heart. The adversary is also hard at work. Don't forget to pray for us! Emma Horning.

Notes From Our Correspondents

As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country.

CALIFORNIA.

Empire.—Our church met in regular council Feb. 4, to set the time for our dedication and communion. Our love feast will be March 11; dedication at 10 A. M. Dinner will be served for all at noon, and at 2 P. M. will be preaching services. Breakfast will be served at the church on Sunday morning. We will have Sunday-school at 10 A. M. and the dedicatory sermon at 11 A. M. A special invitation is given to have others with us at those meetings. Those coming by railroad should come to Empire.—Myrtle M. Julius, R. D. 3, Box 213, Modesto, Feb. 6.

Stonyford.—After a drive of fifty miles in the cold and rain, Elder Jesse Overholtzer and I arrived at Stonyford, Cal., came to our place and held the first series of meetings ever held by the Brethren in Stonyford. He preached eleven sermons. Sister Overholtzer led the singing. Our brother deals out the Word with power and simplicity. Some are ready to unite with us, but on account of their companions, others want to learn more about the Brethren; hence there were no additions. Feb. 8 we left for Orland. Elder Overholtzer officiated. Seven members communed.—four of them being Elder Overholtzer's family. Splendid interest prevailed, except on two nights. All came and went home in the rain. We hope more members to locate with us.—W. B. Whitcher, Stonyford, Cal., Feb. 8.

CANADA.

Battle Creek.—We held our council Jan. 7. Our elder, Bro. George Strycker, presided. Some important business came before the meeting. One letter was granted. We retained all our officers for one year, the same as were working when organized. We also elected our Sunday-school officers for six months. New officers are as follows: superintendent, Sister Flossa Strycker, secretary. We then selected a spot for the meeting-house and trustees were elected to build. It was a very pleasant and profitable meeting, indeed. We have had cold weather all through this month.—Mrs. Maria L. Swihart, Kelvinhurst, via Maple Creek, Sask., Can., Feb. 9.

COLORADO.

Denver.—Owing to the unusually changeable weather that we have had this winter, there have been a great deal of illness here. Several of our number have been very sick. Our dear aged Sister Mayo, whom the Lord has seen fit to call through the anointing and laying on of hands, and who has, for several weeks, been in the hospital, suffering from a complication of pneumonia and other ailments, was again anointed Jan. 19. She seemed to be much better for a time, but is now rejoicing in the hope of a speedy recovery. On Friday Bro. White was anointed by Bro. Berkebile. Jesus' promises are sure.—G. Bach, 1181 South Pearl Street, Denver, Colo., Feb. 4.

Hartman.—Jan. 30 we held our council, with Bro. M. S. Frantz presiding. Our main business was electing officers. Bro. J. A. Waters is our elder; Sister Mary Kemper, superintendent; Bro. Timothy Overholt and Sister Mary Poister, superintendent's helper; writer, secretary-treasurer; Bro. Ira Boyer, president of the Christian Workers' Meeting; Sister Grace Emig, secretary-treasurer. One was received by letter since our last report.—Mary Kemper, Hartman, Colo., Feb. 1.

IDAHO.

Boise City church met in council Jan. 4, and elected the officers for the Sunday-school, namely: Bro. Jesse Hoff, superintendent and treasurer, Bro. G. Long; correspondent, Sister Julia Graybill; superintendent of Sunday-school, Sister Ida Long; secretary and treasurer, Sister Keltner. This church is laboring under the disadvantage of not having a meeting-house, and our meeting new work with a small membership and small means, but we pray for better days.—Julia M. Graybill, Boise City, Idaho, Feb. 11.

Boise Valley.—Last Lord's Day was a busy one for the Boise Valley church. We had our regular Sunday-morning school, forenoon preaching services (which was a funeral service in this case), Christian Workers' meeting, and evening meeting. We laid to rest an afflicted sister, and buried, in the Lord, only two dear young children. One of the workers in our Sunday-school with us for quite a while. Now they are with us in the Lord and the Lord grant more its direct fruits of the labors of Bro. L. H. Eby, of Payette, who held forth in this city to perishing souls for a little over two weeks, when, owing to inclement weather, he had to close. Although we felt that others were near the kingdom. It is hard to understand why some will wait until the end of a meeting,—or, in fact, for a protracted meeting at all,—to be saved, when they know their duty and that it is to be done our duty is one thing and to do it is very often quite another thing. We have also one letter and received one, since our last report.—David Betts, Nampa, Idaho, Feb. 8.

Nampa.—Elder Ellis M. Studebaker commenced a series of Normal and a series of meetings Jan. 18, closing Feb. 2. We had Bible study from 9:30 A. M. to 12 M., and preaching at 7:30 P. M. We had a crowded house every night. Seven persons have been baptized and one awaits the rite. Bro. Studebaker has been faithful and preached the Word with power. The church is now reaping the harvest of the seed sown in Sunday-school work. Many more are counting the cost. The meetings should have continued another week.—Wm. H. Lichty, Nespere, Idaho, Feb. 8.

ILLINOIS.

Mount Vernon.—The time appointed for our love feast at the Pleasant Grove house, Mt. Vernon, was changed to Sept. 23 instead of the time previously given.—Robert C. Wells, Bluffer, Ill., Feb. 1.

Panther Creek.—Our church met in council Jan. 17, with Bro. Solomon Buckley presiding. Bro. J. H. Baker was chosen elder for the next year. Two letters were granted.—E. C. Cawley, Roanoke, Ill., Feb. 11.

INDIANA.

Elkhart City.—Bro. J. W. Lear, of Cerro Gordo, Ill., began a series of meetings at this place Jan. 8. The meetings continued until the 31st, when Bro. Lear was called home on account of sickness in his family. Our church was regretful to see the meetings close at this time, as a good interest was shown, and the meetings were well attended. On the Sunday following two were baptized. Four letters of membership were also read; and the Sunday-school, which Bro. Lear organized, was increased to 146. Jan. 26 Sister Mary Quinter was with us and gave a very interesting address.—Mrs. Blanche A. Miller, 141 Garfield Avenue, Elkhart, Ind., Feb. 6.

Logansport.—Jan. 22 Bro. J. W. Stertz, our elder, came to the city. He preached eighteen public sermons and many private ones. His sermons were an encouragement to the saints, and a strong warning to those who are not doing anything for Christ, or only obeying in part. Two young men were received by baptism. Sister Mary Quinter visited with her father and assisted in the singing, which was very much appreciated. Bro. Stertz remained with us over Sunday and attendance.—Sarah G. Felthouse, 717 Oak St., Logansport, Ind., Feb. 9.

Lower Deer Creek church met in council Feb. 4, with our elder, David Dilling, presiding. We were also pleased to have Eld. Gilbert Stineabaugh with us during this meeting. As our present elder's time has expired, Bro. Stineabaugh was chosen as our elder for the coming year. Church officers were elected as follows: Bro. Ora Spitler, clerk; Bro. John Wehmeyer, writing and Sunday-school correspondent. Sunday-school officers were also elected, with Bro. Ora Spitler as superintendent and Sister Mary Spitler, assistant. Elders Dilling and Stineabaugh remained with us over Sunday and preached three times. An application for membership and reapplication to be restored.—Sadie Hoff, R. D. 3, Camden, Ind., Feb. 6.

Pleasant Dale.—With the assistance of Bro. J. Edson Ulery, of Onekama, Mich., we held our series of meetings which began Jan. 2, and closed with the council meeting Jan. 30. Bro. Ulery used for his sermons subjects from both the Old and New Testaments. We studied "Jesus Christ Master of Men," and "The Sending Out of His Twelve Apostles," which were very instructive and helpful to those with the minds of many who attended. The church feels encouraged and built up. Three were baptized, one by letter and two by confession and repentance. The attention and interest were of the best, as Bro. Ulery is a very able and forcible Bible teacher.—Lizzie Baumgartner, R. D. 2, Monroe, Ind., Feb. 7.

Spring Creek church met in council Feb. 4, with Bro. J. D. Mishler presiding. Bro. Jesse Calvert, of Nappanee, and committee was appointed to secure a minister to assist in holding our meetings. We shall have ministerial visits as follows: Aaron Mishler, secretary; John Ross, treasurer; Sarah Mishler, assistant secretary. Bro. Mishler preached a cradle roll, with Sister J. D. Mishler as president.—Nora A. Cross, Bristol, Ind., Feb. 8.

Walnut Level church met in council Feb 4. Bro. D. M. Byerly presided. We will begin a series of meetings April 15, to be conducted by Bro. Jesse Calvert, of Nappanee, Ind., R. D. 2, Box 49, Bluffton, Ind., Feb. 8.

Wakarusa.—Bro. Ira Boyer, our elder, but we have an evergreen Sunday-school with good interest and good attendance. We have prospects for a Christian Workers' meeting soon. Bro. Ira Bicker was with us Feb. 5, and gave us two inspiring sermons. Bro. J. H. Longenecker, of R. 3, Peru, to be with us in a series of meetings in March.—Iva Harmeson, R. D. 11, Winchester, Ind., Feb. 6.

IOWA.

Cedar.—This church deferred its January council on account of bad weather and sickness till Feb. 4, when they met in the Pleasant Valley house. Business matters were disposed of in two hours and a half, in arranging for the year's work. Bro. Charles Wise, of Kansas was Sunday-school superintendent; Bro. Paul Wingert, president of the Christian Workers' meeting; Bro. Jesse Wise, one of the ministerial helpers. We are glad to report good interest in both of these departments of church work. Bro. Frank Meyers was chosen as clerk; Bro. Jesse Wise, writing correspondent. We are glad to report the past year as being one of progress. Nine were received by baptism, and two by letter. We called to have a love feast in the latter part of May, the date to be arranged for later. Bro. Jesse Wise was chosen delegate, and Bro. Wise was chosen church correspondent.—Bessie I. Boyer, Clarence, Iowa, Feb. 8.

Notice.—The Mission Board of Southern Iowa expect to work in their regular session March 4, at Ottumwa. Any one having business to bring to the board will please have it received accordingly, and have it in their possession previous to that time.—Peter Brower, Packwood, Indian, Iowa, Feb. 9.

KANSAS.

Chanute.—Our church met in regular council Jan. 1. Bro. S. B. Clark, of Thayer, Kansas, was with us, and we had an enjoyable meeting. Much interest was taken in the business interests of the church. Bro. Clark's pastoral relationship was present. Sister Susie Peters was elected Sunday-school superintendent; Sister Ida Hilton, secretary-treasurer; the writer, Messenger agent, church solicitor and church clerk; Bro. A. G. Leslie, church treasurer. We decided to have a series of meetings to begin the 1st of the last letter. A special council was called for Feb. 19, to take care of some matters. Bro. Clark will preach for us and act as minister to the second degree. We feel encouraged to do all we can to help the cause, knowing we have the Lord's promise to be with us in the work. Our Sunday-school is growing rapidly and a good interest is being taken up.—J. H. Holloway, Chanute, Kans., Feb. 4.

Marion Center.—At this writing we are having some pleasant meetings in this city. Our people have a very commodious and comfortable house in which to hold their meetings. There is about three hundred members in this church. The practice of spending April and May, or part of May, in Missouri, principally in Linn County, seems to be the order of years. This winter I have taken the longest vacation I have had since I began preaching, which is now over ten years. I am enjoying better health now than I did fifty years ago.—A. Hutchison, Marion Center, Kans., Feb. 4.

Kansas Center.—Feb. 4 we held our council, Eld. H. T. Brubaker presiding. A good deal of business was disposed of. The report of the annual meeting was read and approved. We were elected for the coming year. Eleven church letters have recently been granted. Bro. Brubaker has been with us for a visit.—Mary E. Mohler, R. D. 1, Box 3, Lyons, Kans., Feb. 8.

Kansas City.—Feb. 4 we held our council, Bro. Daniel W. A. Kinzie were called to the home of Bro. John Studebaker and his sister, Sister Susie Hoff, who are sick, and both of them have been afflicted for some time. First Brother John was taken sick, and after a while Sister Susie took a relapse. Sister Susie, the aged grandma, is weak and feeble. For a short time she has been anointed, and each time she has been raised and healed. Bro. John also feels strengthened and consoled by the blessed privilege given through our redeeming Savior. After the anointing our church met in council. Brethren Roy Herr, Dave Studebaker and George Harmon were elected as a committee to solicit means for the sheltering brethren. Our collection for church work amounts to $20.00. We have appointed Bro. Daniel Hoff, minister to locate here. We can not prosper much without a shepherd. The sheep will go astray without a shepherd. We are longing for some faithful minister to answer our call. Who will come?—Elizabeth Clark, R. D. 4, Box 31, Lawrence, Kans., Feb. 7.

Wichita.—Our services have been well attended this winter, especially has our Sunday-school increased in attendance. At present our pastor is out among the churches of our District, giving mission talks and receiving funds to carry on the work in the District. In his absence the pulpit has been filled by ministers from McPherson.—Susie Jacques, 1109 Wabash Ave., Wichita, Kans., Feb. 9.

MARYLAND.

Welty.—Jan. 30 Bro. William M. Howe came to this church to conduct a Bible study. He was with us over Sunday. The there were two sessions a day, of an hour and three-quarters each. The Word of God was opened and Revelation unsealed. Bro. Howe is a good instructor and made it very interesting and helpful. The attendance was fine, and all seem good, and felt greatly benefited. Many new thoughts were brought out. —Susanna M. Newcomer, R. D. 3, Smithburg, Md., Feb. 7.

MICHIGAN.

Coleman.—After our regular service at the Blue schoolhouse Feb. 5, Brethren John Killian and Nathan McKinney, of Beaverton, came to this place, a distance of miles and came to the Stone schoolhouse, where there is conducted a union Sunday-school. After Sunday-school Bro. Killian preached to a full house of young people. After services there was a unanimous request for the Brethren to preach for them every two weeks. The next service will be held on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 12. A few of our members live near this schoolhouse, and our number is increasing by those moving here, to take advantage of the opportunity to get good and cheap homes. We hope soon to have a churchhouse in or near Coleman.—Bessie Ward, R. D. 3, Beaverton, Mich., Feb. 8.

MISSOURI.

Novada church met in council Feb. 4, with Eld. Leander Smith presiding. Our series of meetings is to begin April 1, and continue over the fourth Sunday in that month. Eld. E. Bro. Smith will conduct the meetings. Since our last report five more have put on Christ in baptism. The Lord is richly blessing us bountifully. Our prayer is that more believe, and we hope soon to have a strong church here that will be a power for good.—Mrs. Ida Bash, 230 North Delk Street, Nevada, Mo., Feb. 4.

South St. Joseph Mission.—Last Friday evening we were again made to rejoice to see two more precious souls put on Christ in baptism. Both are members of families. After the baptismal service we convened in a special council meeting. Four other letters were granted, and Bro. Jesse B. Bro. E. E. John, of McPherson, Kans., who was stopping with us for a short visit on his way to Morrill, Kans., acted as moderator. Bro. D. M. Wolfe was elected to the first office of Bro. W. H. Hale, to the office of deacon. Brother and Sister Hoffman will be with us over Sunday. Sister Mary Hale was not present. The church also decided that Brother and Sister Hoffman remain in the city with us over Sunday until Jan. 1, 1912.—W. A. Deardorff, 504 Virginia Street, St. Joseph, Mo., Feb. 6.

MONTANA.

Otter Creek.—We reorganized our Sunday-school on Thanksgiving Day, with Brother Thomas Troyer, superintendent. Sister Bowman is our superintendent. We began our work for the new year on Jan. 8. We elected to have Bro. Warren Bowman, with Bro. Nathaniel Troyer as president; Bro. Warren Bowman, secretary. We have Sunday-school with preaching services following each Sunday at 10 A. M., and attended by a full hour, followed by Christian Workers' Meeting, each Sunday at 3 P. M. The interest is good, and Sunday-school work at present is manifested. At present we hold our meetings in a small schoolhouse, but we are in hopes of building as expect to have our church built next summer. We have two ministers among us, Brother Hale and Brother Nathaniel Troyer, although we are few in number. We are not organized as a congregation, but expect to be next summer. The weather has been as good as could be expected, so far this month. We have had very little cold weather, but considerable wind and some snow. We are glad to report all well in their location to come and see our country. The writer was elected to act as correspondent for the Messenger each month.—A congregation.—M. Alva Long, Big Timber, Mont., Feb. 7.

NEBRASKA.

Highline church met in council Feb. 4, with our elder, Bro. Mishler, in charge. We expect to have a love feast sometime during the coming year, but have not decided which month to be conducted by Bro. A. C. Root. We have the encouraging prospects of another minister moving among us. Bro. Mishler preached two helpful sermons while with us.—Katie E. Hoffert, Moorefield, Nebr., Feb. 8.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Minot.—Our mission work is moving along by the earnest, consecrated and faithful efforts of the workers engaged in different departments of the work. We have had very much sickness among our workers for some time past, and the attendance at our meetings has been affected as a result, otherwise, since our last report, other congregations in the District have sent garments and bedding. Blessings be upon those earnest and sociable souls. Bro. Hilton has been out from the city on over Sunday, and Bro. Hilton fed us with spiritual food from Genesis. We have been compelled to labor in limited circumstances, but their hearts responded to the heavenly offering, and the Lord has blessed them for it. Bro. Hilton responsible for financial offerings alone, but may we also forward the work in other departments as we are all engaged in the real activities of church work, wherever the Lord may direct. May much of the story of love be taught and heralded here and now that we may be ready for Christ.—D. Warren Shock, Box 625, Minot, N. Dak., Feb. 8.

Harvey.—Feb. 4 we held our council meeting. Three letters were granted. Bro. John McLean is Messenger agent. Bro. Andrew Hutchison is to be with us in meetings in June. On account of bad weather and bad roads, one of our preaching appointment changed for a month or two.—Alma Vancil, York, N. Dak., Feb. 6

OHIO.

Green Spring church met in council Feb. 4. In the absence of our presiding elder, Bro. G. W. Sellers, of Bryan, Ohio, presided. Considerable business came before the meeting. Six letters were granted. Bro. Sellers was chosen for love feast June 17. We have arranged for a series of meetings to be conducted by Bro. Reuben Shroyer, of New Berlin, Ohio. Brethren S. U. L. Kleplinger, Dayton, Ohio, Feb. 11.

She being in very good health, nearly eighty years old, the fracture is unlimited, and in response to her request I went to Eugene, getting Bro. Henry Miller, of Junction City, to go with me. Lindsay Light, Clover Creek, Bedford, Pa., Feb. 6.

Early, from Virginia, came to this place and opened a series of meetings at the Earlville house, preaching every night and Sunday morning the 21st, and held three day meetings. Others are counting the cost.—Sallie Pfautz, Bareville, Pa., Feb. 8.

Everett.—During the three-weeks' union evangelistic meetings, which were well attended throughout, one soul accepted the Saviour fully, and was baptized, making the seventh baptism. At the close of these meetings Brb. M. C. Swigart, of Germansville, came to us and preached the last doctrinal sermon to a crowded house each night.—H. W. Simmons, Everett, Pa., Feb. 9.

Huntingdon church has lately laid to rest four of its members: Bro. D. F. Swayne, Bro. Joseph Carroll, Bro. Budd Hamilton, and Sister Sarah Ann Isenberg. It is still the more important that the young people fill up the broken ranks, and give heed to the service of the Lord. It is also thankfully as those did who are passing over the river. Bro. H. B. Brumbaugh, of our congregation, and Bro. George Brumbaugh, of Markleysburg, have gone to Florida, to escape the stormy winds of early spring. We hope they will have a pleasant sojourn. Their stay is made more pleasant because of their genial neighbors, Bro. and Sister Lehman, of Martinsburg, or Lewistown, Pa. Address Isaac at St. Petersburg, Florida.—Eleanor J. We hope again to be favored by one of our dear sister, Cora Ringgold, who is now at her home at Bridgewater, undergoing treatment for her eyes, which became affected last year, during her labors with us. Let us all entreat our Heavenly Father in her behalf, that she may be used to his glory and the upbuilding of his kingdom here on earth, having more light. CORRESPONDENCE

FROM OMAHA, NEBR.

Bro. Levi Snell and wife, of Cambridge, Nebr., came to us Jan. 14. They spent two weeks here at this Mission, then went to South Omaha, and preached nine sermons. Last night he preached at the home of an aged sister. As a visible result of the efforts one dear young sister was baptized, and one applicant awaits the rite. A number were almost persuaded. We pray that they may yet decide for Christ. There was a great deal of sickness at the beginning of the meetings, that interfered with the attendance.

Bro. Lauver, also of Octavia, was with us over last Sunday and preached both morning and evening. The outlook is most promising, now, for the Mission. A number of families have become interested that before we were seemingly unable to reach.

During the time the following brethren were with us and preached one or more sermons: E. M. Studebaker, A. Hutchison, S. Z. Sharp, D. L. Miller, Geo. Mishler, Ira Wagoner, Ezra Flory, A. J. Nickey, J. E. Young, Galen B. Royer, Virgil Finnell, Levi Meck, Levi Snell, and Peter Forney.

Seventeen souls were baptized into the kingdom and two were restored to fellowship. We have Sunday-school and Christian Workers' Meeting, and two preaching services each Lord's Day. Wednesday night we have a teacher-training class in connection with our regular prayer meeting. Arrangements are being made to hold regular preaching services in South Omaha. This is a very needy field. There are hardly any Brethren churches there. The people are ripe for the Word of God. Surely the harvest is plenteous but the laborers are few! Pray for the work in this great, wicked city!

AT HOME AGAIN.

Oct. 18, 1910, I left home for a western trip. The first stop was at Lanark, Illinois. Here the weeks' series of meetings is held at their country church, six miles south of the city. The next visit was twenty miles south, at Edwards County, where my brother, Eld. J. W. B. Hylton, lives.

After spending nearly one week visiting here, my brother conveyed wife and me to Belvidere, about thirty-five miles south. From this point we went by rail to Nashville, Okla., where nearly two weeks were spent with the Brethren in evangelistic work. We then returned to Conway Springs, Kans., and spent two weeks very pleasantly with the Father's children. From here wife returned home. I returned to Larned to hear Eld. J. E. Crist preach, which I enjoyed very much for a few evenings.

While at Larned company with Eld. M. Keller and others, I took an auto ride into Ness County, to look at the country. Here is some beautiful country, ready for the plow, where a few Brethren are locating. Bro. H. H. Kinsey, of Larned, is interested in locating a colony of Brethren at this point.

Next I went to Bloom, Ford County, about one hundred miles southwest of Larned, by rail. Here the Brethren have recently organized a church, and a new house of worship is about completed. Eld. D. W. Weddle has the oversight of the church. I preached twice, while here, to fair congregations.

After this I visited the home of Bro. J. E. Crist, in Scott County, about 150 miles northwest. I had the privilege of meeting his congregation once. I next went to Edwards County, where I held a few meetings.

Dec. 31 I started east, stopping at Lawrence to give a series of meetings at the Pleasant Grove house, eight miles south. This church is greatly in need of a resident minister. Brethren J. A. Studebaker and Roy Herr are the deacons. Any one who may be interested can write either of these brethren at Lawrence, Kans., R. D. 4. Here I was joined by my brother, and together we went to Mansfield, Mo., where we spent nearly a week in visiting relatives, friends and Brethren. We also preached a few times.

The last place visited was Topaz, Mo., where we have a brother-in-law and family living. Here I preached the last sermon on my western trip.

Now I am at home again, after an absence of about three and a half months. It was my privilege to see some baptized and others restored to fellowship while on this trip. I shall never forget the kindness and hospitality shown me during my western journey. After April 1 my address will be Bloom, Kans. C. D. Hylton.

BIBLE INSTITUTE OF JUNIATA BIBLE SCHOOL.

The special Bible Term for 1911, Jan. 20 to Jan. 29, was, in some respects, the most successful yet held. Next went to Edwards County, where I held a few meetings.

BIBLE INSTITUTE OF JUNIATA BIBLE SCHOOL.

The special Bible Term for 1911, Jan. 20 to Jan. 29, was, in some respects, the most successful yet held. The attendance and enrollment were larger than ever before, not only by brethren from a distance, but also by the resident church membership, the faculty of the College, and citizens of the town of Huntingdon. The quality of the work was of a high grade and carried out according to announced program.

At 8: 40 A. M. was the library period. All were encouraged to go to the library for investigation and research work. At 9: 25 A. M. were the chapel exercises. At 9: 45 Bro. D. W. Kurtz, of Philadelphia, Pa., a graduate of the College, and formerly a member of the Faculty, gave an exegetical and expository study of the Book of Galatians. The teachings of Paul were set forth forcefully and forth. Paul's emphasis on the "Gospel versus law," the spiritual versus the formal and material, and faith in its relation to works, were very clearly presented.

The following period was taken by Prof. A. H. Haines, in the consideration of the "Apocryphic Literature." The books of Daniel and Revelation were taken as the basis of study. The type and character of the literature, as distinguished from pure prophecy, were clearly presented to the class. The Book of Daniel was given its proper setting. The Book of Daniel was found to come from the Greek period, when Greek culture and civilization were attempting to crush the Jew. Antiochus Epiphanes IV. was the great personage opposing the Jew and encouraging the Greek. The Book of Revelation came in the Roman period, when the Roman power was attempting to crush the Christian church. By this point of view much of the speculation, fancy, and imagination, is removed from the book, and it becomes an inspired symbolism, largely to the time and circumstances when and at the time the books were written.

At 2 P. M. Bro. J. G. Blough discussed "The Church and Missions," using the Book of Acts as a guide to the work. Bro. Blough is an alumnus of Juniata, and has been on the India mission field for the past seven years. It was a delight and pleasure to have Brother and Sister Blough with us. He opened up the book very helpfully and practically, and impressed and brought very close home many valuable lessons for both the home and foreign missionary; also lessons for the general Christian worker.

At 2: 45 P. M. Bro. T. T. Myers took up his subject, namely, "Problems of the Minister and Sunday-school Teacher." Bro. Myers' long experience as a successful and efficient pastor, enabled him to handle his subject with efficiency and skill. The time proved entirely too short for the consideration of the many things vital to the minister and Sunday-school worker.

This period was followed by Bro. Kurtz, in the discussion of "Bible and Church Doctrines." Such subjects as Christ, God, The Church, The Scriptures, Symbols, The Doctrine of Healing, were considered. These subjects elicited much interest and were ably handled by Bro. Kurtz.

Each day, at 4: 15 P. M., Bro. Blough talked about "The Missionary at Work." He gave a clear presentation of home life in India; also of the work of the church, —educational, industrial and medical work. The prospects seem very encouraging, and his one great plea is for more and efficient workers among these heathen people. The presence of Sister Blough was much appreciated. She gave some helpful and appreciative talks. She also was once a student of Juniata College.

On Saturday afternoon, Jan. 28, the Sisters' Mission Band of the home church gave a very inspiring and interesting program. These sisters, by their self-sacrificing and consecrated efforts, are doing much to advance the cause of the Master.

Evangelistic services were begun Saturday evening, Jan. 14, and closed Sunday evening, Jan. 29. During these services twelve souls confessed Christ. Bro. Quincy Leckrone, of Royersford, did the preaching. Bro. Leckrone is a logical and thoughtful preacher. His sermons afford much food for thought, and contain much helpful instruction. His services were much appreciated. The singing, under the leadership of Bro. Basinger, was a success.

It is a satisfaction to be able to say that the instructors at this Bible Institute, outside of the regular Bible School Faculty, were men who are the product of Juniata College and Bible School. Bro. J. M. Blough was graduated in the College, a member in the class of 1903, receiving his B. A. degree. Bro. D. W. Kurtz was graduated in the Class of 1905, also receiving a B. A. degree.

These facts are stated simply to bring to the attention of our people, that the time has come, when, as a people, we are ready to accept and encourage the very best product our schools can give us. We need the very best talent on the foreign field, in the home land, and as pastors of our churches. We are also more than ever convinced that Christian character, scholarship and efficiency must and will succeed and be appreciated. Has not the time come, when more of the very best talent of our young men and young women may be consecrated and given to the church? May God and his Christ help these young people to so decide!

Huntingdon, Pa., Feb. 2. Amos H. Haines.

FROM AURORA, MO.

We are still moving along with our Sunday-school and preaching services, but are laboring under great discouragement. We have a very good people, and we have yet still hold our meetings in the city hall, which is not a very ideal place. Sometimes it is very dusty, especially the next day after some gathering.

We had hoped to have a series of meetings, at the close of which it was expected that a thorough canvass would be made to secure funds towards building a house of worship. But we were disappointed, as Bro. Wyatt, of Joplin, Mo., the minister on whom we were depending, had to quit evangelistic work and go to work in the white lead plant, in order to meet his financial obligations. Surely, the work at this place is receiving the benefit of the reviner's fire, but we hope that God will again lay his hands in healing upon the work.

We would be so glad if some minister would come to hold some meetings, in order to give the necessary impetus to our work. We are all, more or less, limited in means, but we hope to prove ourselves rich in grace. If we can manage to get some one to hold a series of meetings, we can show the people that we are really in earnest. Then we will make a canvass for building funds; and if it so pleases our Master, we can go on with the work.

We recently organized a Christian Workers' Meeting, which meets every two weeks. The members are taking quite an interest in that line of work. We have prayer meeting every Thursday night. We ask the members to pray for us that we may be able to revive the work at this place.

Aurora, Mo., Feb. 7. Clemma Peebler.

BETHEL CHURCH, TEXAS.

Jan. 21, at 2 P. M., with Bro. J. A. Miller, of Manvel, Texas, in charge, the members here were organized into a working congregation under the name of Bethel church, of Bee Co., Texas. The organization has twenty members, with three ministers in the second degree; two, in the first degree, and one deacon.

Officers were chosen as follows: Bro. Jacob Witmore, of Portland, Texas, elder in charge; Bro. J. A. Strohm, secretary; Bro. F. J. Miller, treasurer; Bro. Garnet Wales, agent for the Brethren literature; Sister Ethel Strohm, missionary solicitor; the writer, Messenger correspondent; Bro. Jacob Strohm, Sunday-school superintendent; Brethren William H. Strohm, Geo. E. Wales and F. J. Miller, trustees; Brethren Fred E. Strohm, Geo. E. Wales and F. J. Miller, committee for the Brethren Mutual Insurance Company of Kansas.

After organizing we had a brief examination service, and adjourned to meet again at 7 P. M. for a love feast, which was very much enjoyed by all. Bro. J. A. Miller officiated. All members were present for all these services, in each of which the good Spirit prevailed. We have a fine body of members; have Sunday-school and preaching each Sunday; are located about eighteen miles from Kenedy and twelve miles from Green, both of which are railroad towns. The address of all the members is Kenedy, R. D. 1.

DEATH OF ELD. LEE ANGLE.

Eld. Lee Angle, the subject of this sketch, was born Nov. 27, 1841, in Franklin County, Va., died at his home, in the same county, within the bounds of the Germantown congregation, Dec. 25, 1910, at the age of sixty-nine years, one month and eight days.

In 1870, while a young man, he united with the Church of the Brethren. He lived a faithful, Christian life, and proved his word.

He was married to Mary F. Boone Nov. 31, 1869. Two children blessed this union, who, with the companion, died while young. Jan. 7, 1873, he was married to Elizabeth S. Flora. To this union were given four daughters and seven sons. One son died in infancy. All the children are members of the church.

Eld. Angle served the church some years as a deacon. In 1886 he was elected to the ministry, was advanced to the second degree in 1891, and in July, 1908, ordained as an elder.

Bro. Angle was not a great evangelist, but a man with a great heart, noted for zeal and earnestness, simplicity of life, and loyalty to his profession.

The church has lost one of her wisest counselors and brave defenders of the faith. There can scarcely be too much said concerning the influence of his life in the home, as he lived it every day. He served three years in the war between the States.

The funeral was held Dec. 27, 1910, in the Sandy Ridge church, where a large assembly convened. The occasion was improved by Elders Henry Ikenberry and H. J. Woodie. Text, John 11: 25, 26. Interment in the near-by cemetery.

May the memory of his devoted and pious life be a benediction to those who mourn their loss, and to all who knew him. Bessie E. Barnhart.

BRANDON, COLORADO.

Our colony is increasing in numbers. Bro. Albert Shade, of Charles City, Iowa, and Bro. Amos Deeter, of Grand Junction, Colo., came here and secured farms last week. Bro. J. M. Crouse, who is enjoying a splendid hotel business, is our only resident minister, and preaches twice a month. The writer was elected superintendent of the union Sunday-school for the present year.

We are very anxious for the Brethren to get a strong hold here now, while lands are cheap and while we can create sentiment. The Brethren who have come here are favorably impressed and I believe we will have a rich community and a strong church. S. S. Sanger.

This little volume was not written in a day. Much patient research and careful study are clearly evinced throughout. Better not begin the reading for at a time when you have an important appointment near at hand. When once you begin it you will not want to stop short of the end. NOTES NOT CLASSIFIED

Peter's Creek.—Our church met in council at the Oak Grove house Feb. 4, with Bro. D. C. Wright presiding. Several matters of importance came before the meeting. Steps were taken to forward the Sunday-school and missionary interests of the church. Our next council meeting will be held at Peter's Creek house, April 1.—Mildred Nalf, R. D. 3, Roanoke, Va., Feb. 8.

East Wenatchee.—Bro. W. H. Eikenberry, of Barnum, Minn., began a series of meetings at this place Jan. 15, and remained with us until Feb. 5. Bro. Eikenberry broke unto us the "Bread of Life" with much power and wisdom. Although there were no immediate accessions, yet we believe that some were made to realize their unsaved condition. His practical, wholesome manner of presenting the truth did much toward the spiritual strengthening of the church and those here.—Vinnie A. Seiler, Box 872, Wenatchee, Wash., Feb. 6.

Notice.—The Postoffice Department has recently established a postoffice at Empire, Cal., under the name of Empire. Our correspondents will please address us at this place instead of Modesto. The dedication of our new meeting-house is set for March 12, with a love feast the day previous. We extend an invitation to our friends to be with us at this time named. We are having spring-like weather. Garden making is now in order, the fields are green as in May in the East. The Empire congregation is still on the increase. We now number about 170 members, and more are coming in the near future.—W. and Matilda Sangrey, Empire, Stanislaus Co., Cal., Feb. 9.

Ogden Creek church met in quarterly council on Saturday afternoon, Feb. 11, with our presiding elder, Bro. Geo. Swihart, and Bro. J. D. Rife, of Mount Zion, present. Three were received by letter, and five were dismissed by letter. We decided to have a pastoral visit, or a visit by our presiding elder, Bro. S. S. Ullery, has been confined to his bed for several weeks, with dry gangrene, and suffering a little intensely at times.—Sallie E. Cart, North Manchester, Ind., Feb. 14.

Silver Creek.—Bro. J. H. Wright, of Rossville, Ga., came to the Silver Creek congregation and began meetings at the Walnut Grove house Jan. 7, continuing until the 22nd. Owing to the inclement weather the attendance was not so large. The meetings, however, were spiritual and the members were strengthened and built up.—Mrs. Otto Fisher, Pioneer, Ohio, Feb. 12.

Bandon.—Eld. C. A. Barklow, of Myrtle Point, Oregon, began a series of meetings at this place Jan. 14. The attendance was good but the meetings had to be closed on account of very inclement weather, while the attendance and interest were still increasing. We feel that good seed was sown here and later on will bear fruit. The Brethren own three good lots here, and expect to build next summer. There are, at present, nine members here. Bandon is a lively little seaport town of over 2,000 souls.—W. R. Mavity, Bandon, Oregon, Feb. 6.

WITH THE "BRETHREN" IN THE HOLY LAND.

To travel Bible Lands, tread sacred places, and see sites and scenes connected with Old and New Testament history, is the privilege of the few. To be in the company of those congenial, and all of the same mind, and to be conducted by one thoroughly acquainted with the routes and ground, is the privilege of the select few. Such, however, has been the experience of the "Brethren" party that arrived in Palestine early last November, to investigate things for themselves with the Book in their hands.

Bro. W. R. Miller certainly does not err on the side of giving his people too little for their money, and if he organizes another tour to Palestine, in the coming autumn, there ought to be at least fifty ready to travel with him, for they are not dragged through the land and city by a dragoman, but cared for personally by Bro. Miller himself, who has as much interest in what there is to see as the people he brings to see the sights.

The party just dissolved had a continuation of experiences and surprises, and they certainly can not complain of a lack of variety. Soon after landing in the Holy City they were invited to attend the wedding of a native son of one of their traveling companions. Although far from home, all was done to make bride, bridegroom and friends feel that they were in the midst of those that were one with them, and even in bonny America no better dinner could have been served than was provided by the host and hostess of the hotel where most of the party made their home.

Then, instead of the average five days in Jerusalem, the Brethren were allowed plenty of time to see all there is, in and around the city. In fact, so elastic were W. R.'s plans that unlimited time could be arranged for by those desiring to stay longer and see more.

Excursions, not usually made by travelers, were made by the Brethren. The Philistine country was thoroughly explored. Some went into Moab, and but for the Bedouin rebellion would have reached Edom, and returned via the wilderness of Zin. A trip to Anathoth, Gibea, Michmash, Rock Rimmon, Ophrah, and Bethel was planned and carried out; in fact many places were visited that made Bible study more real and the characters and places very realistic.

One Sunday permission was gained for the party to visit Gethsemane, and there, under one of the old giant olive trees, we had a service, the memory of which will linger long in the minds of those who were present. In fact, at many places along the route the trip was enriched by reading from the Scriptures,—a thing which can only be done when the members of a party are in sympathy with each other and the things they came out to see.

I hear that there is a prospect of another party being organized by Bro. W. R. Miller. If such is the case, I should like to advertise my intending to visit the Holy Land, to get in touch with the organizer and certainly travel with him. Whoever does will gain in information, sightseeing, comfort, companionship, knowledge, and, last but not least, reliable guidance and honest dealing. It has been a pleasure to the writer to associate with, and help, Bro. W. R. while in Palestine, and any that may come along in the future may rely on the same, as long as I am in the land to help.

AROUND THE WORLD

Temperance Legislation in Oklahoma.

Though but a comparatively new State, Oklahoma has decided opinions on the matter of temperance reform, and is not slow to put them into effect. A recent enactment specifies that the possession of liquor in any place of business or amusement, or any club or resort, for any purpose, is made a criminal offense, and conviction under the section disfranchises the person, so convicted, for five years. This puts the responsibility and penalty for law violation where it justly belongs. Transgression of a just law is inexcusable in the sight of God as well as man.

English Crusade Against Mormons.

Active efforts of the English Reform Bureau have located 325 American Mormons in Great Britain, who are engaged in inducing young women to emigrate to Utah. The organization has also collected signed statements of parents whose daughters have been enticed to America, and is in possession of irrefutable evidence that the Mormon church is in the habit of paying for the transportation of converts from England to Utah, in violation of the United States immigration law. Whatever leniency may be shown to Mormonism elsewhere, the present attitude in Great Britain will not admit of any trifling in suppressing Mormon proselytizing, root and branch. Likely the rigid exclusion law, enforced by the German Empire, will be adopted by England as the most effective means of thoroughly curbing Mormonism.

Astounding Losses.

Most of our readers have noted the progress and final settlement of the garment workers' strike, which for 133 days disturbed the industrial world of Chicago. Now, since harmony has once more been restored to ruffled feelings, and definite assurance has soothed disquieting fears, it is well, perhaps, to take a brief survey. Every demand of the workers except the "closed shop" has been granted, but at what a sacrifice! The 35,000 men and women, who were out during the progress of the strike, lost more than $3,000,000 in wages, while their employers sacrificed more than $4,000,000 in orders that they were unable to fill. Four lives were lost and 876 persons arrested for rioting. And yet, all this enormous monetary loss, and other inconvenience resulting therefrom, might have been avoided, had there been a willingness to arbitrate the differences on the plane of gospel fairness and equity.

Decline in Monthly Magazines.

Competent authorities assert that the popularity of the monthly magazines,—multiplied scores in number,—is waning. While it is asserted that some of the more prosperous ones are netting millions for their owners, there is no doubt that others of the many aspirants for public favor have but a precarious existence, which accounts for the many changes and combinations now taking place or impending. No one can fail to see, in looking at the array of literature, now offered to the public, that there is too much printed matter of little real value,—too many books, too many papers, and, of course, too many magazines. Religious journals, and even the Bible itself, do not secure the attention that should be given them, because of this mass of promiscuous reading matter. If not very careful, we may be drawn away by the sensational literature of the day from our highest interests. "But one thing is needful," says Christ, and we do well to make it our study and chief aim.

"Countryside Evangelism."

One of the leading denominations in America is proposing to make a special feature of "countryside evangelism" by utilizing the schoolhouses as outposts for revivalistic campaigns among the rural population. Now, while the Church of the Brethren has been, perhaps, a pioneer along that line of work in many sections, yet there is a manifest tendency among us, at present, to abandon work in country districts, in favor of towns and villages, exclusively. It should be remembered, however, that a most excellent field of labor may be found in many thickly-settled rural districts. Many of these people find it inconvenient to attend the town church, and in the absence of country meetinghouses are quite willing to make use of schoolhouses as places of worship. Many quite successful meetings have in the past been held in the humble schoolhouses of rural districts, and much good will be done still be done in the future if the proper workers could be had. But where shall we look for the rural evangelizers?

New York's Struggle with Secret Orders.

School authorities of New York City are fully convinced of the pernicious influences of secret orders,—fraternities and sororities,—in their high schools. Not only do these societies seriously interfere with the regular school work, but also do they tend to moral degeneracy altogether inexcusable. The total abolishment of these societies has, therefore, been decided upon, and is to be carried out at all hazards. One is made to wonder why a further elimination of secrecy,—among those who are older in years,—might not be equally desirable. Why not "cast off the works of darkness, and put on the armor of light"?

America's Kindness Rewarded.

Of all civilized nations none stands higher in the estimation of the Chinese than the United States, and this, we are glad to state, is due to the kindness shown that people by our nation. The hundreds of Chinese students, now attending American universities, are being educated by means of the funds so graciously returned by the United States to China, when the "Boxer indemnity" was offered us, and only in part accepted. Then, too, it has been the effort of President Taft and the various Secretaries of State, who at times dealt with the Chinese situation, to secure fair play for China, and an "open door" for the benefit of all countries. All this has led the officials of the "Celestial Empire" to look upon our nation with the most friendly feelings. We have "measured unto them" love and kindness, and now get a like return.

The Sunday Evening Problem.

How to get out the people to the Sunday evening appointments has for some time been a question of serious import with members of the various denominations. One of our exchanges suggests that "it is not so much a ministerial problem, as it is a church problem," to be grappled with and solved by the church. Every member of the congregation is concerned in the matter, and to saddle it all on the minister is a act of which even publicans and heathens would probably be ashamed. The church member who stays at home Sunday evenings, and then wonders why his pastor can not fill the church, has some important things to learn yet,—in fact he needs to learn all that pertains to proper behavior in the school of Christ. Not until every member of the church constitutes himself a committee of one to swell the Sunday night audience, will the real problem be solved.

A Commendable Effort.

Two noted German theologians, Adolph Harnack and Friedrich A. Spieker, were the chief speakers at a recent meeting in Queen's Hall, London. It was the special aim of the gathering to perfect an organization of men of both countries to foster friendly relations between the two nations. These two men, speaking with great earnestness and conviction, congratulated the British people on having a King devoted to peace, and predicted that the utmost efforts for a better understanding would characterize future years. The Archbishop of Canterbury presided, and Protestant and Catholic representatives alike participated in the meeting. This movement to unite German and English churches in a Peace League is a result of the Peace Conference at The Hague in 1907. The cordial sympathy of King George and many prominent men of both countries has been enlisted in favor of the movement, and if Emperor William will now give it his hearty support, the work may be carried to successful completion.

Fruits of Idleness.

Long ago some one affirmed that "an idle brain is the devil's workshop," and a forcible illustration of the truthfulness of the adage is furnished by prevailing conditions in the Ohio penitentiary at Columbus. Four hundred men are there shut away, unfortunately, have nothing to do. Since Dec. 12, nine men have gone partially insane because their nerves had been racked by prolonged and enforced idleness until they could no longer stand the strain. "Six days shalt thou labor," "Six days shalt thou labor," seems to indicate an essential requirement of human nature, that can not be ignored without peril. Adam and Eve were to "dress and keep the garden," and Jesus himself dignified labor by engaging in an honorable calling. The officials of the penitentiary would gladly provide labor, were they able to do so without a violation of the State law, which only allows employment to convicts along such lines as will not interfere with outside industrial pursuits. No greater hardship can befall any man than to be deprived of active employment. God's blessing is upon all honest toil. "Not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord."

One Father's Idea of Baseball.

A sorrow-stricken father, whose son was killed in a football game, has probably a more decided abhorrence of its brutalities than others who are in the habit of lauding it as a means of recreation. In this case it appears that even the father's remonstrance to the head of the school did not evoke an apology for the unfortunate circumstance, but rather a defense of football. In a letter for the press the father says: "There is grief and sorrow for father and mother when their darling son is brought home a corpse. There is nothing whatever in baseball that can atone for the sacrifices it demands. It creates a brutal instinct in boys that are the pride of the family." Undoubtedly there could be other forms of recreation devised that are less objectionable than baseball, and more becoming the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus.

Deplorable Conditions in England.

A recent cablegram from London states that 12,000,000 people,—nearly one-third of the population of England,—are without sufficient food. This most lamentable condition calls renewed attention to the fact that more than half of the land of the British Isles is owned by 5,000 people, many of whom are members of the House of Lords. Four million acres of agricultural lands in England have been converted into game preserves during the last six years, in order that the aristocracy of the country may gratify their hunting proclivities. Ninety-nine per cent of the farmers are obliged to rent their land. Of the 42,000,000 inhabitants, only four and a half million are sustained by food products raised in the British Isles. Considering these most unfortunate conditions and reflecting how readily they might be remedied by applying the multiplied millions, now used for war preparations, to the improvement of industrial and agricultural resources, the prayer involuntarily suggests itself, "Thy Kingdom come." Only Christ's gentle reign in the hearts of the people can bring about better conditions.

Missionary Possibilities in the East.

A short time ago reference was made to the unoccupied farms in the State of New York. And what we said in regard to the Empire State is probably true of many other sections of the East. It was urged at the time that our people near that part of the country look up the situation, procure a number of the farms, and locate several substantial colonies of Brethren, with a view of using these centers of influence as strong evangelizing agencies. A number of our people are already looking into the matter, and we hope to report, ere long, some definite and effectual plans. Hundreds of farmers from the various sections are considering the advisability of taking up these eastern farms, and there is no question now that the land will be taken up before long. The Bureau of Farm Statistics, Albany, N. Y., is ready to give needed information to those desiring it. The point, however, in which we are most interested is the missionary possibilities. As a body we do not have a strong foothold in that part of the East, but there is no reason why we should not make the best possible use of the present opportunity. We are abundantly able to make the attempt, and we should go forward with the sole aim of building up the cause, where not now known.

Arabic Most Widely Spoken.

Strange as it may seem, it is the Arabic language, and not the English, that is the most widely-spoken language in the world today. Chinese characters are used by more people, but a knowledge of Arabic character will carry you farther around the world. Throughout the larger part of Africa, in the Philippines, the great islands of Malaysia, parts of China, northern India, Afghanistan, eastern Turkestan, all of Persia, Turkey and Arabia, the sacred alphabet of the Koran is known as the "universal" alphabet of Moslem world. With the Arabic grammar and vocabulary you also find the Mohammedan religion, and there are, perhaps, 250,000,000 people who pray to their God in the language of Mohammed. As far north as Siberia, prayers in the Arabic may be heard. A Mohammedan mosque has been erected in St. Petersburg, Russia, and a similar structure of great magnificence is to be built in London in addition to three already there. All these, and countless other evidences of activity, show that Mohammedanism is by no means dead or dying, and that the doctrines of Islam, as well as the language of the prophet, are cosmopolitan in extent. It is a foe of Christianity that will have to be reckoned with for years to come. Not until the "blackness of darkness" is pierced by the "Sun of Righteousness," will effectual inroads be made upon Mohammedan strongholds.

ESSAYS

Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth

"Tis Better Farther On."

Each life is a sea, still sweeping above
Some sunken city of Is—
The long cherished dream of a cherished love
That only in dreams we kiss.
What yesterdays are sunk deep in the soul,
Above whose lost treasures today's waves roll
To mock what our sad hearts miss.

Oh the glimpses rare of the submerged past!
They gleam in the light awhile,
To mock us with visions, that may not last,
Of faces that used to smile.
And now and then from the busy today
The echoing tones of the far away
Our listening hearts beguile.

But not in the sunken city of Is
Shall the heart its treasures see.
No pilgrims forlorn to an old time bliss
And a vanished past are we;
For all the glad music of olden times
Is only faint echoes of grander chimes
That ring in the time to be.

Alexander Mack's Bible.

BY JOHN S. FLORY.

In Two Parts—Part Two.

In a previous article I gave the evidence to show that the Bible under consideration is the one formerly owned and used by Alexander Mack, the founder of the Church of the Brethren. It is the purpose of the present paper to give some account of the Bible itself, so that the readers of the Messenger can form a definite and intelligent idea in regard to it.

The little old volume has no air of distinction about it, nor does it present an attractive or interesting appearance. That it is quite old is evident at first sight, but age alone does not invest it with its peculiar interest. It is its associations that give it value and fasten it upon our affections. Its connection with a great cause and a great man,—these are the things that give it significance and interest.

In form it is of a style common in Mack's day. It is a small thick volume, 6¼ inches long by 3½ inches wide, and 2¾ inches thick. The binding is in full leather, very heavy and durable,—indeed, real wooden boards covered with calf skin. Nearly two centuries of time have naturally left their marks of decay very lavishly upon it. The leather is now dark with age, cracked and broken. Formerly the lids were secured by two leather clasps, but these are now gone. When the volume came into my possession, one of the lids had been broken off. Fortunately, however, it was not lost, and by the aid of needle and thread and a good deal of patience, I have succeeded in putting it in place again. While this restores the original appearance of the book, it does not restore its durability; it needs to be handled with extreme care.

On first opening the book, one is struck by the large number of blank leaves at the beginning and end of the volume. Nearly a score of these still remain in the back of the book, and about half as many at the front, and there is evidence that some have been removed.

The title pages of the Old and New Testaments are in large ornamental type. That of the New Testament is in black, while that of the Old Testament is rubricated, eight of the twenty-two lines being in red. Following the first title page is a full page of inscription, also in large ornamental type. These three pages show a considerable variety in style and display, yet all are characterized by neatness and good taste.

The volume is inscribed to Simon Henry Adolphus, reigning Count of Lippe, and Lady Johanna Wilhelmina, princess of Nassau, his wife. The inscription is written in the inflated, pompous style common in that day.

Besides this inscription the book contains a preface and several articles designed to give instruction as to the proper way to study the Divine Word. This is followed by a table of contents, giving the names of the books of the Old and New Testaments. This matter occupies the first thirty pages of the Bible.

The text is Luther's translation. Consequently the volume contains the usual apocryphal matter found in the Bibles of that time. Of this there are fourteen books and they fill 136 pages. It will be understood that this is matter not found in our Authorized or Revised Versions. It is not regarded as a part of the Sacred Canon. Some of it, however, is included in the Bibles used by the Roman Catholics even today.

The small pages are printed in double columns, and the text is divided into verses like our Authorized Version. Naturally the type is tolerably small, about of brevier size, I should judge. It is sharp in outline and distinct, however, and may still be read with ease.

The pages are very full. The margins at top, bottom and sides are quite narrow, and if a leaf is the least bit out of plumb it is likely to have no margin at all. In fact, in the Epistle to the Hebrews the ends of the words are cut off on two or three of the leaves.

The Book of Romans seems to have been regarded as especially difficult, as indeed it is. It is preceded by an explanatory preface, filling nearly eight pages. To show clearly that this not a part of the sacred text this preface is printed in slightly larger type and instead of the double columns, the lines extend across the page.

The paper in the volume is, of course, stained, and brown with age. It was evidently of first rate quality. Despite its dinginess, it still has something of the crispness of good bond paper of our time. Throughout, the volume seems to represent the best of material and workmanship.

An interesting question naturally arises as to when and where Mack secured this Bible,—whether in Europe or America. It will be remembered that he came to this country in 1729, twenty-one years after he had organized the church in Europe. After this he lived at Germantown, Pa., and was bishop of the church there until his death in 1735.

Just when or where he secured this Bible cannot be definitely known. Of one thing, however, we can be certain: it is not the Bible he used when he organized the church. The date proves this. But it is probable that he brought it with him from Germany. The reason for thinking so is, that it is not of a make of Bibles that were at all common in use in this country at that time. It was printed at Limgo, in the principality of Lippe, by the court printer, Henry William Meyers, in 1723. Most of the German Bibles, in use in this country at that time, were printed either in Halle or Amsterdam. So it is probable that Brother Mack secured this Bible in Germany some time between 1723 and 1729 and brought it with him when he came to this country.

It is certainly an interesting old volume. It is easy to imagine the old leader pondering its pages and marking here and there a passage that especially impressed him. These markings may prove to have significance. I have not yet found time to look into them carefully. At all events the volume is full of interest and inspiration. Its associations are sacred, its influence is holy. Its message is not different from that of any other Bible, but its history and its connection with the great leader and organizer of an important denomination give it unique and peculiar significance.

But however important the volume may be from its associations, and however much we may prize it as such, we can best show our appreciation of its preservation, and best honor its great owner by striving, as did he, to live out its every principle in our daily lives. May it give us fresh courage to do this!

Why Dr. Torrey Is Not a Mason.

[Mr. William I. Phillips, editor of the Christian Cynosure, wrote Dr. R. A. Torrey, the noted evangelist, and asked his reason for not joining the Masonic Fraternity. Here is his reply, bearing date of Dec. 29, 1910. It is well worth reading and preserving.]

Yours of Dec. 27 received. You ask for my reason why I have not joined the Masonic Fraternity. They are:

First, because God expressly commands believers in Christ, "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers" (2 Cor. 6:14). This is the passage that decided me once and forever on the lodge question. There are many unbelievers in every Masonic lodge. By unbelievers, I do not mean infidels, but I mean unbelievers in a Biblical sense,—any one who has not the kind of faith in Jesus Christ that leads him definitely to accept Jesus Christ as his Savior and Lord. Furthermore, in the Masonic lodge, if I am correctly informed, explicitly rules out, at least in its lower degrees, the name of Christ. I could not join any organization that rules my Lord out. Some of the most wicked and godless men I have ever known have been members of the Masonic lodge, even though their character and conduct were well known to others in the lodge. I could only join a lodge by definitely and knowingly disobeying God.

Second, I have no time to be a Mason. I could only give time to a lodge by taking it from the church, and the church of Jesus Christ needs all the time I have. I have learned by experience that a large number of those persons who are both Masons and church members neglect the prayer meetings and other church obligations for the sake of the lodge. If I had three times as much time as I have, I should want to give it all to the church. I could not be a faithful Mason without being a faithless church member.

Third, I consider what is called "the work" of the Masonic lodge to be childish and foolish. I once took time to study "the work" of the lodges up to the Royal Arch degree. At that time I knew exactly what they did, and I could never understand how a serious-minded man could give time to such tomfoolery. I could understand a child's doing it. When I hear Masons talking together about "the work" of the lodge, I can scarcely refrain from laughing. It is difficult for me to see how any man who has a proper amount of self-respect and manly dignity, can go through what a man goes through when he becomes a Master Mason, and then ever go back to the lodge again to take part in the initiation of another candidate. To my mind it it belittling, degrading and disgusting. My attention was called to it when I was about twenty-two years of age by a man who had been initiated at the Masonic lodge but came out completely disgusted with his experience and who never went back to the lodge again. How any Christian minister can submit to what a minister is compelled to submit when he is initiated into the Blue Lodge, I can not understand. I do not question that there are many excellent men who are members of Masonic lodges, but to me it is incomprehensible how any Christian man can be.

Fourth, to my own personal knowledge, Masonry has been used to protect criminals and other evil-doers from the just consequences of their wrong-doing. In one city where I lived, the proprietor of the vilest and most notorious place in the city could not be touched by the law because he was a Knight Templar. Every other place of the sort was run out of the city but this.

I have known similar things elsewhere that have come under my personal observation.

Fifth, if there was nothing else that kept me from being a Mason, the oaths required of those joining the fraternity would make it absolutely impossible for me to join the Masonic lodge. Some of these oaths are simply shocking, indeed appalling. Either these frightful oaths are meant to be taken seriously and literally, or else they are not. If they are taken seriously, and earnestly, and literally, words can scarcely describe my horror that any Christian man should take such an oath upon himself. If they are not taken seriously and literally,—and in a large proportion of cases they are not,—then they are profane and blasphemous in the extreme.

There are other reasons why I have not joined the Masonic fraternity, but I think these will suffice.

Yours sincerely,

Binghampton, N. Y. R. A. Torrey.

Stop, Look, Read!

BY GRACE E. GNAGEY.

I have been moved to say some things for the benefit of those who have been sending clothing to missions, with the hope that both the sender and the recipient may have the greater blessing.

I believe that if some people who have sent boxes to missions could stand by when their own box is opened, they would say, "Shame, SHAME, that we should have sent these people such worthless truck."

No matter to what city you go; you will find some very, very poor people,—some that are glad, indeed, for cast-off clothing. However, we get some cast-off clothing here that I would not, under any circumstances, offer to the poorest of the poor, and when I say this I believe I am speaking the sentiment of every other mission worker who has handled clothing for the poor.

If a skirt or waist is moth-eaten, or so badly riddled that you would not wear it in your kitchen any more, then don't send such garments to a mission point with the hope of getting any reward for your generosity(?).

If you have a bunch of rags that you could not or would not wear yourself, under any circumstances, take them out in your backyard and set a match to them, or sell them to the ragman; for that is what we must do with them after the freight and drayage have been paid on them.

If you have torn clothing that could be made to look respectable by mending it, please do so before sending it away. You have more time than the minister's wife or the missionary. Had we only one box of garments to mend, it would not be so bad, but remember that if every box and bag that comes here brings torn garments, there will soon be more than two or three people can possibly mend.

You say, "Let the people that get the clothing mend it." That might do if everybody knew how to mend, or if they had the time to do so. Should a mother, who knows little about mending, get a neatly-mended garment, it might help her to mend the next one. We have some mothers who are so busy trying to earn enough to keep the family together, that they can scarcely find time to mend.

Sometimes we receive dirty garments. Couldn't you wash them and send them clean? Some of our poor people are very clean. Those who are not, need to be taught to keep clean; and we couldn't do it by giving them dirty garments. When you send us soiled garments, remember that you are just placing that much more work on the workers. They will wash them, rather than give them out soiled.

Be sure, too, that you never send clothing that has been around contagious diseases, and be very sure that you do not send any "live stock" with your clothing, as has been done at times heretofore.

Sometimes we receive a large number of underskirts for children,—all one size. When you are sending a dozen to one place, why not make different sizes? The children in the city grow the same as they do in the country, and they can not all wear the same size clothing.

Sometimes we get a lot of new underwear, but only half suits. If it takes a whole suit to keep you warm in Illinois, Iowa or Pennsylvania, it does in Minneapolis, Pittsburg, or New York. If it takes a whole suit to keep you warm in the country, it does in the city. We seldom get two full suits the same size. Now, you people who buy your own underwear, don't you always try to have at least two suits alike, so you can change them? Sometimes we must give one person a wool suit and a cotton suit. Some of you good people would be afraid you would die if you changed from wool to cotton in midwinter. There is just as much danger of poor people taking cold as any one else, if they are not properly dressed.

If you have good underwear that is too small for you, and no one in the family can wear it, then give it away, of course. We would much prefer, however, that, instead of sending us new underwear, shoes or stockings, you would send us the money. These various goods can be purchased as cheaply in the city as anywhere else and then you need not pay freight or drayage on them. Then, too, we can buy the sizes we need, and need not have lying around such goods as we can not use.

I do not wish to discourage the sending of clothing to missions where the poor are being cared for. Some good people have sent some very good clothing, but some other very good people might do well to have a little rule to go by. How does this sound: "Don't send anything to the poor you wouldn't wear yourself"? Or, perhaps, better yet," Before sending your box or bag, take an inventory of it and be sure that it is worth the freight and drayage that must be paid on it."

I have thought, sometimes, of dressing up our Sunday-school children in the different things that are sent here. I'll assure you I would have all the colors of the rainbow, and every style under the sun. We have in our possession one small dress that has in it six different kinds of material.

When I stand before our boys and girls in the Sunday-school, I like to see them dressed neatly, clean and tastily. When I go into their homes I like to see the same things.

Not long ago a sister, who happened to be a clerk in a certain store, told me she has had sisters come to that store to buy buttons and upon being asked what kind they wanted they would say, "O anything will do. Give us the cheapest thing you have. They are just for the Aid Society. We are making clothing to send to the Mission."

A button is a very small thing, but I suppose those people would make the same selection in buying material.

Really, doesn't it make a difference? Is anything good enough for the poor? "God loveth a cheerful giver," and I suppose some of these "rags" are given very cheerfully; but I doubt if the Lord would give you any credit for your giving. If some of you saw the Lord coming on the street, wearing some of the things you have sent to the Mission, you would turn the corner before getting to him. "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." Mark 10: 21 says, "Sell what thou hast and give to the poor."

Not so very long ago I heard a good brother in Pennsylvania say, "Some of our farmers ought to sell a 'whole' cow and give it for missions." That would be well. Then let them sell another one and give it to the poor. Just think of it! Take the money you would get for a "whole" cow, or a "whole" hog, and give it to the poor. Try it and the Lord will bless you.

The Brotherhood knows about the "City Missions," but once or twice each year these Missions must remind the churches of their respective Districts that they exist, and that they need money. Why wait to be asked? Send in your donations. They will not be used unless needed. "Freely ye have received, freely give."

Neutralize the Canal.

BY W. H. SANGER.

THIS is a heading of a recent editorial in the Independent, one of the leading peace advocates of this country, and is a fitting subject to have considered through the columns of our church paper. It is, just now, an opportune moment for the Brethren to do a little work for the peace principle which we have so long held sacred, by urging the President and Congress to neutralize the Panama Canal, rather than to fortify it.

Several weeks ago the President sent a message to Congress, urging the fortification of the Canal and recommending an appropriation of $5,000,000 to begin the work. It is well known that this amount would be but the beginning. The aggregate cost would likely approximate ten times that amount, or $50,000,000, and it would then require some $10,000,000 a year to keep it garrisoned. Why add this burdensome amount to our already heavy war taxes? Why prepare for war anyway?

War is an unmitigated evil. It is contrary to the example and teachings of Christ. As Gen. Sherman expressed it: "War is hell." War preparations are wrong, for they are so liable to prove provocative of war, they squander the people's money, and they set an example for other nations, which has already become a menace to the Governments of Europe. They are, in our Christian civilization, a marked incongruity. In our own country especially, owing to our peculiar geographical position and natural resources, they are unnecessary as a protection, even if other nations were to make war against us, which is, at the present time, an absurd supposition. War preparations are a crime against civilization. Viewed from every angle, the greater part of our war preparations and appropriations are unjustifiable.

As for the fortification of the Panama Canal, this is yet less defensible than our other preparations. International courtesy and precedent are against it. The Suez Canal, the Straits of Magellan, the Danube River, the Black Sea, and other places have been neutralized, and if this can be done in the case of the Panama Canal,—and no reason is now known why it can not,—how much better for us and all the world!

A strong fight will be waged against the recommendation of the President. It was opened on the evening following the day on which the President's message was read to Congress, in Cooper Union, New York, by Congressman David J. Foster, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, and James A. Tawney, chairman of the powerful Appropriations Committee. The following resolutions were adopted:

"In view of the fact that the civilized world is united today as never before, by reason of quick transmission of news, interdependence in commerce and finance, because of common intellectual interests, democratic ideals, and the existence of international organizations, unions, bureaus and other institutions which are doing their work irrespective of national boundaries and which tend to make international war hateful, unprofitable and (unless provoked by armaments) unlikely to occur; in view, also, of the gigantic cost of maintaining an armed peace which has brought Europe to the verge of bankruptcy, is hindering the material and social development of America, and even threatens to overwhelm in blood the civilization which has been so long maturing; therefore, be it resolved that we request the President and Congress of the United States in dealing with other nations, to depend as little as possible upon the show and use of force and as much as possible upon reason, good will and justice. And that we especially ask that the people's money shall not be wasted in building and maintaining fortifications on the Panama Canal until our method of neutralization has first been tried and failed, nor that addition shall be made to the present strength of our navy until inclusive arbitration treaties have been offered to all the great nations and been refused by them."

These resolutions set forth in a striking way the good policy and sound judgment of the principle we have been advocating so long. And now, could we not join in and help these men win in their fight for truth and justice? The prospects of a victory seem good, if we only work together. Why could not every brother who has a vote write to his representatives in both houses of Congress, expressing his position on this great question? It would be good also to circulate petitions, hold meetings and pass resolutions to the same effect. This should be done at once. Certainly it would be a great stimulus and encouragement to the peace advocates in Washington to have 20,000 or 30,000 men voice their protest against this proposed increase of our war preparations.

We have "stood" on our peace principle long enough, now let us go a step further and do some telling work for it!

New Testament Principles and Methods:

Applied to Present-Day Ministerial Problems, Particularly in the Church of the Brethren.

BY JOHN W. WAYLAND.

Part I.—The Call for Men.

"Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest" (Matt. 9: 38).

"As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away" (Acts 13: 2, 3).

"And how shall they preach, except they be sent" (Rom. 10: 15)?

THE great need of the church of Christ in the world today is efficient and consecrated men to preach and teach the Word—to enter the ministry—to serve as preachers and pastors. From practically every denomination comes the cry, "Give us men!"

What are some of the reasons for this great lack of men?

First, the church does not pray enough. "Pray ye therefore." It does not pray enough, collectively or individually; as congregations in the public assembly, or as individuals in the secret chamber; as preachers calling others to preach, or as parents training children for service.

Second, men close their ears to the Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul; and the church at Antioch heard and heeded. The Holy Ghost is still calling, but not many ears are open.

Third, home influence has weakened. The morning vision is not given; such influence as may be exerted is not definitely directed to the great end of preaching the Gospel. The Hannahs in Israel are few; the Elizabeths, like Zacharias, have lost their voices—and for the same reason; and Lois and Eunice do not have time any more to teach young Timothy; so he is away from home, or indifferent to appeals, when Paul comes to preach. The home is losing ground in too many fields: it is losing ground here. May the home be rebuilded! May its power be revived!

Fourth, preachers and pastors are not sufficiently on the lookout for promising young men to enter the ministry. Possibly Timothy and Titus and Luke, as well as Mark, and many others like them, would never have entered the service if it had not been for the deliberate, intelligent, tactful personal appeals of Paul and Barnabas. Xavier was won by the persistent and stirring personal appeals of Loyola.

Fifth, early plans and early zeal are often shattered by hard facts: facts unnecessarily hard and frequently unjust. The young man eager to preach the Gospel awakes to find himself overwhelmed with duties to wife and children that he can not discharge at the same time that he does what his brethren demand of him. They make demands of him, perhaps, forgetting what demands God makes of them in his behalf.

Sixth, business and the other professions offer much greater opportunity for competence and independence. The good preacher, even, has a desire to be independent of charity.

Seventh, the ministry has lost much of its old-time prominence and influence. The day when the pastor of the congregation was the general teacher and adviser of the neighborhood, the best informed man in it, and the one through whom nearly every stimulating appeal came, is largely past. Today the preacher is obscured in the multitude of advisers; his instruction is lost in the babel of voices. He has to put himself in competition, as it were, with the newspaper, the general magazine, the technical magazine, the religious periodical, the cheap novel, the cheap theater, the moving-picture show, the popular lecturer, the public library, not to mention the cheap politician and the omnipresent telephone. We may not care to be deprived of most of these things just enumerated; but the fact remains, that, however desirable many of them may be, they supply information and entertainment that the preacher, at other times past, has had to supply; and, in so far as they make him unnecessary and inconspicuous, they lessen his influence and the prestige of his position.

Eighth, many higher institutions of learning are too often hurtful to faith and true piety; and too many books, written by authors of reputation and power, leave God out of creation and providence out of human life.

Ninth, this is an age—or has been—of rationalism, if not of active skepticism; of materialism for ends instead of for means. As some one has well said, "Our need has not been so much goods for the higher wants, as wants for the higher goods." From the Middle Age of unreasoning faith and blind superstition, we have come to an age of unreasonable credulity and blinding erudition; from an age of too much spirit we have come to an age of soulless mechanics.

Tenth, as already intimated, some unnecessary and unreasonable sacrifices are required of ministers and missionaries and their families—not by our Father in heaven, but by our brethren on earth. For example, the average layman seems to think that poverty and self-sacrifice are excellent spiritual discipline, conducive to piety and zeal, in the preacher and his household; yet he, the comfortable layman, seems to have no particular longing for that sort of soul-growth and soul stimulants himself. Consequently the preacher is expected to bear burdens that the congregation ought to share; or, if he is given a support, the amount is figured down to the last penny of actual current expenses, with no allowance or chance of provision for a rainy day or old age. People often seem quite willing that their physicians and lawyers, and other public servants, shall have a support sufficient to enable them to live in average comfort and self-respect, but think that the least possible amount is ample for the preacher. Speak of conveniences and comfort and a bank balance for him—the suggestion is out of the question! The church will provide for his family when he is dead, or no longer able to work. Yes, it may do so; but still the fact remains that what he knows awaits him is not a pleasant or inspiring prospect—even in the Old Folks' Home. Besides, the minister who is capable of doing good work, and who fully appreciates his mission in the world, will prefer to be a contributor toward the relief of necessary or unavoidable misfortune, rather than a burden upon society or the church. He aspires to be a helper, even in material enterprises.

I have thus emphasized the one sort of unnecessary sacrifices that ministers and their families are often expected to make, for the reason that the duty of material support can not be discharged except by material gifts. Moral and spiritual support may be more essential and vital; but the material must also have its due recognition in its proper relation: not as an end, but as a means. "Be ye fed and be ye clothed" are sweet words; but they alone can not nourish or warm the body, neither can they pay rents, taxes, or railroad fares.

Eleventh, the call to the Christian ministry, in this day, lacks the thrill of the heroic. That scene in Eggleston's "Circuit Rider," in which the itinerant preachers at a frontier conference sit in trembling silence and suspense, waiting to hear the charge from the bishop's lips—a charge that would mean danger and hardship and perhaps death in the wilderness—that scene is enough to stir the soul in a dying man. But hold! what have we here? Is not this a contradiction of the preceding statement, that too many sacrifices are required of the preacher and pastor? No. The statement is not "too many sacrifices," but "too many unfair and needless sacrifices." A woman will shriek at sight of a mouse, but rush unflinchingly into a burning house at another time. What makes the difference? Simply this: In the one case there is no need of heroism; in the other case her child is in danger. Men, and women too, have died willingly for great causes, but not often for trifles unless they believed them great causes. The early Christians suffered death rather than deny Christ; they will do it today if necessary; but this is not an age to be heroic over needs that those in need regard with indifference, or to make sacrifice for the mass when the mass is unwilling to share the sacrifice. In the early days the faith was attacked; now it is respectable, even to the point of harmlessness. On the early frontiers of our country men did not have the Gospel, but they were longing for it, and came to hear it when they had a chance. Men are still willing to face perils of forests and seas to preach under such conditions. Now, in our comfortable centers of culture and learning, with Bibles in every house (nobody reading them), and with churches in every square (few persons taking the trouble to attend them), who feels the call to heroic service and sacrifice? Not the average preacher; not the average young man who might otherwise become a preacher and pastor.

And so there is a great call for men. God is calling men to preach and to teach, in the home field as well as in the foreign field; but he is also calling to the church as a whole to send men, and to hold up the arms and to strengthen the hearts of those who are sent. For "how shall they preach, except they be sent?" The church is calling men, but too many times with such half-heartedness that nobody feels the need. Preachers are needed to stir the people, but people are also need to stir the preachers. We say, "Like priest, like people;" but it reads, "Like people, like priest."

The Conditions of Salvation.

BY JAS. A. SELL.

THE Gospel of Christ is adapted to meet the wants of man as a sinner, but it is so arranged that, unless man has a desire to be saved, it is of no value to him. He will not be saved simply because there is a Savior. He must accept the conditions upon which salvation is offered.

The conditions under which we live are such that, to the extent we are interested in anything, we will put forth efforts and be willing to make sacrifices. We will submit to self-denials, and encounter perils and difficulties to secure them. The extent of our sacrifices goes to show the value we place upon the object of our pursuit. That which costs us nothing we value at about the same rate.

Our all-wise Creator, in bestowing his gifts, requires exertion on our part to obtain them, and no effort will be put forth unless there is a desire for them. This is intended to correct the evils which grow out of indolence, and give tone and decision to man's character, which could not be obtained or enjoyed if his wants were supplied without the necessity of exertion. The curse that was pronounced upon the world, doomed mankind to labor, but it was Divinely arranged that thereby man might face and subdue many evils that grow out of idleness.

Extending this analysis, we find that every exertion required of us is intended to control and subdue some evil within, and help to develop some latent power we may possess. So it is manifest that the labor, brought upon us by the curse, is turned into a blessing.

The same principle is followed in making out a plan of salvation for a lost and sinful world. Duties are imposed to correct evils that exist. For every passion, propensity or weakness in human nature there is not only a restriction imposed, but a work to engage in that will govern and subdue the evil, and give joy and peace to the soul.

It is reasonable to suppose that as Christianity finds man in a low spiritual state, the conditions to elevate him should be of an uplifting nature,—things that would have a good influence upon the character of the sinner. His thoughts should be expanded and uplifted to the contemplation of higher ideals and nobler relations than matters of earth and sense.

As we examine the Gospel of our Savior, and note the conditions of salvation, and see how beautifully and wisely they are suited to meet our wants as sinners, we are led to say: "O Lord, how manifold are thy works, in wisdom hast thou made them all."

To lift up the mind from the narrow limits of sight and sense, and usher into the limitless fields of God's goodness, greatness, wisdom and power, and be made willing to trust and obey him, we have faith. "It is the substance of things hoped for; the evidence of things not seen." "Without faith it is impossible to please him, for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

When the heart is writhing in the agony of conscious guilt and, in its unsatisfied longings, says, "What must I do to be saved?" the Word says, "Repent! Leave off sinning and pursue a different course." "Repent and be baptized for the remission of sins." "Repent and be converted that your sins may be blotted out."

When the soul is weary and heavy laden, with the consciousness of guilt and sin, and desires to lay the burden down, the Savior says: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light."

When the believing, repentant sinner enters into this new relation with a humble, sincere desire to live a better, a higher and a purer life, he is told to "observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

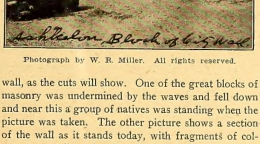
Going Up to Jerusalem.



BY W. R. MILLER.

Philistia of Today.—No. 3.

ASHKELON, the Bible name, and Ascalon historically, is located directly on the shores of the Mediterranean and there is no doubt whatever as to its location, because of the extensive walls, gates etc., that are scattered over the old city's site. No doubt a little history of Ascalon would be of interest just here:

"Ascalon was one of the five principal towns of the Philistines, and the chief seat of the worship of the goddess Derketo, to whom all fish were sacred. The town belonged to the Tyrians in the Persian period, to the Ptolemies in the third century B. C. and to the Seleucidae from the reigh of Antiochus III., onwards. In 104 B. C. it succeeded in making itself independent, and it reckons its own chronology from that date. It enjoyed its greatest prosperity in the Roman period, as a kind of free republic under Roman protection. Herod the Great was born at Ascalon, and he caused the town to be embellished with baths, colonnades, and the like, although it was not within his dominions. The citizens, like those of Gaza, were bitter opponents of Christianity down to a late period. Aug. 12, 1099, the Franks gained a brilliant victory under the walls of the town, but it was only after a siege of five months by sea and land, that they at length compelled the place to capitulate. In 1191 Richard Coeur-de-Lion began to rebuild the fortress, but he was obstructed by the jealousy of other princes, and in a subsequent truce with the Moslems it was agreed that the place remain unfortified. In 1270 Beibars caused the fortifications to be demolished, and since then Ascalon has been in ruins."

The ruins lie within a semicircle of ramparts, with the sea on the west. Along the sea there was a strong wall, as the cuts will show. One of the great blocks of masonry was undermined by the waves and fell down and near this a group of natives was standing when the picture was taken. The other picture shows a section of the wall as it stands today, with fragments of columns protruding, showing that the wall was built out of material from former ruins. Now, after more than six hundred years, sections of the ruins are still well preserved. So full of interest is this city of ruins, both from an historical and Biblical standpoint, that one is well repaid for the trouble of visiting the Ascalon of today. The same prophecy that was spoken against Gaza was also spoken against Ashkelon (Jer. 47: 5-7), "Ashkelon is cut off with the remnant of their valley: O thou sword of the Lord, how long will it be ere thou be quiet? How can it be quiet, seeing the Lord hath given it a charge against Ashkelon?"

From Ashkelon to Ashdod (Greek, "Azotos," modern, Esdud), is one and a half hours. Here we found a village of about three thousand inhabitants standing on the slope of a hill commanded by a still higher eminence on which the acropolis probably stood. There are but a very few ruins left today, to tell the story of this once most important of the five principal cities of the Philistines. Its position on the main route between Egypt and Syria lent it importance for both countries. About 711 B. C. it was captured by the Assyrians, and a century later it was taken from them after a siege of twenty-nine years, showing that Ashdod was once a strongly-fortified city. Acts 8: 40 tells us that Philip preached at "Azotus" (Ashdod). 1 Sam. 5: 1-7 tells us all about the Ark being placed in the house of Dagon at Ashdod, how Dagon fell down before the Ark the first night, and how the second night he lost both his head and hands. Then, immediately following, the great plague smote the people of Ashdod in large numbers, after which they sent the Ark to Gath. The city was about three miles from the sea, where there are still some remains of its seaport.

Of the present condition of Ekron there is but little to tell, as but few ruins remain and a Jewish village covers the site of the old city. Still there is scarcely any doubt of the present site being genuine. You will likely remember, that it was to Ekron that the Ark was brought from Gath, when they of Gath, like they of Ashdod, got exceedingly tired of the presence of the Ark of God in their midst, and when the Ekronites cried out, "They have brought about the Ark of the God of Israel to us, to slay us and our people." After this destruction of both dead and living, for they that died not were smitten with emerods, the cry of the city went up to heaven. This was probably the climax of the Philistines' experience with the Ark. By this time, among them, it had a very bad reputation, and they were ready to get rid of it at any cost. It was from here that the new cart, with cows attached, was started with the Ark, and we next hear of it at Bethshemesh, as noted in a former article.

Ekron had a god of some importance, known as "Baal-zebub the god of Ekron." The first chapter of First Kings gives a full account of Ahaziah having a fall through the lattice of an upper chamber, in his house in Samaria, how he took a foolish notion to send messengers to the god of Ekron, to enquire whether he should recover from his injuries, but the angel of the Lord sent a message to him through faithful old Elijah, who was ever ready to deliver the messages of Jehovah. The chapter above referred to is exceedingly full of interest, and a rereading is profitable.

Lastly we come to Gezer, especially mentioned in 1 Kings 9: 16, 17, "For Pharaoh king of Egypt had gone up and taken Gezer, and burned it with fire, and slain the Canaanites that dwelt in the city, and given it for a present to his daughter, Solomon's wife. And Solomon built Gezer." From this passage we discover that Israel had never conquered Gezer, and it was left to the King of Egypt to subdue, and present to Solomon as his wife's dower. The place has recently been excavated and much valuable material brought to light. From our camping place, near Gezer, the road from Jaffa to Jerusalem, is available, and it is about six hours from there to the city.

Probably no eight days ever brought us such vivid pictures of the truth of the Bible as those spent in riding over the mountains and foothills of Judea, and the plains of Philistia. The most of us had never seen little else than the mountains of Palestine, and to get out on the broad, level wheat and barley lands, so great in extent, gave us a new conception of this Land of the Book, and the impression that, after all, Palestine is not such a bad land.

Why Our Revival Was a Success.

BY B. E. KESLER.

"So built we the wall; and the wall was joined together unto the half thereof: for the people had a mind to work" (Neh. 4: 6).

When conditions obtain, as outlined in this text, the wonder would be that success did not follow, and observation teaches that much time and means are lost when these conditions do not prevail during a revival.

The conditions during the revival of which this is a history were as follows:

1. The people were ready for it. "Be ready unto every good work" had appealed to them. They had their secular pursuits so arranged as not to interfere with their attendance on the meeting.

2. They had preceded the meeting with earnest prayer for the success of the services. They ceased not to pray for the coming evangelist, that God would bless him with discretion, power and demonstration of the Spirit, grace and favor among the people, and an humble boldness in preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ.

3. They had a mind to work. They wanted a share in the blessing, and so did not depend on the evangelist to do all the work. They saw that the meeting was well advertised, a sufficient time ahead, to enable all to be ready. They had the evangelist so well advertised that all seemed to know him before they met him.

And after the preacher arrived, and the meetings started, all rallied to the standard. There was no "plunged in a gulf of dark despair," because of poor lights, but everything was in readiness, comfortable and inviting. The minister was accorded a hearty welcome at his first service, and each one tried to see who would be the first to have him a guest in their home, and invitations were so far ahead that he had a "standing turn" three or four nights ahead.

Besides, having no conveyance of his own, the people saw to it that he was "shown round."

When he visited a home he was requested to read God's Word and pray with and for the family, and on departing he was given a hearty invitation to return.

The people (church) likewise, were up and doing. They were up early in the morning and out among their neighbors daily, inviting them to the revival meeting, talking about religion,—and their soul's salvation to them.

4. When preaching time came, the minister arrived to find his congregation already in their seats, singing with all their might, getting into the spirit of prayer and praise even before the opening exercises. After the opening exercises, the spirit of reverence filled every heart present and a wave of solemn sacredness swept over the entire congregation. They were now prepared to listen to the discourse in rapt silence, while the Spirit carried conviction to the impenitent, and sinners were made to cry out, "Man and brethren, what must we do?"

5. In this meeting the ministers and church,—especially the ministers,—were found to be at peace among themselves. There was not a jar nor a note of discord among them. All was peace, harmony and coöperation. The preaching of the evangelist of the old-time gospel way, was prompted by love, and characterized by demonstration and power of the Holy Spirit. Do you wonder that such a meeting was a success? Would it not be a greater wonder if it had not been? Did you ever attend such a revival? Suppose you try it.

The Repeopling of Moab.

BY A. FORDER.

Much is heard about the return of the Jews to their own land and the repeopling of Palestine, but nothing has been written or told about the repeopling of the land across the Jordan, the old country of Moab, that was written about and famous long before the Jews possessed their land. To many the words of Jer. 48: 47 are a dead letter, but the prophecy is being fulfilled in these latter days before the eyes of those who are privileged to see it.

Moab, for so many centuries desolate, uninhabited, a fear to outsiders, is again coming to the front, for, as is well known to the careful reader, several years ago the Turks extended their jurisdiction throughout the region, and put the lawless Moabite and his nice[1] born under government, thus, for a time, assuring a certain amount of security and peace to those resident in the land, as well as to those who went thither for the purpose of refuge, trade or work of any kind. But another result of the advent of the Turk was that many of the old and prominent Biblical sites, which, for more than two millenniums, have been in ruins, became an object of attraction to many, which eventually led to the construction of houses on these ancient sites. And, again later, these sites have been allotted to companies of people, with their families, that have migrated from distant parts of the Turkish Empire, seeking fresh fields and better homes for themselves and families, so that the probability is that ere long such places as Dibon, Heshbon, Sihor, Aroer, Beth-meon,

THE ROUND TABLE

The Ministerial List for 1911.

BY EDGAR M. HOFFER.

THE Ministerial List in the 1911 Almanac contains the names and addresses of 3,012 ministers. Never before in the history of the Church of the Brethren did the list reach the 3,000 mark. There is quite an increase over the list of 1910. Pennsylvania is still in the lead, for 462 ministers are within her bounds. Indiana comes second, with 340 ministers. Virginia has 301 ministers, and Ohio comes next, with 253. Next in rank we find Kansas, with 213 ministers, and Illinois follows closely, with 208 ministers. A number of these are at Bethany Bible School, Chicago. Next comes Iowa, with 126 ministers, and West Virginia follows closely, with 124 ministers. Maryland has 115 ministers, and California has 114.

During the last decade quite a number of our ministers went to California. Some of them are aged elders who wish to spend their last days in the land of sunshine. There are 51 ministers living in foreign countries.

Forty years ago we did not have so many ministers, but they were faithful, and made many trips over hills and mountains for their Master. It seems that the Church of the Brethren should accomplish a noble work with 3,012 preachers. But these are not all active now. Many of these are superaminated, and are waiting to hear the call, "Come up higher."

Every year quite a number of our ministers pass to the Great Beyond. During 1910 more than fifty ministers fell asleep. Among the number that were widely known in the Brotherhood we mention the following: Eld. Enoch Eby, of Illinois; Eld. I. D. Parker, of Ohio; Eld. Jacob Thomas, of Virginia; Eld. John H. Brumbaugh, of Southern Ohio; Eld. Emmanuel J. Blough, of Pennsylvania. Among other aged elders that died last year were Eld. John S. Holsinger, of Virginia, and Eld. William A. Murray, of Ohio. The angel of death also called our beloved brother, Charles H. Brubaker, who passed away Oct. 20, in far-off India.

Every year in the past has called a number of our ministers to their reward, and 1911 will be no exception. Of the 3,012 ministers many are well stricken in years, while others are in the prime of life, and quite a number are young brethren. Some of these aged pilgrims will leave us during the present year, but it is a fact, nevertheless, that some, who are well today will sleep in their silent tomb ere the year closes.

Such is life! Our ministers pass away one by one, and other brethren are elected to fill the vacancy. Let us all pray for our ministers, and aid them in every way possible.

Would Not Enter a Saloon.

BY CORNELIUS KESSLER.

SEVERAL years after I was married and began to do business for myself, I took some produce to a store to sell. I had to leave the vessel, in which the products were, until it could be emptied. Sometime later I called at the store. The clerk was at the opposite end of the building, from the entrance, which was at the north end. The south end of the store and the east end of a saloon both faced the same back yard. The clerk beckoned to me to come that way.

After I got to where he was, he started down the steps, leading into the yard, and asked me to follow him. I thought he was going into the cellar. He locked arms with me, and commenced walking towards the saloon. I said to him: "What do you want?" He replied: "Come with me." Again, I asked him: "Where are you going?" He said: "Over to the saloon, to get a drink." I tore away from him and walked toward the store. He followed me and went into the cellar and got my vessel. He asked me whether I never drank beer. I said, "No; nor can you lead me into a saloon." This occurred nearly fifty years ago.

Some years after this I had to buy some building material. I did not have the money to pay for it, at the time I made the purchase. When I was ready to pay for it, I inquired for the man with whom I wanted to settle my bill. After searching for him I was informed by several that I would find him in a saloon. One of my informants offered to go with me. I said: "No, I will wait until I can see him at some other place. I never go into a saloon." "Well," he said, "everybody in town knows about him; so it won't harm you to go in there to see him." "True," I said, "but I do not know how many of my neighbors are in town, who might see me go into that saloon. I might have to do a good deal of explaining, why I went in, and even then they would use their own pleasure to believe what I said."

How Many Apostles?

BY B. E. KESLER.

IN a recent issue of the MESSENGER this subject was treated by our esteemed brother, J. Harman Stover. And while the subject may not be of very great importance, yet Bro. Stover's ideas do not seem to be the same as those held by the writer. While my views, of course, may not be correct, let us consider the subject a little further:

1. The eleven chose Matthias to fill the place made vacant by the fall of Judas (Acts 1:25).

2. They went back to the baptism of John to get an eyewitness to witness for Christ, which was very proper (Acts 1:22).

3. God ratified their work by having the one chosen work right along with the eleven (Acts 2:14; 6:2).

4. Paul does not include himself with "the twelve" (1 Cor. 15:5).

5. The fact that Paul calls himself an apostle does not make him one of "the twelve," any more than his calling Christ an apostle made him one of "the twelve" (Heb. 3:1).

6. Paul was chosen for "a minister and a witness" (Acts 26:16).

The only power the apostles received on Pentecost that they did not have before, was the power to speak in unknown tongues. Previously to this they could "heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, and cast out devils." No more power than this was needed to choose Matthias.

This is the first and last time the Apostles deemed it necessary to perpetuate "the twelve" in the church, and so no one was ever selected to fill any other vacancy in the apostolic band.

From all this it seems that Paul was a "minister and a witness," (which, in a sense, means apostle) but not one of "the twelve."

How Do You Spend Your Sundays?

BY E. J. PREDMORE.

IT is God's day. It is set apart for his worship. It is intended for your good, but many waste it in sleep, pervert it in going out in parties for pleasure, or pollute it by reading Sunday newspapers and other secular publications.

But how do you spend your Sunday? As the apostles and primitive Christians did? As you will wish you had when you lie on your death-bed? Think over this question. It is important. It may do you good.

On the Lord's Day we should attend the service of God's house, join in worship with his people, seek to promote his glory, and prepare for the everlasting Sabbath.

Rest from worldly employment! Rest on the finished work of Christ! Rest with the people of God! So will you spend your Sunday as you ought, and you will prove the Lord's Day to be the best of all the seven.

The Christian's Strength.

BY IDA M. HELM.

By his Spirit God is constantly working through and with his children. He is the strength of every battle field of life, and he will give the victory to those who put their trust in him. If we are trusting children of the Godhead,—the Holy Trinity,—we need not fear, though myriads of the enemy be encamped about us; for they that be with us are more than they that be against us, and the hosts of sin must fall before him. "All the saints adore him."

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' TOPIC

The Schools That Made Joseph Great.

THE SCHOOL OF ADVERSITY.

Gen. 39: 20 to 40: 8.

For Sunday Evening, March 5, 1911.

I. Egyptian Influences.—(1) Here were art, literature, luxury, business, and heathen worship. (2) All these were a test of his strength to resist evil, and hold on to the true God. (3) They also broadened his outlook, and afforded the culture and development he would need for Pharaoh's court.

II. In Potiphar's House.—(1) He realized the position of a servant, and felt the degradation of a slave (1 Tim. 6: 1). (2) He learned (a) how to obey (Col. 3: 22; 1 Peter 2: 18); (b) how the employed should be treated (Eph. 6: 9; Col. 4: 1); and (c) how love to God and man will better one's condition (Prov. 2: 10-12). (3) He learned how faithfulness in little things leads to greater things (Matt. 25: 21, 23). (4) He showed marked self-control under the severest temptations (39: 12).

III. In Prison He Learned.—(1) The lesson of patience (Vs. 20-23). (2) The details of government and statesmanship (Vs. 1-4). (3) He graduated from prison having completed a thirteen years' course in a very hard school.

Learn.—(1) In every life there are two elements—God's providence and man's free choice. (2) While God was preparing a place for Joseph, he was also preparing him for the place. So with us. All the open doors in the world are of no use if we have not prepared to enter them. (3) Compare David's early experience with the sheep, the sling, the harp, the stars (Psa. 8 and 19), and in Saul's court as a preparation for his kingdom.

PRAYER MEETING

Christians as Seed Sowers.

Matt. 13: 1-8; 18-23.

For Week Beginning March 5, 1911

I. The Wayside or Indifferent Hearer.

1. A Hard Place.—His heart, like a public footpath is beaten hard with the continual impact of SELFISH THOUGHTS. The enticements of sin keep out the Word of God (Luke 8: 12).

2. A Dangerous Place.—"Fowls of the air," feet of the passing crowd. Precious seed can only fall ON it, not INTO it. Thus the wicked one "catcheth it away" (Matt. 13: 19).

3. A Hopeless Place.—No shelter, no entrance, no life for the living seed. INDIFFERENT hearers can profit nothing (James 1: 22-25).

II. The Stony Ground or Emotional Hearer.

1. Seed Joyfully Received.—Shallow-hearted hearers are often very emotional. They hear the Word gladly. Feelings are easily aroused, but there is NO DEPTH (Luke 8: 13).

2. Quickly Starved.—"No root." No downward growth, for there is no deepness of earth. Beneath the thin layer of emotional feeling, there is the unyielding rock of a STUBBORN WILL (Matt. 13: 20, 21).

3. Completely Destroyed.—"Scorched and withered away." Unless the love of God is in the HEART, the Word will not root and grow (Ezek. 33: 31).

III. The Thorny Ground or Double-Minded Hearer.

1. Soil Abundant.—Depth enough for seed,—readiness to receive the Word of the Kingdom, but thorns of WORLDLY CARES prevail (Matt. 13: 22).

2. Soil Preoccupied.—"Thorny ground." Thorns and briers have FIRST PLACE and, while thus in control, the spiritual can not prosper. "Ye can not serve God and Mammon" (Matt. 6: 24).

3. Soil Unfruitful.—"Cares," which choke the hopeful Word, are DEADLY ENEMIES, though often excused. Cast them out (Mark 4: 19).

IV. The Good Ground or Honest Hearer.

1. A Prepared Heart.—Weeds and thorns fully expunged. A heart truly anxious for SPIRITUAL THINGS has no room for cares and riches (Luke 8: 15).

2. An Understanding Heart.—Soil congenial to highest aspirations. Such a heart, ABOUNDING with the knowledge of the Word, is a glorious witness (1 Cor. 15: 58).

3. A Fruitful Heart.—"Some 100, some 60, some 30." The great object of the sower is FRUIT. All is loss and failure if there is no fruitage (John 15: 4, 5).

HOME AND FAMILY

Washing Windows.

A certain woman of censorious mind,
To criticise her neighbors was inclined;
Their dingy houses with discolored paint
And dirty windows, were her chief complaint.
Her righteous soul became at length so vexed,
She called her pastor, Rev. Take-a-Text,
Told him her trouble, and besought advice.
The wise old doctor answered in a trice:
"Get soap and water and remove the stains,
And dirt, and fly-specks from your window-panes."

The woman did so, and, to her surprise,
Seemed to be looking out of other eyes;
Her 'neighbors' houses, now no longer seen
Through dirty windows, all were white and clean.

The moral of this story seems to be:
Who looks through dirty windows, dirt will see;
Wash your own glass, and then, as like as not,
Your neighbors' window-panes will have no spot;
Extract the beam before you vainly try
To take the mote from out a brother's eye.
—Advance.

The Home.

BY IDA M. WINGER.

Its Origin.—What It Is.—The Ideal Home.

WHEN God created Adam and Eve, he placed them in the Garden of Eden, which was to be their dwelling place, and until they sinned, this perfect place was their home. The institution of the Home was arranged for by God himself. It was the first institution that God established for the welfare of the race. He was its Author and Founder. He has placed within the hearts of men and women a natural longing for some place they can call home. In his book, "Our Home," C. E. Sargent says, "There are few human beings without a home or the memory of one. The vast multitude that surges through the streets of the great city, is made up of individual souls, each of whom, though will seek some place it calls home. There are those who roll through the streets with golden livery to palaces where brilliant lights and gorgeous tapestry and plushy carpets await their coming. There are those who walk the frosty pavement with cold, bleeding feet, whose homes are in damp and dreary cellars, or in the rickety garrets of worn and wretched hovels. No lights, no music, no feasts await them,—nothing but a crust and a bed of straw. And yet these places are the homes of human beings.

"There is still another class of homes, where has been answered the human heart's best prayer, 'Give us neither poverty nor riches,' where peace and joy and love and contentment dwell, where industry and frugality, with sunbrowned hands and healthful appetites, sit at the board of plenty. But whether the home be a palace, a cottage or a garret, it is home.

"'Mid pleasures and palaces though we may roam,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home.'

"Home is the resting place for the weary to renew their strength, and the training school where those, on whom the world's best life depends, can be taught and nurtured for the work they have to do."

Neither the wretched hovel, where vice and hunger dwell, nor the palace where lies the gilded corpse of love, can be a true home, for a true home is "a world of strife shut out, a world of love shut in."

"What makes a home? Four walls of polished stone?
Of brick and mortar laid with nicest care?
Nay! prison walls are made without as fair.
Within,—look not within,—corruption there
With ignorance and sin defiles the air.

"What makes a home? 'Tis where the weary come
And lay their burdens down, assured of rest.
'Tis where we learn to know our dearest best,
Where little children play, blessing and blest.
Though walls of coarsest clay enwarp the nest."
—Fanny S. Reeder.

When we look into the wretched homes, the Christless homes, others where woman is only a slave, how much we have to be thankful for, when we can live in a Christian home!

If we were to draw a picture of an ideal home, we would not likely see a mansion or a hovel, though either might be ideal. More probably we would see a house large enough for the comfort and convenience of the family, not too finely furnished to use and to be kept in the best of order, the rooms neatly and tastily furnished.

First of all, to be an ideal one, the home must be a Christian home, where the Christian spirit reigns supreme. The family altar is here, where father and the children daily gather to read and pray. It is the place of peace, the shelter, not only from all injury, but from terror, doubt and division. "It is the only spot on earth where the faults and failings of fallen humanity are hidden under the mantle of charity."

Here the ideal mother is queen, reverencing her husband, the ideal father is king, loving his wife, and the ruling power is love. The happy, joyous shouts of children are heard, for the home could not be ideal without the children. How can we measure the power of the little ones, for who is not made better by the love of an innocent child, and who can tell how much of the dross is eliminated from the lives of father and mother by their care and confidence!

So, in the ideal home, the children have not only a welcome, but they have their rights as well as elder ones. There are rights and wrongs of childhood that are very often overlooked. Children are very often misunderstood, but where there is that confidence between parents and child that should be, this is less likely to occur.

In the ideal home there is something for the entertainment or amusement of the boys and girls. A home is not complete without music of some kind. There is power in music to raise a despondent soul from the depths of despair, to calm the stormy, tumultuous dispositions, and to soothe the sorrowful.

Furthermore, no home is ideal without a library of good books. A great many books of today are not good books. We can not be too careful in selecting proper books for the boys and girls, for the value of good reading cannot be overestimated. Some one has said "Tell me what you read and I will tell you what you are."

There are many phases of the ideal home that might be mentioned, but space forbids. It seems to me that the advice in 2 Peter 1: 5, 6 might be taken as a key note to a happy home: "Add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity."

"A house is built of bricks and stones,
Of sills and posts and piers;
But a home is built of loving deeds
That stand a thousand years.
A house, though but an humble cot,
Within its walls may hold
A home of priceless beauty
Rich in love's eternal gold."

Naomi, the Evangelist.

BY IDA M. HELM.

NAOMI went into a strange land, but she remained true to God and her religion. It was this inherent goodness that led Ruth to see the excellency of the religion of Israel, and that the God of Israel is the true God.

How much good could be accomplished in the world, today if every person, who professes to be a child of God, would, in his every-day living, set before the world a true interpretation of the religion of Christ!

It cost Ruth something to become a worshiper of Jehovah. She turned her back to her kindred, her home and her religion, and went into a strange country. She was faithful to God, and her name is found among the ancestors of Jesus, so far as his humanity is concerned. In Naomi and Ruth we see the power of an ordinary life, when one is willing to yield himself to be used of God in the work of engelizing the world for Christ.

Ashland, Ohio.

If we long to be in touch with our children, if we want to hold them by the bond of confidence and love after the period of authority has past, we must offer something for the tendrils to cling to now, while the sympathies and feelings are strong; while the child feels the oneness of his life with ours.—The Outlook.

SISTERS' AID SOCIETIES

PORTLAND, IND.—Our Sisters' Aid Society of the Church of the Brethren held thirty-three afternoon meetings, with an average attendance of three. Our work consisted of making quilts, knotting comforts and sewing carpet rags. We donated several afternoons' work to the poor; sent to World-wide Missions, 34; to the Old Folks' Home at Mexico Ind., $15; annuity, $3.26. We received, from December 1, 1909, to December 31, 1910, with the following officers: The writer, president; Sister Louisa Journey, vice-president; Sister Ella Greenlee, secretary-treasurer.—Ella Hatcher, Portland, Ind., Feb. 8.

LIBERTY, ILL.—Our Sisters' Aid Society met Feb. 4 at the home of Sister Wolfe. We reorganized with Sister Emma Clary, president; Sister Hester Hershbarger, vice-president; the writer, secretary-treasurer. During the year we held eleven meetings, with an average attendance of eleven. The largest number of members present was nineteen. We received by monthly collections $6.90; for sewing, $12. Our expenses for the year were $3.26. We sent $3 to the District Mission Fund. Our regular time for meeting is the second Saturday in each month.—Rosa Kaiser, Secretary, Liberty, Ill., Feb. 8.

MOUNT MORRIS, ILL.—The year 1910 was a busy one for our Aid Society. We met once a week at the Old People's Home. We quilted fourteen quilts, tacked nine comforters, besides doing other sewing. Fifty-two meetings were held, with an average attendance of eight. When we take into consideration the number of sisters in this church, we realize that the attendance is small indeed, but we trust that God will bless us and give us more workers during the coming year. Our total receipts for the year were $64.11; total expenses, $46.96. We made quite a number of donations in cash, and sent donations, such as clothing and bedding, to the Chicago Mission, and helped some of our poor at home. We organized for the Year 1911 with Sister Etta Brunskill, president; Sister Lenah Schamel, superintendent; Sister Amanda Mumaw, secretary-treasurer. May the work prosper in our sincere wish for all church societies.—Elizabeth Price, Mount Morris, Ill., Feb. 8.

SOUTH BEND, IND.—The Sisters' Aid Society of the First Church of the Brethren met Jan. 19, 1911, to reorganize for the ensuing year. Sister M. W. Kriegbaum was elected president; Sister M. E. Wenger, vice-president; Sister Mary B. Seiler, secretary; Sister Pearl W. Jackson, assistant secretary; Sister Sarah Whitmer, treasurer; Mrs. Catherine P. Moore, assistant treasurer. During the year sixteen meetings were held with an average attendance of 15. Donations were made as follows: Garments and clothing, 54 garments, to St. Joseph Mission; two barrels, Chicago Mission; 88 garments, 24 quarts canned fruit, one barrel, consisting of 42 garments and one quilt, to the Kansas City Mission; to a sister in Indiana, $5; to St. Joseph Mission, $5; to the work in India under Sister Mary N. Quinter, $5. Twenty-two quilts and comforts passed through the hands of the society, and 56 articles of clothing were distributed besides the boxes sent to the several instances. The society received during the year $74.91, and paid out $48.96, leaving a balance of $25.95 in the treasury. During the year 1911 the society will hold all-day meetings and, with the membership of our sister churches, we hope to make the work count for much good in the Master's name. Mary B. Seiler, South Bend, Ind., Feb. 12.

EEL RIVER, IND.—The following is a report of our society for the year beginning with May and ending with February. Sister Mary Eisenhower is our president; Sister Orpha Butterbaugh, vice-president; the writer, secretary-treasurer. Our meeting is held Wednesday of each week. We open our meetings at nine o'clock, by Scripture reading and prayer, and then we sing or engage a song. We have finished quilts, fourteen comforters and sixty garments. Our free-will offerings amounted to $16.66; received for garments, quilts and comforters, $19.06; church aid, $12.16 to be sent to a sale; gave to the needy in our District, $12.36; to home missions, $10.25; to pay for carpet at our meeting-house, $5; sent to Lawrence, Kans., $2; to the St. Joseph Mission, $1.50. We had $11.16 in the treasury. We sent a box of clothing to the Mexico Orphans' Home, containing twenty-five garments and thirty second-hand garments. In December we sent twenty-one new garments and thirty-one second-hand garments to the Brethren Mission in Chicago. We donated seven comforters, one quilt and eighteen garments to the needy in our District. Our balance in the treasury is $18.45. We elected officers at our last meeting as follows: Sister Rebecca Montel, president; Sister Orpha Butterbaugh, vice-president; the writer, secretary-treasurer.—Emma Montel, Claypool, Ind., Feb. 7.

HUNTINGDON, PA.—Our Sisters' Mission Band held its annual public meeting Jan. 21. During the year the Band held twenty meetings, with an average attendance of fourteen. In 1907 it was decided to give half of our collection, together with what we might earn by sewing, etc., toward furnishing our new church. The fund has this year reached $370. Our collections this year amounted to $76.26. One of the interesting events was the gift to the Girls' Educational Fund. This fund was established in 1897, and has steadily grown till now it amounts to $2,588. This money is loaned without interest to worthy girls who are not able to pay for their education. It is our desire that this fund become large enough that we can use the interest and have the principal left intact as a permanent productive fund. The "Whatever Band," another sisters' organization in our congregation, has collected, during the past year, from their candy sales, making aprons, etc., $50.00. They have sent a box of clothing for poor Sunday-school children, Sunday-school missionary supplies, pulpit furniture, paying their share for $25 for the new church; and they gave the Sisters' Band $25 to help us pay on the pledge of $400 for the church. All of these annual meetings our missionaries, Brother and Sister J. M. Blough, gave most helpful and inspiring talks.—Grace O. Hoberstorfer, Huntingdon, Pa., Feb. 9.

WICHITA, KANS.—The officers of the Sisters' Aid Society of this congregation are as follows: Sister Dora Groves, president; Sister Grace Schul, vice-president; the writer, secretary-treasurer. From Jan. 1, 1910, to Feb. 5, 1911, we held twenty-seven meetings. Total number present were 210; average attendance, about eight. Our work consists mostly of sewing and quilting quilts, piecing and knotting comforters, making sunbonnets, aprons, sewing carpet rags, plain sewing for families in the community, etc. The receipts from the year's work amounted to $77.85; received for quilts sold, $17.19. Amount on hand at the beginning of the year, $6.24; donated to a poor, afflicted brother, one new mattress and 16 in cash; garments donated to a poor, forty-four; donated one basket of groceries to a poor widow; gave one basket of bananas, oranges and candy as a Christmas gift to the inmates of the Old Folks' Home at Darlow, Kans. Each week two sisters of our number make visits to hospitals, rescue homes, jail, or isolated families and distribute Gospel Messengers and Sunday-school papers, which are highly appreciated. Our society decided to pay $25 for the support of the mission work at this place. We paid $16 of that amount Jan. 23; balance in the treasury, $3.76. A number of garments were donated to us from neighboring societies, which were placed in needy homes and gladdened their hearts. Some of this article were sold and the funds were used in a good cause. May the Lord abundantly bless those who donated so freely, for God loves a cheerful giver. We feel encouraged to do more and better work this year than we did in the past.—Ida Royer, Secretary, 1128 North Santa Fe Ave, Wichita, Kans., Feb. 7.

In the year 1943 Pentecost will fall on June 13, and the date of the Annual Meeting will be two days later, on June 15,—the latest date for the Conference during the present century.

A CORRESPONDENT writes us about an aged man, who had practically quit attending church, but the MESSENGER was sent to his family last year; he got interested in it, and now he is one of the most regular attendants at church in the community. He goes to the preaching service whether it rains or shines. It might be well to try the remedy on some others who neglect the house of God.

IN response to our call for District Meeting Minutes we have heard from Middle Iowa, Northeastern Ohio, Oregon, Washington and Idaho, and Eastern Virginia. Middle Indiana and Western Maryland are yet to be heard from. We await word from Western Colorado and Utah. The copy for the Minutes of the District Meeting of Texas and Louisiana reached our office a few days ago, and they will be printed soon.

IN his last letter, dated at Jerusalem, Feb. 1, Bro. W. R. Miller states that he was remaining in the city just long enough to close up some business he had in hand, after which he and those with him would be off to Egypt for a few days. They would then sail for Europe, with the intention of reaching Chicago not later than April 1. He says that all letters of inquiry about lecture dates should be addressed to him at 3435 West Van Buren Street, Chicago, Ill.

BRO. VIRGIL C. FINNELL, the Secretary of the District Temperance Committee for Northern Illinois and Wisconsin, having moved out of the District, necessitated the appointment of a new Secretary. Bro. Charles H. Keltner has been chosen to finish the unexpired term. Sunday-schools of the District will please remember that when they take their temperance collections March 19, the money should be forwarded to Charles H. Keltner, Mount Morris, Ill., who will promptly receipt for same.

WE hear of aged preachers who do as much work in the Lord's vineyard as some of those of half their years. Our attention has been called to the earnest labor of Bro. William B. Sell, of Fredonia, Kans., now seventy years old. Last year he preached from six to eight times each month, helped in Sunday-school work, held some revival meetings, and did considerable traveling besides. His labors were not without results, for he had the privilege of baptizing eight persons, who applied for admission into the church. A minister who can do this much is certainly not ready to be retired.

ON page 114, this issue, will be found a timely letter from Dr. R. A. Torrey, setting forth his reasons for not joining the Masonic Fraternity. The letter shows the convictions of a man who has seen enough of the world to enable him to form a good opinion, based upon broad and comprehensive reasons. It is unfortunate that all the preachers of this country do not see Masonry as Mr. Torrey has been led to see it. If they did, and would be as frank about expressing their convictions, we might soon have the churches rid of the influences of secret orders.

THE Mack Memorial issue seems to have pleased some of our readers very much. It helped them to some valuable information regarding this remarkable man, who, at the age of twenty-nine years, helped to organize a church, with the apostolic baptism, ordinances and manner of worship fully restored. It is, indeed, marvelous, that one, in the midst of such conflicting religious views, as prevailed in the eighteenth century, should, from the very start, have done his work so well. But the New Testament church was his model, and he saw to it that the work was done according to the pattern given by the sacred writers.

CONCERNING the editorial, "Going Worldward," which appeared in our issue of Feb. 4, we have received a number of letters highly commending what was said, showing that among our people there is a decided sentiment in favor of clearly pointing out the old Gospel paths and walking in them. It is encouraging to receive such letters in these days of looseness. There is a much stronger tendency worldward than most of our patrons think. It is not a matter of festivals and banquets only, but there are other ways in which members can show a departure from the simplicity that should characterize the true worship of God. We are not in the habit of sounding false alarms, and what we may have to say, on this and kindred subjects, from time to time, should be regarded as the result of careful observation and sober thinking.

EACH MESSENGER subscriber should take a careful look at the figures and date stamped to the left of his name on his paper. The figures indicate the number of the bill, filed here in the House, regarding his subscription. The date tells him when his subscription expires. Should the date read: "Jan. 1912," it means that the subscription runs until that time. Should the date line read: "March, 1911," it will be understood that the subscription expires with the date, and unless renewed the name will be removed from the list. A few of the subscriptions that expired January, 1911, have been permitted to remain on the list, and if we do not hear from the parties concerned, inside of a few days, such names, much to our regret, will have to be taken from the list. So, again, we would urge our patrons to examine the date to the left of their names. These dates will tell the whole story concerning the time when subscriptions expire, and they will continue to tell it every week in the year.

IT is remarkable how some of our readers have permitted themselves to be worked up over the relation that John the Baptist sustained to the prophet Elijah. Some indicate by their writing that they hold to the doctrine of reincarnation, believing that Elijah was actually clothed in the flesh of John the Baptist. Others maintain that John came only in the power and spirit of Elijah, but reject the reincarnation theory. Then there are those who think that the prophecy concerning the coming of Elijah was meant to apply to John by way of illustration and emphasis, signifying that John was to be sent by God, and that in introducing the reign of Christ he would arouse and stir up the people as did Elijah of old. Personally, we do not believe in the reincarnation theory, as applied to the two men. They were two different persons, lived in different ages of the world, and each filled his mission as planned by God. And while the subject may be interesting enough to some Bible students, still we can not see that an exchange of views regarding the different claims will be of any practical benefit to our readers.

THE financial report of the General Mission Board, found on another page, should have appeared one week ago, but it was crowded out of the last issue. It shows a commendable spirit of liberality upon the part of those who give of their earnings for the spread of the Gospel.

Broad-Minded.

THE church is in need of broad-minded men and women,—members whose minds are broad enough to take in the whole Gospel, then broad enough to consider the interests of every man, woman and child on the earth. They should be broad-minded enough to understand that the Gospel is intended for people of all races, of every age and of every clime. They should know that the principles, set forth in the New Testament, may be intelligently applied to people of every class, as well as of every age and nationality, and that the Gospel should be studied with this in view. Even the apostles did not fully comprehend this in its fullness, in the early part of their ministry. Peter understood it better after the conversion of Cornelius than he understood it before. Paul seemed to have grasped the situation more readily than some other preachers of the cross. But before the close of the apostolic era all the leaders in the church of Christ understood that the Gospel was for all men,—not to make them all just like the converted Jews, the converted Italian or the converted Greek, but like Christ, the great Head of the Church.

The idea of the scheme of redemption, as they soon understood, was not to set up one nation as a model, and bring all other nations to that particular national standard. They understood that while the Gospel would lead to the conversion of the Greeks, it did not mean changes that would affect them as a race or a nation. It did not necessarily mean a change in their manners, dress and modes of living, so far as these customs and modes of living would not interfere with loyalty to Christ and the work of grace in their souls. One could be a good Christian and still be a Greek in manners and customs peculiar to the Greeks as a people. The same principle applied to the Romans, as well as it applied to the Jews and the Ethiopians. The purpose of Christianity, as finally understood by the apostles, was to lead all men to Christ, and to the extent that they could be led to imitate Christ, in their lives and conduct, they would naturally become like each other.

The religion taught by Jesus did not, in the beginning, interfere with the lawful customs and manners of any people. In manners and customs the nations differed, but in spite of this difference, the people that rightly embraced Christianity were made one in Christ Jesus. They had the one Lord, one faith and one baptism, and felt that they were influenced by the one and the same Spirit. They bore with their race differences, not that the one saw anything wrong in the race customs of others, but because they had something higher as the correct basis of unity.

This was a way of looking at the purpose of the Christian religion that should commend itself to the devout people of every generation, and especially should it commend itself to the faithful and intelligent of the present generation. Since we are Americans,—like the ways of the people of our country, and think that our ways are better than the ways of other nations,—it is but natural that we should endeavor to Americanize the converts we make. But while this is true, we should not, in other lands, expect to Americanize the people of China, or those whom our missionaries convert in India. The object is not to disturb their lawful customs and manners only so far as we can give them something better, but to lead them to believe in Christ, to accept him as their Savior, and obey his commandments. A converted Chinaman will be a Chinaman, so long as he remains in his own country, and it is only proper that he should. If he is a Christian and lives the Christ-life, that will please the Lord, and it should please the churches in America, as well as in all other countries.

But only broad-minded people can be induced to take this view of the Christian religion, and it is that class that is going to make a success of mission work at home, as well as in other lands. They must be broad-minded enough to accept and understand the full Gospel, but not so loose in their interpretation of the Word of God as to tolerate customs, manners and practices that are not in keeping with the letter and spirit of the New Testament. It is an understanding of the Scriptures and the needs of the races that is as loyal as it is broad, and as true to God as it means to be true to the people that are to be saved.

Glimpses From Travel.

As an introduction we wish to say that we have not been employed by either railroad promoters or land agents, so that we are perfectly free to see and picture things as they really are, and not as others might wish to see them.

In our time we have done considerable traveling, both in the homeland and abroad, but heretofore we have never had the pleasure of visiting what is now called the "New South," though often we had promised ourselves to do so. And the older we grew, the stronger became our desire to do so. This desire has now been gratified, and we are pleasantly located in the southern part of Florida, at St. Petersburg, a city made up largely of northern tourists. As we had no special mission in view, outside of escaping the discomfort of snow, hail and mud of the months of February and March, we opened our mind, heart and eyes to things as they came to us by the way, and in the places where we stopped and sojourned.

As we left Washington, it was time to retire for the night, and there was but little to see until we reached Jacksonville. By this time the severities of winter had passed away, and we were greeted by the warm sunshine of early springtime. The lawns were green, the trees were blooming and the flowers were in evidence everywhere, telling us that we were living in a new world,—and that the colored population had greatly increased.

This city is one of the noted resorts of the northern tourists, especially for such as have plenty of money to spend for pleasure, rest and recreation, and for whose accommodation the dwellers of the city have made large and suitable preparations,—some of which are proper, some interesting, and some daring and decidedly foolhardy.

As we had some seven or eight hours before our train would leave, we concluded to spend part of the time in seeing the sights of the city. Among these was an ostrich farm, a few miles out,—not that we cared much to see the feathers of the ostriches except on their bodies, where they properly belong,—but they are really very interesting animals, and are susceptible of considerable training. Their owners use them for light buggy driving, and also for riding purposes, and they go at quite a rapid speed. They have many interesting characteristics, but we shall not take time, nor use the space, to speak of them now.

They also have a number of other attractions here—a regular zoological garden, containing especially animals, birds and reptiles belonging to the Tropics. Then, too, they have been exhibiting here the world's champion diver. In the garden is erected a tower some ninety feet high. To this is attached a rope ladder which extends to a small platform eighty-nine feet from the ground. This young diver goes up this ladder to the platform, and dives down, head foremost, into a tank of water eight by twelve feet in size, and a depth of some fifteen feet. Should he, by accident or otherwise, swerve to either side, in his descent, it would mean immediate death, without giving to the world anything of value. It is one of the ways of men wasting their possibilities for the mere gratification of others. The best name we have for such exhibitions is foolhardiness. But this man, in his diving, is not the only way of showing it.

At this place we first noticed the marked line between the white and the colored people. In the depot waiting rooms the signs are seen: "White," "Colored." It is so well understood that no mistakes are made, except by the "fresh" white tourists. They occasionally drop into the wrong stall,—as was experienced by your writer. But the mistake is readily righted, after which you see legal signs at all entrances. Well, we shall not argue the point with them. We have traveled enough to have learned that it is not good to know too much until you have had time for some observation and careful study. And even then it may not prove unwise to play "Innocents Abroad" for a while. If a man does think that he knows "considerable," he can well afford to hold his "stock" in reservation for special occasions, which will surely come without the seeking.

The "South,"—what is it? Well, we don't know. We have not seen enough of it to even express an opinion. We have seen some things by the way. But since here, we have been told by men who have been here for years, and who have traveled extensively through this part of our great country, that we can not generalize on what we see along the railways and riverways as we can in the North, where the villages, towns and cities, as we see them, pretty fairly represent the surrounding country, and the inland farming communities, in thrift, aggressiveness, culture and religion. This is especially true of the more Southern States—and doubly true of Florida.

As you travel through this country, and come to the towns and cities, and see the palatial residences, great modern hotels and finely-equipped colleges, you dream of procuring carriages and automobiles, and taking drives out through the surrounding farming communities, where you will find beautiful homes filled with happy and cultured people, see waving fields of grain, orchards loaded with oranges, to look at which makes you hungry, herds of Jerseys and Holsteins; and then see the rosy-cheeked maidens coming from the refreshing, cool spring-houses with pitchers of yellow, creamy milk that, through mere suggestion, just drives thirst, hunger and dyspepsia clear out of sight. What a beautiful picture this country life is!

But what are the realities of the country life in our Southland of lakes, pine forests, and four-hundred-dollar-per-acre climate?

Well, very soon after leaving the cement walks and "bricked" streets, you come to the suburban homes or cabins, with doors and windows filled with grinning little black dollies, with a bony cow chewing her cud,—if she has been fortunate enough to find enough grass to make one worth chewing,—and perhaps a mule tied to a post with a many-knotted rope, dreaming about a good mess of corn it had once eaten up North.

(To Be Continued.)

In Two Parts—Part One.

IT is a pretty nice thing to place the emphasis always where it belongs. Elocution gives a number of rules; but there is one supreme principle underlying the whole system, which, in itself, determines the matter. It is the sense. Emphasis is intended to bring out the sense and make it forceful, and, therefore, to emphasize correctly, the sense must be understood. This is the only infallible rule to follow. Emphasis, improperly placed, may cloud the sense, or destroy it altogether. Much depends on getting the emphasis at the right place.

The same holds good in matters of Bible interpretation. Very much depends upon where the emphasis is placed. The sense, or the sense with the law of relative values, determines the matter.

Jesus and the apostles did not establish a scale of relative values, except in a general way. The reason, probably, is to be found in the fact that there is no virtue too small for God to commend, and, on the other hand, there is no sin too small for him to condemn; for a cup of cold water, given to a disciple in the name of a disciple, has its reward (Matt. 10:42), and, on the other hand, "he that shall break the least commandment and shall teach men so, shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven;" but "he that shall do and teach them, shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 5:19). If a scale of values and of guilt were worked out, as it is in the laws of the land, the tendency, perhaps, would be to pass lightly over the small things, or to overlook them altogether. So it is wise as it is. The conviction should rest with all possible weight upon the heart that every act of virtue, however feeble, has its reward, and every act of vice, however winked at among men, receives Divine judgment.

But the difference in values is plainly recognized by Jesus and the apostles, even if the scale is not fully worked out. To love God with all the heart, and with all the soul, and with all the mind, Jesus classifies as "the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets" (Matt. 22: 37-40).

The first and second commandments are classified and named as representing the highest values. They cover life's two relations: First, man to his Lord, his Creator; and, second, man to man. Certainly, the two commandments, or laws, that teach the right attitude of the creature to his Creator, and of man to man, are the greatest of all teachings, so far as the interests of man are concerned. It is stated, also, that these two commandments are the foundation of the law and the prophets. All hangs upon them. All revelation and practical teaching cluster around the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of man as their soul and center. And upon these two commandments the greatest emphasis is placed. Success in keeping them is success in every way; failure in keeping them is failure in every way.

The Ten Commandments,—the sum and substance of the teaching of the law and the prophets, and which represented the highest moral code known to man previous to the coming of Jesus,—are built directly upon the ground of the first and second commandments. The first four are based upon the first commandment, and the last six upon the second commandment. The first group, briefly stated, are: "Thou shalt have no other gods before me. Thou shalt not bow down to images (of other gods), nor serve them. Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain. Remember the sabbath day to keep it holy." And the second group: "Honor thy father and thy mother. Thou shalt not kill. Thou shalt not commit adultery. Thou shalt not steal. Thou shalt not bear false witness. Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's things."

Do you see how all these commandments cluster around the two ideas? The same builder of the first and second commandments, you see, is the builder of the Ten Commandments. The Ten hang on the Two. You notice also the logical order of the Ten. So in both groups. There is gradation.

Again, a difference in values is recognized by Jesus in Matt. 23: 23. The scribes and Pharisees were the most exacting about things ritualistic and formal. They tithed the mint and anise and cummin, but neglected the weightier matters of the law,—judgment, mercy and faith. To judge justly, and to show mercy, and to exercise faith, are denominated the weightier matters of the law; and these are of infinitely more value in the sight of God than the tithe, though the tithe is all right in its place. The weightier matters should be kept, or these should be emphasized, and the lighter matters should not be left undone. Both classes of things should be kept, and the emphasis should be placed on the weightier matters,—not on the lighter matters to the neglect of the important things. This is the way Jesus puts it.

The severest condemnation is pronounced upon the scribes and Pharisees, these hypocrites. They were guilty of the greatest crimes against both God and man, and yet they pretended to be the most religious and the leaders of the religious interests of the nation. Their air was the most sanctimonious, their profession the most arrogant and empty, as they wore their phylacteries and broad garments, and sat in the chief seats in the synagogue, and were greeted as Rabbis in the marketplaces, and urged the punctilious observance of the tithe, even the smallest of the products of the ground, and urged other things ritualistic and formal, while their hearts were full of all uncleanness, and to speak figuratively, full of dead men's bones. It is no wonder that Jesus called them hypocrites to their teeth, and declared that they strained at a gnat and swallowed a camel. They were those who made clean the outside of the cup and of the platter, but inwardly they were full of extortion and excess. They were those who built tombs and garnished them for the dead, while they themselves were the murderers. Woe unto the scribes and Pharisees, ye hypocrites! for ye are the children of your father, even the devil, and his works ye do. Let us beware. These things are written for our learning. H. C. E.

Sisters Speaking in Meeting.

We hear of a Christian Workers' Meeting where the sisters were denied the privilege of speaking, reference being made to 1 Cor. 14: 34-36, and 1 Tim. 2: 11-15 as authority for the action taken. Questions of this sort should not be raised at a Christian Workers' Meeting. The Scriptures cited have been carefully discussed by our people and it is held that, when rightly understood, they do not prohibit sisters from taking part in any of our missionary, Sunday-school, council, Ministerial, Educational and Christian Workers' Meetings; and since this is true, no one has a right to interfere with their God-given privileges. Sisters should rather be encouraged to take an active part in any of these gatherings. It may be well to bear in mind that, aside from serving as deacons, ministers and elders, the sisters in the Brethren church, exercise about as much authority as do the brethren. They are permitted to vote at any church election where the brethren vote, and they help to elect all the delegates that are sent to represent the churches in Annual Meeting. While they may not serve on the Standing Committee, they can serve as delegates to the Annual Conference or to any of the District Meetings, and if they feel so disposed, they can make speeches in Conference and have them appear in the Full Report, too, at that. Since the sisters have all of these privileges, and even more, it must be evident that there is no occasion for raising the question about the advisability of their speaking in Christian Workers' Meeting.

Some Church Histories.

Some of the State Districts are appointing committees to collect the necessary data and have published a history of their respective Districts. The idea is a good one and should be encouraged. Each District ought to have a history of all of its own churches from the earliest period, and such a work should be prepared while it is possible to secure the necessary data. In most instances it would probably be better for all the Districts in a State to unite in having a history of the whole State prepared and published. Such a book should contain a brief history of the State itself,—a condensed history of the Church of the Brethren,—to be followed by a carefully-prepared history of each congregation in the State, number of biographical sketches, also photographs of places and members of special note, and a few good maps. A committee should be appointed to secure the services of some competent writer to collect the data and prepare the manuscript. He ought to be a man qualified for that kind of work, and a judicious committee is in a better position to make such a selection than a body of delegates would be. In most of the States a brother capable of writing a good history may be found by a committee that knows how to pick men.

Mack and Trine Immersion.

When Alexander Mack began his search for the old paths in which the early Christians walked, he discovered to his sorrow that none of the churches, known to him, observed all of the New Testament ordinances. The form of baptism, as taught by Christ in Matt. 28: 19, was especially neglected. The few Baptist churches he knew practiced single immersion, while the Catholics, Lutherans and Reformed churches held mainly to aspersion, the water being applied three times. The same was true of the Church of England, where trine immersion and trine sprinkling were employed, the latter more than the former. The Catholics, at this time, immersed some of their candidates for baptism,—some by trine immersion and some by single immersion. But Mack seemed not to have had much confidence in the clergy that performed baptism to suit the different tastes of the people. He knew that trine immersion was the early mode, and thought that it should be the only practice of all the churches. While he may have known that there were millions in the Greek and Armenian churches that had been baptized by triple immersion, and that these large Christian bodies recognized no other form as valid, he probably had not been placed in close enough touch with them to give the matter of going to one of their bishops for the New Testament form of baptism any special thought. He placed no value in organic church succession, but deemed it sufficient to restore the apostolic mode by simply making a new start. He held that if one had the right faith and would receive the baptism taught in Matt. 28: 19, his conversion would be acceptable with God. It would appear that he was quite willing to recognize New Testament faith, repentance, confession and baptism, wherever found. Not only so, but he believed that there were others, besides those associating with him, who kept the faith, obeyed the all things set forth in the Gospel, and were therefore members of the mystical body of Christ.

Appeals for Money.

Our patrons are annoyed a good deal by appeals sent through the mails for money, and write us for some information. They wish to know whether this, that, and the other appeal is regular, and whether the party calling for money can be trusted. Once for all, we wish to say that no one can prevent appeals for money being sent through the mails, but one does not need to feel himself under obligation to respond to an appeal simply because it happens to be addressed to him. Those who have something to give to the work of charity should make it a rule to place their money where they know it will be properly used. Among our people we might name such worthy causes as World-wide Mission Fund, India or China Mission Fund, Superannuated Ministers' Fund, Church Extension Fund, Messenger Missionary Fund, Messenger Poor Fund, along with all our colleges and schools, city missions, opened up here and there in the several Districts, and other worthy causes that the General Mission Board may see proper to announce from time to time. But one need pay no attention to individual calls where the party is unknown to him. Our people ought to be liberal givers, but their giving should be done intelligently and in good faith.

Doing Something.

The church is looking for men and women who are doing things, not those who simply talk and find fault with what other people may be doing. Talk is cheap and fault-finding is easy, but they do not make the world better. It is a small matter to find fault with the work of a Sunday-school teacher, but to do better work is quite another thing. It is not the one who can pick flaws in what the teacher is doing that the church is needing, but the one who can do better teaching. It does not require much ability to point out defects in a sermon, but it does require some attainments to deliver a better address, and it is the man who can deliver the better discourse that is in demand everywhere. Men and women who wish to make themselves useful should learn to do something and do it well. The fault-finding may be left to others.

The Temperance Visitor.

The Missionary Visitor, as might be expected, has always been an advocate of temperance and it necessarily must always be. But with good reason some numbers of it, at least, may well be called a Temperance Visitor. From time to time the General Temperance Committee edits several pages of the Visitor, which contain all sorts of information, hints and helps for District and Local Temperance Committees, and for all the busy temperance workers in the several congregations of the Brotherhood. These are at least two reasons why several hundred more of our people and other Christian workers should take the Missionary Visitor.

ORGANIZE FOR WAR!

Is your District organized for war upon King Alcohol? The Annual Conference has not only made it possible but advises and urges such organization. The General Temperance Committee regrets to say that there are ten Districts that have thus far failed to report that they have appointed a District Temperance Committee and that there are as many more District Committees that have as yet failed to report their organization. Will not the friends of righteousness in each District see that this important matter is attended to at once? Send all information and reports to the Secretary of the General Committee, W. M. Howe, 1012 Bedford St., Johnstown, Pa.

OUR AFFLICTION.

We came from North Liberty, Ind., to Southern California last fall. While at Covina, helping to irrigate an orange grove, my husband bruised his knee, and was bedfast for fourteen weeks. He had his leg operated on fourteen times, and came near losing his limb. He called for the elders, Brethren J. S. Brubaker, of Glendora, Cal., and Bro. A. M. White, of Covina, Cal., to anoint him. Our dear brethren asked him if he wanted to be anointed for the healing of the body. He said, "If it is the Lord's will." He seemed to give everything into the Lord's hands. By means of the prayers of our dear brethren and sisters, back home and also here, and by the Heavenly Father to spare his life, so that he can now go on his crutches. We are still praying for him to be entirely restored. Now we are expecting to start for home soon. We look forward to the homecoming to be the best of our trip. California is a real nice place to live, if one has means to live here.

FROM OMAK, WASHINGTON.

Many brethren are leaving the home churches in the East and are seeking new fields of labor in the West and South. I should like to call the attention of such brethren to this part of Washington. We would be glad to have you investigate the advantages here. We have a good country—an irrigated country—under the supervision of the Government Reclamation Service. The climate is healthful and the winters are comparatively mild. The water is good. The soil is rich, and produces about all the various vegetables and crops which can be grown in the Eastern and Middle States.

The land is rapidly being planted to orchards, and is subdivided into twenty, ten and five acre tracts. These small tracts will make good homes for those who improve and care for them properly.

This system brings close neighbors, good schools, and great opportunities for church and Sunday-school work. Surely, this is a good place to build up a flourishing congregation of our people, if we can get a few consecrated workers to locate here. A number of Sunday-schools and preaching services could be maintained, and the workers would not have to travel far.

Brethren, here is where your services are needed. Will you not come and help us? You can enter now on the ground floor. The field is practically unoccupied. Only one of our ministers is within a radius of 100 to 300 miles. It is good to locate in colonies. But, brethren, why should so many go to one place? Why not go where you are needed most?

We have received a good many inquiries, and take pleasure in answering all who enclose stamp. Our Sunday-school and preaching services are very well attended.

Omak, Wash., Feb. 2. B. E. Breshears.

DAHANU, INDIA.

We needed a yoke of cattle ever since we are back at Dahanu. Owing to sickness and other hindering causes, we did not buy until a few weeks ago. We got a young pair only partly broken.

Last Tuesday morning one of our men and I started at four o'clock for a village fourteen miles away in the jungle. We had a bullock cart, and traveled at the rate of two miles per hour. I always prefer walking, but must have some things, bedding and food along, hence a cart is necessary. To walk so slowly is painful to me and to go alone, either ahead or behind very far, is dangerous in this jungle. We stopped on the banks of the Surya (Sun) River for our noonday lunch and arrived at the village at about one o'clock. We spent the rest of the day and the next in talking over the work and visiting the different wards of the village. There are fourteen wards, with a total of one hundred and twenty-five houses, —nearly all jungle people. They are quite friendly.

There are mountains on every side but one, so the sun is up an hour before we can see it, and it sets an hour after it disappears. About a mile from where the teacher lives, in this village, is a dangerous pass in the mountains, on the way to Vada. A few weeks ago several loaded carts were going through this place. One of the carts stuck in the mud and stones. The other cartmen went to help their fellow. Two tigers, one on each side of the road, were watching for food. While the men were busy, these hungry animals tore up a good yoke of bullocks. People are very much afraid and would all keep guns, but the Government does not permit them to have weapons. An old Varley gentleman told us that he would take us to see a tiger in his den the next day. They sleep up and only wake if disturbed. I had no desire to see a tiger at close range, though he be asleep. Adam Ebey.

DEATH OF ELD. J. W. TROSTLE.

Eld. J. W. Trostle died in Pasadena, Cal., Jan. 24, 1911, aged seventy-one years, eight months and two days. He was born May 16, 1839, in Adams Co., Pa., and came to Illinois in 1861. He was united in marriage to Sarah VanOrsdel Nov. 17, 1864. To this union were born eight children, four of whom have passed beyond the veil. The four surviving children are Ira D., of Inglewood, W. E., of Pasadena, Asa J. and Edith Keim, of Los Angeles, Cal. These, with his wife, Sarah Trostle, and Wm. Trostle, of Redondo Beach, his only living brother, are left to mourn his departure.

He was elected to the ministry in 1869, and was ordained to the eldership in 1873, thus serving in the ministry forty-two years, and as bishop thirty-eight years, at times holding the bishopric over six churches.

In 1885 they emigrated from Lee County, Ill., to Marshall County, Iowa, being among the first in the missionary activities of the Brethren church. Their labors resulted in a congregation of two hundred members.

In October, 1888, they moved to Woodbury County, Iowa, and again were pioneers in mission work. They, with their colaborers, succeeded in building up two churches, known as the East and West Kingsley churches.

In 1896 they moved to Los Angeles County, Cal., where they lived until 1904. They first settled at Compton for a short time, and then near Glendora. While residing at this place he held the bishopric over the Covina church for a time, but feeling the infirmities of age fastening upon him, he resigned his oversight.

Jan. 30, 1906, they moved to Pasadena, where they have since resided. While not so active in the pulpit as in former years, yet he always took the deepest interest in all work pertaining to the church.

His last illness was but over two weeks' duration. Almost a week before his death he realized that the end was near, and accordingly prepared for it, by calling one of his sons to his bedside, and expressing to him his last wishes.

Thus passes one from our midst,—from the land of the dying into the tearless land, the home of the ever living where "they shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun strike upon them, nor any heat, for the Lamb that is in the midst of the throne shall be their Shepherd, and shall guide them unto fountains of waters of life: and God shall wipe away every tear from their eyes" (Rev. 7: 16, 17). JALALPUR, INDIA.

Dec. 10 the church at the above place enjoyed a love feast. The membership here is small, but we have the blessed promise that "where two or three are gathered together in his name, God will be in their midst." We fully realized this and felt the Father's nearness, as we sat around white cloths, spread on the floor, which served as tables on which the meal was placed. Eighteen members surrounded the Lord's table. Those of our own mission family present were Bro. Pittenger's, Sister E. H. Eby, and Bro. Long's. The latter still live near part of the time. We were glad for those who were with us for the feast.

Nannie, our oldest native sister in the home, was sick We went into her room and asked her to come and enjoy the feast with us. She then her cot and came and many others will become towns inhabited by outsiders who are used of God to rebuild the ruined places of Moab and thus fulfill the prophecy of twenty-seven centuries ago.

It should be noted that this repeopling of Moab is encouraged by the Turk, mainly for two reasons,—politically and financially. The newcomers are all Mohammedans, which tends to strengthen the Government: This, in case of necessity, would be valuable, for they would stand by their own kind, and then every family, encouraged to settle in this spacious district, means additional revenue in the shape of taxes, and although the Government gives the sites to the immigrants free, in the long run they are the gainers.

Thus, all-unconsciously, the Turk is being used to bring about the purposes of the Almighty, and a people, hostile to the religion and claims of Jesus Christ, are being allowed to occupy a land once so full of interest. It must not be forgotten, however, that this has often been the Lord's way of working, ere blessing, in large measure, comes to a land and people. It will be interesting to watch the development of Palestine alongside of Moab, and see how the Arab, who is now half-brother,—the Arab,—will treat those who are taking up residence in these different sections of country.

Now, in view of these facts, the question presents itself to those interested in such developments and movements, Ought not the Christian agencies of the world to have a hand in these things, and send the Gospel to Moab and the adjacent lands? For, surely, there is more than a material significance to the words of the ancient seer, and God will get glory to himself out of Moab in the shape of believers in his Son Jesus Christ. But this cannot be unless the messengers of the Gospel are sent to tell the news of salvation to those opposed to, and ignorant of, the same. At present Protestantism has no representative throughout the land, now being revived and repeopled. For years, in Kerak, the capital of Moab, the cause of Christ has been represented, and the place occupied by missionaries, first by Mr. and Mrs. Lethaby, and others, later by the Church Missionary Society of England. The latter, for various reasons, withdrew their workers, and for a long time were represented there by two empty rooms. These, however, were lately given up, thus making the way clear for others to go in and occupy the field, which is one of the most promising ones in the Orient, at the present time.

That the inhabitants of Moab are friendly to the missionaries, was recently proved during the insurrection by the Arabs against the Turks. The writer, who has lived in Kerak as a missionary for many years, and since leaving the city, has frequently revisited it, administered to the inhabitants both in tent and town, was in the city at the commencement of hostilities, but was not interfered with, although all other outsiders then in Kerak were massacred. All unknown to the missionary, and a party of nine others with him, orders were circulated through the city by the chiefs that the Europeans were not to be harmed, or in any way interfered with, and such instructions were obeyed. At times excited mobs of Arabs, bent on plunder and loot, surrounded the rooms in which the party were sheltered, but no attempt was made to interfere with them. On the other hand, help was forthcoming from the excited Moabites, so that the party was enabled to reach a place of safety, all along their journey receiving every kindness and help from the Arabs with whom they came in contact, for the missionary was well known to them all.

Thus was demonstrated the fact that years of work among the people had not been wasted, but that a lasting friendship had been created, and the desire of the people of Moab is that the missionaries should return and settle and work among them.

If such a challenge is not accepted, and some effort is not made to evangelize the Moabites, it will be a lasting disgrace to the world of missions. In the face of all that is advocated, published, and talked of, in connection with Moslem missions, can such a field lie unoccupied? This is a question for Committees and Boards to settle, for as surely as they neglect to send the gospel ambassador to such lands and people, so surely will the Lord of Hosts, and he who gave the Great Commission, hold them responsible for such neglect. But he who "abideth faithful" will continue to carry out his purposes, and sooner than we expect, after the Unchangeable. "Behold, I will I bring again the captivity of Moab in the latter days, saith the Lord." Soon the time will have passed for work to be done for which opportunity now offers.

Our town is only about twelve months old, but it is growing rapidly. Most of the business interests are run and controlled by the Brethren. We have now about forty or nine members here, with others coming in this spring. We expect to organize a Sunday-school in the near future. There are plenty of good homes and farms to be had here. On Sunday, Feb. 12, he filled his regular appointments at the Lancaster church house of the Mississinewa church, Middle Indiana. His eyesight is poor, but although it was cloudy, he read to us the fifteenth chapter of Matthew. His memory aids him in Scripture reading. His life makes his sermons effective.—Lawrence Schults, Huntington, Ind., Feb. 14.

Miller, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, was here Jan. 29, and at 11 A. M. delivered a very interesting address. In the evening he gave a good temperance lecture to a large audience. On the evening of Feb. 10 Sister Sadie Miller, our missionary from India, came here, and remained over Sunday. She gave us four lectures on their work. Her talks were very interesting and largely attended. It is indeed a treat to hear what our missionaries have to contend with in foreign countries, and what they are accomplishing. We are anxious to get into our new house, as at present we are using the room over the store for Sunday-school as we should like. We feel grateful to our Brethren and friends who have so willingly helped us. Need we say we are glad to welcome Bro. C. D. Hylton and family, of Troutville, Va. He and his family have been here and will move to place the latter part of March. Bro. Hylton will find plenty of work here, as we need his help in the Lord's work. Bro. Shoemaker, of Kansas, has been with us for two weeks yet, and will move here soon.—G. W. Weddle, Bloom, Kans., Feb. 13.

Kansas City.—At a late council, held in our mission meeting-house, Bro. Hudson Hall was elected Sunday-school superintendent; Sister Marshall, president of the Christian Workers' Meeting; Sister Barker, superintendent of the home department and the cradle roll. All departments of the work are doing well, the Sunday-school averages over one hundred. Following the council, we began a series of meetings which are being well attended. So far nine have been baptized, with two others that are now awaiting the ordinance. We have received a few small donations during the last month, which has helped us to meet our expenses, but we are close touch with the need and actual conditions of suffering, caused through sickness, and sickness alone, which is sufficient to relieve all worthy cases.—I. H. Crist, 12 North Fifteenth Street, Kansas City, Kans., Feb. 14.

His text on Saturday evening's lecture was taken from Heb. 12: 2, and on Sunday morning he took his text from Rom. 12: 1. The discourses were delivered with power, and seemed to make a deep impression. As we have no regular appointments anywhere, the sermons were refreshing are appreciated. Our little band is still increasing a little. We expect to have regular appointments by March 15, as Bro. Bowsher, from Illinois, will be here to preach for us by that time. This is a good country and land is cheap here yet. We would like to have the Brethren locate here. Thompson, closed with a good talk on temperance.—Caroline Brown, 1935 N. Twenty-Third Street, Lincoln, Nebr., Feb. 16.

This makes forty accessions to the church since Jan. 1, including one to one hundred. Of this number thirty-six are heads of families. Many others seem very near the kingdom. Shroyer gave us in all thirty-one good, practical sermons. Sinners were warned and earnestly invited. The attendance was encouraging. The doctrine and teaching can not help but be an inspiration and help to our dear young members of the Grace, and to strengthen in attendance, in spite of unfavorable weather conditions and gave strict attention to Bro. Brandon's outstanding sermons. As a direct result three were baptized and two are to be restored.—John M. Stover, Bradford, Ohio, Feb. 14.

OKLAHOMA.

William and Sister May Stombaugh, near Defiance, same county, Jan. 18, 1911, aged 18 years, 3 months and 19 days. A week and a day before his seventeenth birthday he united with the Blue Creek church, and remained a faithful worker until the close of his earthly pilgrimage. March, 1910, the church chose him as superintendent of the Sunday-school, which position he filled with ability. He also attended Spring Term at Manchester College, and not feeling well, he went home the day before it closed. The day following he had a severe case of double pneumonia, from which he died a week later he was called home. Services by the writer at St. Paul's church, Paulding County, Ohio. Text, 1 Thess. 4: 13. Interment in the cemetery near by.—Edward Kintner, North Manchester, Ind.

Forty-seven years ago he was united in marriage in Coshocton County, Ohio, and to Elizabeth Mizer. To this union were born one son and one daughter. His wife, his son and his daughter survive. June 16, 1872, he united with the Church of the Brethren, remaining faithful until death. His sudden and untimely death has left a void not only in the community, where he so long lived a quiet, exemplary life. Services by Eld. Daniel Hays and Eld. Leo Brumbaugh, both of the U. B. church. Text, 2 Kings 20: 1, latter clause.—B. F. Vanhorn, Clay City, Ind.

Finger Posts on Life's Highway

Showing How to Succeed in Life

By JOHN T. DALE

A new book, full of pointers which point in the right direction. A book for the young, the middle aged and the old.

The purpose of the author, in gathering the material, during many years, was to assist those who are striving to gain strength of mind power, business success, and merited esteem of their fellowmen. Out of a long and varied experience he has been able to collect into this volume more than one hundred articles on that many different subjects, touching human life from almost every possible angle. It is not a novel nor a story, nor yet a long and dry treatise upon some abstract subject, but a collection of articles on everyday topics, written in language and style easy to be understood, making the points so clear that the way of a truly successful and happy life is more easily found. The book abounds in words of wisdom, caution and warning.

We have great hopes for the sale of this book, knowing that it will appeal to all classes with equal force, and be the means of accomplishing good wherever it goes. Should any of these readers be interested in taking an agency for it, write us at once. We can offer liberal commission. The book contains 620 pages, bound in cloth. Illustrated. Will be sent to any address, postpaid, for $1.50.

FULL REPORT OF Annual Meeting

Every members of the Church of the Brethren ought to read the report of the Winona Conference. Even those who were there during the week could not possibly get the full benefit of all that was done, and to those who were not there the published report will be the only source of full information. All want to read it. The addresses delivered at the Missionary, Educational and Sunday-school Meetings form an interesting and valuable part of the report. The queries discussed this year are of vital interest to the workers in the church, and every member ought to be a worker.

MISSIONARIES WANTED

You don't have to go to India or China or Africa and endure privation and suffer hardship to be a missionary. You can do the best kind of missionary work right at home, and you won't need any preparation or previous training either. All you need to do is to use a little of your spare time and a little of your surplus cash.

One of the best missionaries to the home that we know of is the Gospel Messenger. It preaches several sermons each week to each and every person that reads it, besides containing interesting bits of news and timely articles on up-to-date subjects.

This paper does not have the circulation that its worth deserves; possibly the reason for this is that a good many people do not know of its value, and thus are not aware of the benefit they are missing.

OUR PROPOSITION IS THIS

We will offer the Gospel Messenger for only 50 cents a year if sent into homes where there are no members of the Church of the Brethren. This fact of course is to be mentioned when sending in your orders. The General Mission Board will pay the deficiency.

Why not take advantage of this special offer and BE A MISSIONARY? If each present subscriber would send in but ONE subscription we would double our list, and the good derived could not be estimated.

Will You Be a Missionary?

TWO CENTURIES

OF THE CHURCH OF THE BRETHREN

No Brethren home library is complete without a copy of this book. Another book of equal value and interest to the present and future members of the church will not soon be published. In the twenty-five addresses delivered at the Bicentennial Conference, Des Moines, Iowa, 1908, are admirably portrayed the beginnings, persecutions, struggles, growth and development of the church in the Fatherland, Colonial America and the United States; what the church stands for, her higher spiritual life, her relation to the great moral issues of civilization; the work of women in the church; the Sunday school, missionary and educational work; her publications; the noble deeds and sacrifices of the pioneer preachers.

The book is printed in large type and contains 400 pages. The frontispiece shows the portraits of the five Brethren who were chosen by the Annual Conference of 1907 as the Bicentennial Program Committee, and the portraits of the brethren and sisters on the program are found in connection with their addresses, respectively.

A more fitting souvenir gift book from parents to child, or from friend to friend, would be hard to find.

when passing through the city. The church can be reached within a few blocks, by taking the Shenandoah car at the Union Depot. We have an interesting and increasing Sunday-school, preaching every Sunday, both morning and evening, and prayer meeting every Wednesday evening. We invite you to stop and be with us and help in our little meetings.—Birdie R. Lehman, R. D. 3, Guthrie, Okla., Feb. 13.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Elizabethtown church met in a special council Feb. 8. Some unfinished items were disposed of, and elected Bro. John C. Zug to the second degree of the ministry. We have opened our series of meetings, with Bro. C. Ober Sherfick assisting. We are praying for a great ingathering.—C. M. Neff, Elizabethtown, Pa., Feb. 18.

Marsh Creek.—Our church convened in council at the Gettysburg house. Great solemnity prevailed, because of the absence of our dear elder, Jos. Myers. Yours, who was always present on other occasions, and occupied the chair, Bro. Hollinger took charge at this time. Bro. C. L. Baker was called to our council on special business. What made the meeting more than ordinarily solemn was the illness of Brother and Sister Pfouts, the latter having never fully recovered from the shock occasioned by the instant death of their grandchild, who was killed by a horse falling on him last summer. The church decided to hold four series of meetings during the year. Our love feast will be the first.—W. B. Jacobs, R. D. 6, Gettysburg, Pa., Feb. 11.

Notice.—The District Meeting of Southern Pennsylvania will convene at Roaring Springs, Blair County, on Tuesday evening, April 4, at 7:30 o'clock. Delegates are requested to be present at 7:30 P. M., when the meeting will be organized. Elders' Meeting will organize at 2 P. M. the same day. Train service and further announcements will be made later by the Brethren at Roaring Springs.—J. C. Swigart, Sec., Mattawana, Pa., Feb. 18.

Royersford.—The baptism of six precious souls, on Wednesday night, closed a series of evangelistic meetings held here by our pastor, Bro. Quincy Leckrone, whose sermons were indeed powerful and instructive. Our brother delivered a special sermon, and also composed a poem, copies of which was distributed, on the subject of baptism, covering this ordinance very thoroughly, and making it very clear as received by Bro. Bassinger, of Ohio, also assisted in these meetings. Being an able singer, supplied with some appropriate solos, he helped to make the meetings a real success. The efforts and labor of these brethren were appreciated very much by all. —Mrs. Perry Tyson, Royersford, Pa., Feb. 17.

Upper Canowago.—Eld. C. D. Bonsack, of Union Bridge, Md., began a series of meetings at East Berlin, Pa., Jan. 28, and continued until Feb. 12. Considering the inclement weather, the attendance and interest were good. The members feel greatly encouraged and strengthened through his earnest labors and excellent sermons. Two were received by baptism today, and many more are near the kingdom.—Andrew Sowers, Route 1, East Berlin, Pa., Feb. 18.

White Oak.—We just closed a three weeks' series of meetings in the Mahelm house, conducted by Bro. Rufus Bucher. The attendance and interest were good, and the members of the house was crowded. Twenty-five accepted Christ, and the church was built up and strengthened by the labors of Bro. Bucher. Bucher is an able expounder of the truth. He does not relate doubtful stories, nor does he dwell upon the faults of other churches, but he preaches the Word of God in its purity. If all of our preachers would do like Bro. Bucher, there would not be so much trouble with some after they get into the church.—Anna E. Shank, Mahelm, Pa., Feb. 13.

TENNESSEE.

Cedar Grove.—Our church met Feb. 11, but owing to our minister being sick, we had no preaching. We had a short prayer service. On Sunday we met and reorganized our Sunday-school, with Bro. Daniel Isenberg as superintendent; the writer, secretary-treasurer. We ask the prayers of the brethren and sisters that we may have an evergreen Sunday-school.—Effie Brooks, Rogersville, Tenn., Feb. 15.

TEXAS.

Portland.—In Gospel Messenger, Feb. 4, page 11, under the heading "Portland, Tex.," I meant to say that Corpus Christi has 10,000 inhabitants, instead of Portland, which has only between two or three hundred.—Amanda Wiltmore, Portland, Tex., Feb. 8.

WASHINGTON.

Mt. Hope.—Our series of meetings in the mountains closed Feb. 5, having continued for three weeks. Seven were baptized. This was Bro. Streeter's third series of meetings in the old schoolhouse. At the beginning of the meetings it was said that he had been told one should never attempt to hold a third series of meetings at the same place, as there was no chance of success. Bro. Streeter proved that idea to be untrue or, at least, that there are exceptions. We are now having a series of meetings in Chewelah, conducted by Eld. J. U. G. Stiverson, of Tacoma, Wash.—Pearl Hixson, Chewelah, Wash., Feb. 15.

Tacoma.—Feb. 5, at the close of the morning service, one was taken down into the water and buried with Christ in baptism. He is the head of a family. Seventy were present to witness the baptism. I am now at Chewelah, Wash., holding a series of meetings. We have good prospects of others coming into the church in Tacoma.—J. U. G. Stiverson, 712 South Fifty-second Street, Tacoma, Wash., Feb. 15.

Wenatchee.—Bro. A. D. Bowman just closed a week's series of meetings with Mahaa, a preaching point, about 12 miles from here. One dear soul accepted Christ. She was immersed in the baptistry at the church-house last evening. Bro. Bowman gave them doctrinal sermons, which aroused considerable interest. We Messenger to bring placed in the room at this place, which we have learned is a most powerful agent in winning souls to Christ. Our series of meetings begins tonight, to be conducted by Eld. W. L. Eikenberry, of Barnum, Minn.—Alice Peters, Wenatchee, Wash., Feb. 9.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Anderson.—The District Mission Board has been keeping up a regular appointment at this place since November, 1909. Bro. Bro. W. W. Kirk and the writer began a meeting Jan. 28 and closed Feb. 12. Bro. Kirk did most of the preaching. We preached nineteen sermons in all and received four by confession. Three were received by letter, and baptized, and there is one applicant. Another said she was ready as soon as her husband would be. We left the church in a much better condition, and others are doing likewise. Many seem to be near the kingdom. Bro. Kirk is preaching for the church in his home-of several has wrought a good work. Some even have said that it is the best [illegible] that ever came to their church. We held at this place is white already to harvest. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."—A. C. Auvil, Thornton, W. Va., Feb. 13.

Sand Creek.—We met in council Jan. 7 at the Salem house. Eld. Jeremiah Thomas presided. We decided to begin a series of meetings Feb. 18, to close with a Love Feast, Feb. 25. The Ministerial and Sunday-school Meetings will be held June 16 and 17. Missionary solicitors were appointed. The writer was appointed correspondent. Our Sunday-school was organized Jan. 8. The writer was chosen superintendent; Sister Ida Wilson, secretary. A special council was called Feb. 11, to make arrangements to repair the Salem churchhouse. A committee and the secretary was appointed to look after the work, namely, Brethren Noah Thomas, James Thomas and Clar Starling.—James M. Thomas, R. D. 1, Box 46, Clifton Mills, W. Va., Feb. 13.

NOTES NOT CLASSIFIED.

Twin Falls.—Feb. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, we had a discourse on the anointing service by our elder, which was very instructive. We also had two sermons on mute evidence, on this blessed means of grace. There are those of our own Fraternity who do not fully understand this ordinance, hence miss the blessing. In the evening, at 7:45, Mr. Campbell, from Indiana, gave us a talk on the Bible Lands, which was much appreciated by all present.—Ella Harvey, 761 Second avenue, North Twin Falls, Idaho, Feb. 18.

Maytag.—We met in council Feb. 16, for our quarterly council. Bro. H. H. Wingert was reelected elder for another year, and was also chosen as delegate to Annual Meeting. We decided to have Sister Ella Miller, from Ruth, with us about the last of March or first of April, to give us some lectures. We will hold our Love Feast May 27, and would be glad to have any one, especially ministers, attend. Bro. Ira Mason, of Nora Springs, was with us and attend our love feast and Sunday services.—Phoebe Foft, Kingsley, Iowa, Feb. 18.

Franklin Grove.—Our church met in regular business meeting Feb. 18. In the absence of our elder, Bro. C. W. Lahman presided over the meeting. Two letters of membership were received and four were granted. An interesting report of the Conference visit was given. Several queries and suggestions were discussed and acted upon by the members. A committee was appointed to secure additional Sunday-school rooms in the basement; also to investigate plans and arrangements for a pipe organ. We decided to have a two-days' meeting soon. Sister Mildred Suter was chosen secretary of our Christian Workers' Band. Bro. O. D. Buck was elected church chorister. We decided to have a series of meetings. Our love feast will be held May 13, at 5 P. M. Bro. O. D. Buck was elected to represent the church at Annual Meeting, with Bro. C. W. Lahman, alternate.—Anna S. Buck, Franklin Grove, Ill., Feb. 20.

FLAT ROCK, VIRGINIA.

Our church met in council Feb. 11, with Elders B. W. Neff, D. P. Wine and J. Carson Miller present. Bro. B. W. Neff presided. Two letters of membership were granted. Bro. D. P. Wine is our delegate to Annual Meeting, with Bro. J. Carson Miller alternate. Licenses to registers of District Meeting are Brethren J. Frank Good and J. W. Myers; Brethren W. B. Neff and J. D. Shaver, alternates. The topical session of the quarterly council was again revived, with Brethren J. W. Myers, J. Frank Good and Sister Ida Good to prepare the next program. The subject for our next quarterly council at Flat Rock is: "What Would Be the Best Means to Arouse the Laity to Greater Activity?" the time being from ten to twelve A. M. Our Local Mission Board met on the same day with all the members present. Bro. J. Carson Miller asked to be relieved, which request was granted, and Bro. J. D. Wine was chosen in his place. The Board is now officially organized as follows: Bro. J. D. Wine, chairman; Bro. J. Frank Good, secretary; Bro. J. W. Myers, treasurer. The Board decided that a series of meetings is to be held at Sugar Grove, in Trout Run, by Bro. John H. Garber, and one at Stony Creek by Eld. D. P. Wine. J. W. Myers.

PROHIBITION. IS IT RIGHT?

Yes! says Samuel Dickie, President of Albion College, Albion, Mich.

No! says David Rose, Mayor of Milwaukee, Wis.

In a pamphlet of one hundred and twenty-five pages is contained a full report of the speeches on both sides, by these distinguished gentlemen, in two debates. One of the debates was held in Milwaukee, Wis., March 26, 1909, and the other in Chicago, April 30, 1909.

Of President Dickie Judge Tarrant, Chairman of the meetings, says: "The affirmative of this question will be maintained by a gentleman of learning and ability, who enjoyed the honor of the chairmanship of the National Committee of the Prohibition Party for a period of twelve years. He is a distinguished educator and orator, and has brought to the study of the question involved all the talent and power which he possesses."

In introducing Mayor Rose he said, in part: "Throughout the country he is known, not only as our mayor, but as a great orator. Indeed, it has been asserted that his efforts at the national conventions of his party and at their assemblies have rarely been equaled or excelled."

Any one desiring to read the strongest arguments that can be produced on both sides of this great question can do no better than to send for this pamphlet.

THE GOSPEL MESSENGER

AROUND THE WORLD

"Eliminate Politics from the Pulpit."

We do not know just why it was needed, but one of our exchanges gives under the heading quoted above, some valuable hints, as to the sacredness of the pulpit, in the following: "Why can not the man behind the pulpit remember that it calls for no thorough Bible training or a special election to the ministry, to deliver political tirades or to discuss the leading secular questions of the hour? It is not necessary for people to go to church to hear such themes discussed." We say a hearty "Amen" to the suggestion of our contemporary. What the people need is the old Gospel, delivered "in the demonstration of the Spirit and in power." This, if received in good and honest hearts, will make the hearers "wise unto salvation."

"The Broad Man."

These days we can hardly peruse the columns of some advanced (?) journals, without being impressed by the prevalence of skeptical allusions to Bible facts and teachings, uttered by so-called "advanced" thinkers. A man who believes little or nothing, of things Divine, poses as a "broad man," while the one who believes a great deal, and believes it with all his heart, is classed as a "narrow man." One is made to wonder why the relative terms should be thus employed. The Christian believer is, of all men, the "broadest," for his field is the world, his resources are the most unlimited, and his opportunities for usefulness the most marvelous. "A goodly heritage" is the portion of all who enter the broad plane of Christian usefulness.

Commendable Work for Ex-Convicts.

No class of men are in greater need of a helping hand, perhaps, than the prisoners and ex-convicts, released from the city and county jails, and the State penitentiaries. To benefit these men, Mrs. Flora M. Bilkiss, shareworker and humanitarian of Spokane, Wash., has fitted up a home in which these unfortunate ones may secure board and lodging by engaging in various lines of industry, with a view of finding a permanent place of employment as soon as opportunity offers. There are scores of men, now doing good work, and even in business for themselves, who, while friendless and forsaken, were cared for by this friend of the prisoner, and started out in the way of righteousness. And what Mrs. Bilkiss is doing successfully, might be done by scores of others, with the distinct assurance that the blessing of Matt. 25: 34-40 will be their promised reward.

Relieving Distress Among the Poor.

The Russell Sage Foundation of New York, so wisely established by the widow of the great financier, is aiming to relieve humanity's needs in various ways. Its recent investigations of the "loan shark" business of that great city revealed the astounding fact that $30,000,000 a year is annually borrowed by the unfortunate victims of the merciless money lenders and that the average rate of interest is 120 per cent per annum. It is the plan of the Sage Foundation to put these social vampires out of business by providing philanthropic ways and means of relieving real distress among the poor, while, at the same time, impressing the value of honest toil and wise economy. It was said by one of old, "The destruction of the poor is their poverty," and this is never seen more forcibly than in the deplorable state of those who happen to fall into the clutches of the conscienceless loan agents.

Sumptuous Churches Not Needed.

Governor Osborn, of Michigan, recently gave some much-needed advice on the propriety of greater simplicity in church work. He had been importuned to lend his influence to a movement that would give increased salaries to preachers of country churches. In reply to the request he writes: "I am in fullest sympathy with any movement that tends to commend our ministry. Already Satan has crippled church activities by fastening upon the membership fashion and fastidiousness, and unnecessary elegance and luxury. Quit building sumptuous sanctuaries, and distribute the money, that the Christian people so willingly give, to those who need ministerial assistance in rural districts. Have simple places of worship where the humblest will feel welcome. Pay more attention to the eternal love that Christ taught, and give less heed to the conventionalities of the age." These words of Governor Osborn will bear a repeated reading and admit of a practical and effective application.

Another Charge Against the Liquor Traffic.

On the authority of Dr. Albert Warren Ferris, President of the State Commission in Lunacy, of New York, we are assured that "the use of alcoholic beverages is the greatest cause of insanity." Of 961 cases in the State institutions fifty-five per cent of the men, and twenty-two per cent of the women are there as the result of the drink traffic. In the last ten years the population of New York has increased 47.6 per cent, while the number of known insane has increased 103.9 per cent. And yet these are people foolish enough to plead for "personal liberty" to gratify a perverted appetite that will, sooner or later, rob them of decency and sound reason, and eventually consign them to the drunkard's doom, "whose end is destruction."

Compulsory Education in Shansi, China.

Gratifying, indeed, is the keen interest evinced by the Chinese authorities in favor of education, and so fully convinced are they as to its great value, that the officials in the province above referred to are unwilling to entrust the school attendance of the children to the changing desires or whims of the parents, but insist that children between seven and thirteen years must be in school regularly. A failure to comply with the specified official regulation, imposes heavy fines on the offending parents. Such an attitude towards school work is highly commendable, and it is to be hoped that the general enlightenment of the people will be a stepping-stone to the gradual attainment of the even more desirable "wisdom from on high."

Falling Away of Membership.

A speaker at the recent convention of Catholic societies in Pittsburg, Pa., deplored the slow growth of Catholicism in the United States. While that church, during the last ten years, has increased from a membership of ten millions to almost thirteen millions, immigration statistics indicate that five and one-half millions of Catholics came from Europe. The query now is, "Where did the people go?" The answer is found in the generally-admitted fact that churchless socialism, anarchy, infidelity and irreligion are doing for the Catholics just what they are doing for Protestantism. It behooves the "watchman on the walls of Zion" to cry aloud, and warn against the encroaching foe. These are the days when even in our own ranks "the love of many is growing cold," and we must needs "strengthen those who remain."

Education for Prisoners.

While commendable advancement is being made in prison reform methods, in all civilized countries, it is one of the most significant facts that Great Britain is now making systematic efforts for the efficient instruction of all its prisoners. Special correspondence courses are arranged for the long-term prisoners and the boys in the reformatories, with special reference to the various trades they are being taught. This will result in thoroughly-trained and efficient workers, and as these men and boys leave the penal institutions they will be fully prepared to cope with the various difficulties confronting them in the outside world. Trained men are needed everywhere, these days, and even the church needs more men who are fully prepared for the responsible duties awaiting them. "Study to show thyself approved."

What Other Churches Are Doing.

We have no way of determining just how much, all told, is raised by the Church of the Brethren, each year, for the various church purposes, including the erection of churches, current church expenses, the work of evangelism, home mission work, educational work, old people's and orphans' homes, etc., though we do know how much money for the various lines of mission work proper, passed through the hands of the Mission Board. Perhaps it might be of interest to know just what is being done by others: The Methodist Episcopal church, last year, raised a total of of $43,107,651 for educational, charitable, ministerial and missionary purposes, assigned, in part, as follows: Ministerial support, $15,040,176; current expenses, $3,446,157; building purposes, $14,047,208; foreign missions, $2,241,689; home missions, $1,876,970; universities and colleges, $1,-247,700; other educational work, $2,329,371. For deaconess work, etc., over $3,000,000 was appropriated. The average per capita contribution is over twelve dollars,—not quite so good as that of the Presbyterians, who report $18 to each member. Not all religious bodies gather statistics comprehensive enough to afford a complete insight into their total amount of contributions. It is true, however, that all religious bodies,—our own church not excepted,—still have abundant opportunity to grow amazingly in the "grace of giving."

Our Nation as a World Leader.

During the recent Chicago visit of Count Albert Apponyi, of Hungary, this noted peace advocate made a strong plea that the United States take her providentially-assigned place as a leader in the great world peace movement. He suggests that there be frequent conferences between the great powers of the world, at the initiative of the United States, thereby paving the way for a better understanding of the apparently irreconcilable difficulties. Thus he hopes that the final and ultimate ideal,—peace and good will among the nations,—may be reached. Count Apponyi strongly endorses an international court of justice,—such as has long been favored by the United States. If given the widest powers and authority, it would practically do away with war. It is to be regretted that not more of the public men have definite convictions along the line of equitably and peaceably settling international differences. Unfortunately, popular sentiment is largely in favor of military display and glory.

The Real Uplift of the Orient.

Travelers in Oriental countries have frequently been surprised at the wonderful development of the natives when, by the faithful labors of the missionary, they have been trained in the acquirement of useful knowledge as well as moral integrity. Indifferent to the claims of Christianity, as many of the tourists unfortunately are, one fact they can not controvert, and that is the power of a renewed life, as shown by many natives,—a change so pronounced that none can gainsay it. A recent expression by a worldfamous traveler is this: "It looks to me as if the foreign missionaries were the only persons who are doing anything in the Orient for the real uplift of the nations there, and without any selfish commercial interest at heart." Think of it, brethren and sisters, when you make your next contribution to missions. You are not simply giving so much money, but you are moulding Christian lives, and thereby influencing generations yet to come. You are "letting your light shine" in far-off lands to the glory of the Father.

Russia's Opportunity.

Referring to recent hostile demonstrations against China, on the part of the Russian Empire, it has been suggested that the noblest revenge would be to "heap coals of fire on the head of the enemy" by ministering to the plague and famine stricken sufferers of the Celestial Empire. The suggestion is so fully in harmony with the spirit of Christ's teaching that one can not help but pray for an actual realization of the apostolic precept which says: "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink." Latest reports place the number of famine sufferers at 3,-000,000, and Amos P. Wilder, American Consul-General at Shanghai assures us that 2,000,000 will die unless relief is promptly afforded. While the Chinese authorities are doing what they can, in the relief of the sufferers, it remains for the Christian nations of the world to come to the rescue. Least of all should any nation think of war, in a time like this. As a near neighbor to the afflicted nation, what an opportunity there is for Russia to be magnanimous to the stricken ones,—to restore rather than to afflict!

A Long-Delayed Answer to Prayer.

The recent answer to a prayer which for thirty years had been offered by one who, while under a cloud of suspicion, was longing for a vindication of his integrity, is one of the remarkable incidents that prove truth to be stranger than fiction. Charles Edwin Burdette, while employed in the postoffice at Peoria, Ill., thirty years ago, was censured for the disappearance of a registered letter package containing $3,500. While there was no conclusive evidence against him, there was nevertheless a stain upon his record. Deeply grieved by the unjust accusation, and praying that the Lord, in some way, might cause his innocence to be proved, the young man continued his ministerial preparation. For some years he was a missionary at Assam, India, and during more recent years, a pastor at Springfield, Mass., but never, during all the years, did he fail to pray that the cloud might be lifted from his character. There was no answer, however, until, during recent repairs to a "sack, at San Francisco, a large manila registry envelope was found wedged in the bottom of the sack, where, seemingly, it had lain undisturbed for many years. It proved to be the long-lost package, to the great joy of Mr. Burdette, when apprised of the fact. The incident teaches the importance of being slow in our condemnation of others, however much appearances may be against them. Greater yet, however, is the illustration of the glorious fact that sometime, some way, God will answer the prayers of those "that cry to him day and night."

The Light of God.

8s and 7s.

BY JAS. A. SELL.

In the morning of creation,
When the world by God was made,
Darkness brooded o'er the waters,
Like the pall of night's deep shade.
'Twas an emblem of the darkness,
That befell our fallen race,
When the blight of sin had hidden,
The Creator's smiling face.

But a light broke through the shadows,
From the throne of heaven above.
'Twas the Spirit's emanation,
As a gift of God's pure love.
And this light shines down the ages,
As a guide to sinful men,
Pointing out the way to glory,
Where we all may meet again.

May this light become more precious,
As it leads us day by day,
And direct our wandering footsteps,
In the straight and narrow way.
And when death's dark portal opens,
Taking us from earth away.
May the light be all the brighter,
Till we reach the perfect day.

New Testament Principles and Methods.

Applied to Present-Day Ministerial Problems, Particularly in the Church of the Brethren.

BY JOHN W. WAYLAND.

Part II.—How to Use the Men Called.

"But we will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the word" (Acts 6: 4).

"As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away" (Acts 13: 2, 3).

"Preach the word" (2 Tim. 4: 2).

"And how shall they preach, except they be sent?" (Rom. 10: 15).

"Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind" (1 Peter 5: 2).

"Feed my lambs. Feed my sheep" (John 21: 15, 16).

"Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel" (1 Cor. 9: 14).

HERE we have the facts in a nutshell; all sides of the case clearly stated in the inspired words of Scripture.

Let us see again what the facts are: First, the apostles gave all their time to prayer and the ministry of the Word. Second, Barnabas and Saul were Divinely called; they were separated (consecrated) unto the work by God and men; they were sent out by the church, guided by the Holy Ghost. Third, the young preacher is exhorted to preach, and to preach the Word. Fourth, the minister must depend upon being sent. Fifth, Peter says what Christ says: "Feed the flock; feed the lambs; feed the sheep." This is certainly a strong admonition to pastoral work. Sixth, the preacher and pastor are to do their work willingly—of a free will: out of benevolence, love. Seventh, they are not to do it for material rewards—for the money that they may be able to get out of it. Eighth, it is Christ's plan that the preacher of the Gospel should get his living out of his work.

This is intended to be a plain, straightforward talk; yet it is hard to see how any one can state the case more clearly or more fully than is done in these words of Scripture. In calling attention to these Divinely-given rules, and in applying them to present-day needs, my purpose is not to find fault merely, but chiefly to find a remedy for some unfortunate conditions.

Progress has marked Christian history, as well as all history; and progress in many lines has marked the history of the Church of the Brethren. In recent years foreign missions, Sunday-schools, higher education, and other forward and upward movements have had a stirring revival among us. A generation ago all these things were but weakly in evidence, and were regarded with much suspicion by the majority of our people. And yet all these things were gray with antiquity, and approved in their proper forms by long-standing sanctions of God and man. The gospel ministry is also an old institution. It has been treated in various ways by different ages and different societies, and yet no better solution of the problems associated with it has ever been found than the New Testament solution. It is the New Testament solution that we all really desire; it is the New Testament way of meeting some of our great needs along this line that this paper aims to point out. Rising to the New Testament plan will be true progress.

In this presentation of the ministerial question, I hope to have it clearly understood that my main consideration is not the need of the minister, however great that may be, but the need of the church. I purpose to speak plainly, but in the best of feeling. If I seem very earnest, it will be because I am very earnest, and because I feel so keenly the need of our Brotherhood in this matter.

The great need of the Church of the Brethren today is not money, not material means, not more legislation on forms of worship or other forms, not more foreign missionaries, not more men in the ministry, but more preachers and pastors. I say, not more men in the ministry, but more preachers and pastors. I mean more preachers and pastors of the New Testament sort, men who are separated from all other work and consecrated to the one work.

In collecting and comparing some statistics, recently, I was most forcibly brought to a realization of this fact. The Church of the Brethren has more men in the ministry—on the ministerial list—in proportion to the whole number of communicants, than any other church I know of, Catholic or Protestant. But here are the figures: let them speak.

Per 1,000 communicants the Lutheran church has about four preachers; the Disciples about five; the Presbyterians nearly seven; the United Brethren and the Methodists each about seven; the Baptists between seven and eight; the Catholics a little over one; and the Church of the Brethren about twenty-eight. I count for us about 100,000 communicants in all, including about 2,800 men in the ministry. These figures would give us about twenty-eight preachers for every 1,000 members, or one preacher to every thirty-five members. These figures are subject to all necessary corrections; but the approved result will not differ much from that stated.

One preacher (now in the ministry) to every thirty-five communicants; twenty-eight "preachers" to every thousand communicants,—do we need more men in the ministry? We now have seven times as many, for our numbers, as the Lutherans, more than five times as many as the Disciples, four times as many as the Presbyterians, United Brethren, or Methodists; about or nearly four times as many as the Baptists; and more than twenty times as many as the Catholics!

Do we need more men in the ministry? No doubt the other denominations mentioned do; but it would seem that if all our men are at work, they must actually be in one another's way. It certainly would seem that with such an unusually large proportion of preachers, we ought to be pressing out into new fields, and thus be increasing our membership very rapidly. At least, we ought to be doing a great deal of work among ourselves: we ought to have more and better pastoral care than any people in the world.

Brethren! what is the truth? Not one of the possibilities, just indicated, is being realized! We are not increasing our membership rapidly; we are not having as much work among ourselves as we need; we are not receiving our needed amount of pastoral care. The other churches named, with a few preachers, in proportion, are perhaps doing more, in all these lines, than we are, with our large proportion of preachers. Certainly these denominations receive more pastoral care, and they are growing much more rapidly. Nearly or quite all of the Protestant churches named have doubled, or more than doubled, their membership during the past thirty-five years, while we have made but little if any appreciable gain.

Whatever explanation of these facts may be offered, one thing must still be evident: We are not getting as much service out of our preachers as we ought to—we are not using our preachers as effectively as the other churches are using theirs.

With a plethora of men "in the ministry," we have a dearth of preachers and pastors, and we are paying the penalties. We need more preachers and pastors. This is the great need of the Brethren church.

What are we losing by this lack? Good preaching; visitation of the sick; helpful acquaintance between clergy and laity; cooperation; mutual confidence; interest in the work; devotion and piety; and OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

What might we gain with this lack supplied? Better preaching; more members; deeper spirituality; closer fellowship; prevention of much cause for discipline; greater efficiency in all lines of Christian service; and OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

How may we supply this lack? How may we get more preachers and pastors? Answer: By applying New Testament principles, and by adopting New Testament methods. If we want the New Testament type of service from our men in the ministry, we must develop the same kind of service toward them.

We must continue the call for men. We must urge more consistently the needs and responsibilities of the ministry. We must demand of the preacher and pastor greater devotion, efficiency, and piety; but we must also carry out the gospel rule, and give them an adequate financial support. We must demand of them all of their time and energy for the church, requiring them to give up all other business; but we must, at the same time, make all business for a livelihood unnecessary for them. We may fail to get all we need even by this method; but this is the New Testament—the Bible—method; and if we can not make a success of this we are bound to fail otherwise.

If any one is still doubtful as to this method—particularly the providing of temporal support for the minister—let him observe the example of Peter (1 Cor. 9: 5) and hear the teaching of Paul, already frequently referred to, and fully stated in the ninth chapter of First Corinthians. It is interesting to observe that Paul, like many preachers today, was often not able to live up to his preaching. He taught emphatically his right to support, but was generally obliged by circumstances to make his own living; while Peter, on the other hand, although he taught the true motive for service (1 Peter 5: 2) and doubtless acted upon it, nevertheless took enough from his brethren in the nature of temporal things to support himself and his wife or sister (1 Cor. 9: 4-6), or both.

In the passage just cited, Paul also refers to the example of the other apostles and the Lord's brethren. His own example in receiving money or something of the sort is given in Philpp. 4: 15-17; and it seems evident from Luke 8: 1-3 that Christ himself received temporal support on his preaching tours. At any rate, his teaching on the subject is unmistakable: "The workman is worthy of his meat" (Matt. 10: 10); "the laborer is worthy of his hire" (Luke 10: 7). Read the context of these passages, if you are skeptical; judge for yourself.

Shall we soon be willing to adopt New Testament methods in our effort to reach New Testament conditions? The two must go together, particularly in the matter under consideration. The church has no right to require all of the minister's time and energy without providing adequately for his physical needs. It owes him moral and spiritual support as well; but until we are willing to do our part in the temporal as well as in the spiritual, just so long the church's great need will remain unsupplied. This may not be an agreeable fact, but it is nevertheless a fact, and we had better acknowledge it and act accordingly. We have already suffered too much and too long by trying to make ourselves believe that our way is better than Christ's way. We, as a church, take the Bible for our guide, the New Testament as our creed; let us quit skipping over those passages in our creed that teach the church's duty to the ministry.

But let me declare again that I am less concerned about the welfare of the ministry than about the welfare of the church as a whole. It is not my temporal need, as a preacher, that is giving me this deep concern; it is not the temporal need of my brother ministers; but it is the great need of the church—the great need for preachers and pastors: especially for pastoral care. Lack of pastoral care is robbing us of many things necessary in spiritual life; it is robbing us of the young people in our own homes. In the young people must be our hope for the next generation.

Brethren, let us learn from sad experience, already too long continued, if we are not willing to learn this lesson from the New Testament; and, profiting thereby, let us, as soon as possible, provide shepherds whose business, and only business, is to feed the flock. But as we look at the facts fairly and squarely we shall see that our creed (the New Testament) and our experience teach the same lesson. Let us, therefore, continue the call for men; but let us use the men called, so as to get the work done that needs to be done—that must be done, if we are to accomplish our mission in the world.

The Sermon that Appeals to Me.

BY A. G. CROSSWHITE.

I MEAN the sermon, not the speaker; for every minister has his "off spells," and feels it as well as his congregation. Reputation of the speaker should constitute no factor in our estimate of a sermon; neither is the mere announcement of a big or odd subject a guarantee that it will be above the average; for we are disappointed as often in the "big guns" as we are in those who just preach.

I am not fully decided as to whether I enjoy more the presentation of a subject that has engaged my attention a great deal, or one that is entirely new to me. This indicates my attitude toward subjects. The next thing to consider is the message and its delivery. This constitutes my meat and my drink while in the sanctuary, and must, in some way, connect my roving mind and hungry soul with heaven's dispensary, and hold them there until they become fully acquainted with the place and its superior advantages to earthly conditions, so that, between times, I may desire to slip off and feast there.

I must, in some way, feel that the minister cares more for my soul than for my money, and that in his preaching he seeks the approval of God rather than the praise of men. While I am listening to his discourse on Sunday, I must feel that his home life, his social and business life, during the other six days, measure up to his Sunday sermon. I want to know, too, that the warmth and light which his very being infuses into my life comes to him by direct contact with the "Great Teacher." I must believe that he will as warmly shake my hand down town as he does at the door when I go in or out of the church. I do not object to flights of eloquence; indeed, I rather admire it, but oratory is one thing, noise is something else. I like to get something when the minister gets loud, for it has cost him a great effort.

Again, I like suggestive preaching. There is little chance for criticism or antagonism when the minister furnishes the thought and allows his congregation the privilege of developing it. A good thought is often spoiled by arguments, just as photographers' plates are faded out by exposure to light. They require a dark room; and so do our thoughts. In the stillness of the midnight hour we often get more by silent meditation than through any amount of illumination in the public assembly. It is not so much what we get as what we retain, and what we give out.

I sometimes hear a sermon that stirs my soul to its very depths and speak of it as a great effort but when asked for text and points upon which I have based my decision, I find that I have not carried my inspiration home, and must explain only on general principles. As a rule, however, the sermons that have not appealed to me, to any great extent, were the occasions when my mind was preoccupied or troubled with spiritual indigestion.

Give a preacher a regular, worshipful, spiritual congregation for one year and it will better qualify him for his work than twice the time in our best theological institutions.

Going Up to Jerusalem.

BY W. R. MILLER.

Siege and Looting of Kerak (Kir-har-e-seth).—No. 1.

OUR trip through Philistia proved so interesting and profitable that, when the trip to Petra through Moab and across the desert to Kadesh-Barnea, etc., was proposed, there was little time lost in making up the party, and getting started, especially since it was the desire of all that we should be back to Jerusalem by Christmas. However, the personnel of the party was changed to this extent: Ralph and J. F. Souders were substituted for Brother and Sister Hollinger, and Miss Frances Healy, of Hampton Falls, N. H., was added, making our party ten in number, including Mr. A. Forder, our guide, whom our people are learning to know very well through his contributions to our papers. Our horses were selected with great care. A food supply was procured of such things as could not be had along the way, for in that country there are very few places in which provisions can be purchased, excepting chickens and eggs, which can be found wherever one finds the black tents of Kedar, or the "houses of hair" of the Bedouins.

The expedition, when made up, consisted of the ten tourists and their horses, ten pack animals and seven muleteers,—a total of seventeen people and twenty animals. The probable time for the entire trip was to be about twenty-five days, with not less than thirty places of Biblical significance to be visited.

Nov. 30 found us ready and in the saddle for Jericho, which was to be our first day's journey. Passing over the south end of the Mount of Olives, which is nearly four thousand feet above the Jordan, our going down to Jericho began in real earnest. The road, for the greater part of the way, is very good and is kept well repaired, for many carriages go to and from Jericho during each season.

I might state here that our course was down through the land of Moab, on the east of the Jordan, where Mr. Forder has done mission work among the Arabs, having his headquarters at Kerak. His familiarity with the mountain paths and the roads over the plains of Moab, also his knowledge of the character and disposition as well the language of the Bedouins, made him a very desirable guide for our trip, and in all probability we nine Americans owe our lives to the fact that Mr. Forder was our guide on this occasion.

There are only two places of interest, on the way down to Jericho, and these of very little importance, first the "Apostles' Fountain," several hours out from Jerusalem, and the Khan Hadrur, or "Good Samaritan Inn," as it is commonly known, located about halfway to Jericho. The former place has only been known since the fifteenth century as the "Apostles' Spring,"—presuming that the apostles must have drank of the water on their journeys. The Khan, in the district referred to is quite deserted, and tradition localizes the parable of the Good Samaritan here (Luke 10: 30-37).

The party reached Jericho at an early hour, and owing to the fact that we had the privileges of a small hotel, the tents were not set up on this occasion. The ladies of the party, who acted as cooks, soon had a splendid, hot supper ready, to which justice was done, and our beds were sought long before the usual hour for retiring.

Old Jericho of Joshua's time was excavated a few years ago. Trenches were cut in every direction, laying bare the little houses. The old city wall and even the gates of the city are located,—perhaps the very wall and gates that are spoken of in Joshua 6: 26: "Cursed be the man before the Lord, that riseth up and buildeth this city Jericho: he shall lay the foundation thereof in his first-born, and in his youngest son shall he set up the gates of it." In 1 Kings 16: 34 we have the fulfillment of this prophecy, "Hiel laid the foundation in Abiram his first son, and set up the gates in Segub his youngest son." What a change has come over this old city, which, for thousands of years, has remained covered with the sands and dust of the plains of Jericho, but there is one thing which changes not, and that is Elisha's Fountain, spoken of in 2 Kings 2: 19-22, still flowing on with its healed waters, irrigating the gardens and fields of the villagers of modern Jericho.

Soon after sunrise, the next morning, we were off for the wooden bridge which spans the Jordan River. For the privilege of using the bridge we pay thirteen cents per animal. Our course was northward across the plains, to the foothills and mountains of Moab. It was our plan to leave the Medeba road, and go out of our course far enough to ascend Mt. Nebo, which we did, but to our disappointment it began to rain. Though we did succeed in reaching the summit of Nebo, or that which is believed to be the Mount,—the exact place being in doubt,—we found but little pleasure in the experience, because the mist was so heavy, and the clouds settled so low over the top of the mountain that we could see but a short distance at best, and consequently our stop was a short one. I imagine that on a clear day the view from here must be superb, and if this was Moses' place of viewing the land, he had an excellent viewpoint.

After leaving Nebo it was not long until we were out on the plains,—the real wheat fields of Moab. Here the rain ceased and we had a pleasant evening to ride into Medeba,—our stopping place the second night out. Medeba is spoken of frequently in the Bible, but I will take space only to speak of the remarkable find made here a few years ago, while excavating for a Greek church. In the excavation the workmen came upon what appeared to be a Mosaic floor, and were breaking it up, when it was discovered to be something extraordinary. It was preserved until all was uncovered, when it proved to be a map of Palestine in colors, dating back to the sixth century A. D. The thing that makes this so very important is, that the names of the places are in Greek, and settles many Bible locations that were in dispute. The River Jordan, the Dead Sea, and Jerusalem, are very prominently indicated on the map, which can be easily discerned in the accompanying cut. There is also a map of Egypt at the end of the map of Palestine.

There are three spots in the map, two in the Dead Sea and one between the sea and Jerusalem, showing where the workmen had destroyed the Mosaic before its importance was determined. The Greeks have constructed a church over the Mosaic, and guard it very carefully, it being on a level with the floor of the church, and they keep it covered with boards. It is necessary to get letters from the Patriarch, here at Jerusalem, in order to have the privilege of seeing the map.

Optimistic or Pessimistic.

BY GEO. L. STUDEBAKER.

IN looking at the future work and prospects of the Church of the Brethren, have we reasons to be encouraged, hopeful, or discouraged, blue? Sometimes we are inclined to take a pessimistic view of the church, and give vent to our feelings in public assemblies, before the outside world, and before our children.

A young sister of ten summers attended services one Lord's Day. A dark picture of the church was presented that day by the preacher. The father noticed a sad expression on her face when they returned home. Presently she said to him, "Papa, I don't believe there is much in the church. It is all going down." That father had to teach his little daughter that the church was far better than the preacher had pictured to her, and he had to remove, as much as possible, the poison which was at work in her little mind. God forbid that we should thus offend one of these little ones, which believe in Jesus.

For some time I have been giving this subject much thought and have been looking back at the work of the church some thirty or more years. A proper retrospective view of the church will not fail to cure one who is spiritually dyspeptic and blue, as to the church and her work, unless he does not care to be cured, and has spiritual hysterics.

In coming to Nappanee, Ind., where I am at this writing (Jan. 24), I had to change cars at Milford Junction. This will be remembered as the place where our Annual Conference was held in 1882. While waiting here for my train, I thought, What could we do now, with our people, at a place like this? Here are less than a score of homes at which to secure lodging, and yet, so far as I know, the people at that Conference were well cared for. Now we are locating our Conference near by or in cities where we can accommodate the very large body of people who assemble on these occasions.

Last year Northern Indiana wisely selected Winona Lake, and is credited as having had the largest gathering, by far, of any past assembly of people.

At the Conference in 1890 the missionary collection was $224.30. At Winona the collection was $16,482.95. When we take into consideration the other expenses of the church, compared with what they were thirty or more years ago, this is a remarkably bright picture.

We are building better and more convenient places of worship. In many places the church is supporting the pastor who devotes his entire time to the church work. Evangelists by the score are supported in the field.

The Home Mission work is being given attention by some forty-five organized Mission Boards. Old folks' and orphanage asylums have been and are being built and supported in several State Districts, and are a credit to the church and her work.

Nine colleges, in seven different States are under the supervision of a General Educational Board. Donations and endowments are being given for their encouragement and support.

Less than twenty years ago the church had no missionaries in foreign fields. More than thirty have been sent out and are doing a great work. Others are preparing themselves for this very worthy cause. In this we can look forward hopefully.

Less than a quarter of a century ago the Sunday-school question was discussed in our Conference pro and con. Now scarcely a congregation, if any, in the Brotherhood fails to have a Sunday-school. It is recognized by the Conference. A Sunday-school Advisory Board is appointed by the Conference. Over forty District Secretaries are at work, encouraging and promoting the Sunday-school interest. We publish our own Sunday-school literature, which is acknowledged by many, outside of our own Fraternity, as being among the best. The papers for the young people and children are excellent. We own our publishing plant, and do our own printing. Our church paper, the GOSPEL MESSENGER, is a credit to the church, and finds its way into hundreds of homes outside of our own people.

A Temperance Committee has been appointed by the Conference, and is ready to assist in this very worthy cause. We have our Christian Workers' Meetings, prayer meetings, teachers' meetings, and teacher-training classes. Are not all of these hopeful indications for the future church?

Special Bible Institutes, Ministerial and Sunday-school Meetings, along with our Educational Meetings, are held in all parts of our Brotherhood. They are great helps and make us hopeful.

It is true that some of our congregations are suffering for want of ministerial help. The Conference is at work on this great problem of a better distribution of our ministerial forces. It is bound to be solved, so let us be hopeful in this.

Some of our congregations are weaker, numerically, than years ago, but study the cause, and there is no need for one to feel blue about this. Emigration has weakened quite a few of the eastern churches. All the West, which, in many places, a few years ago, was a sandy desert, is now occupied by strong congregations of the Brethren from the Eastern States.

No, let us not be pessimistic as to anything,—especially the church. God has promised to be with us always. Let us hopefully trust him. Paul says, "Rejoice evermore. In every thing give thanks." God can only use the courageous ones. When we lose our courage God cannot use us. May our faith not waver in God!

We are now studying the mistakes of ancient Israel. May we study to our profit and to God's glory!

My Way of Collecting Data.

BY C. S. HOFF.

I NOTICE IN MESSENGER No. 4, page 58, that, under "Scientific Methods," the Editor calls for improved methods regarding the collecting of data and other material for the preparation of sermons. This subject has given me considerable trouble. Being a very busy man, as most of us are, in this age of rush and hurry, where a minister is expected to make a living for his family, lay up something for old age, give his share towards church expenses, and prepare at least two sermons a week, besides keeping himself well-informed so as to answer any question that may puzzle the others in Bible meeting or Sunday-school, I do not have the time to do a great deal of searching for material for each sermon. Now I do not say this complainingly but, as I said before, under these circumstances, the question of having material always at hand, for ready reference on any subject on which I may desire to prepare a sermon, has given me some concern, and I have been giving it some thought.

Some time ago a brother gave his method of classifying his outlines and filing them by the card file system. That is considerable help in finding old outlines on any subject, but it gives me no help in finding material that I may have in some book in my library, which, if I have read, I either have forgotten, or fail to remember where to find it.

Now, while I never repeat some other man's sermons I often find it a great help, in preparing a sermon, to read other men's articles on the subject. But the question always came up, where to find it. Finally I conceived of the following plan, which I am using with some benefit: First I go through my library and number all my books, and make a list of them in my journal, with the number corresponding to the name. I also write the number in ink on the first fly leaf of the book. Then I go through each book, and when find any thing that gives any light on any passage of scripture, I turn to that scripture in my Bible, and write, with a sharp, indelible pencil, the number of the book and the page where I find the matter in question. Example: Under Heb. 4:9 I have this: "No. 15, P. 92." Now No. 15 in my list is "Life of John Kline," and on page 92 is the gist of a sermon by Benjamin Bowman on the text referred to.

I have a number of books of sermons, and works on the scripture marked in this way. I also have all my old Sunday-school commentaries filed away, and numbered in this way. I also expect to collect the "Teachers' Monthlies," and file them away in volumes and mark them the same way. I am also planning to collect all my clippings and paste them into a scrap-book in groups, according to their subjects, and mark them.

In addition to marking my Bible, so as to know where to find any material I want, bearing on any scripture, I also mark my clippings and other material, to indicate what scripture they bear upon.

Now I do not consider this plan to be perfect, nor have I completed my markings yet, but I already find it a great help. I have some passages marked to indicate that I have the works of three or four men on that particular scripture, besides the regular commentaries and cyclopædias, which are arranged in order and do not need any marking. It takes but a moment to find all the material I have on any particular scripture I have in mind. The longer I continue this method, the larger will become my collection of books, and the greater will be my fund of information. Then, when my Bible gets old, and I get a new one, I can lay the old one up in the book-case for a reference book, and I need not mark my new one so.

Now this is my plan. If any one has a better plan or an improvement on this one, I would like to know of it.

From the General Temperance Committee.

[The following letter, directed to the members of the District Temperance Committees, is here published by request.—ED.]

"Wine is a mocker."—Be not deceived; none but sinners legalize the liquor traffic. The church alone can overthrow the saloon.

Dear Brother:—

The General Temperance Committee is addressing you, as a member of one of the District Temperance Committees of the Church of the Brethren. In answer to inquiries from all parts of the Brotherhood this same letter is being sent to all such members.

As a matter of history each one of us should search the minutes of Annual Conference for 1908 and 1909 and acquaint himself with the beginning and the foundation of the forward movement of our beloved Fraternity in the fight against the liquor traffic. In harmony with said minutes—

A General Temperance Committee will be maintained by the General Conference, to which this Committee is responsible and to which it will report. The General Committee has planned to work in harmony with the General Conference. Accordingly—

A District Temperance Committee will be maintained by each District, to which this committee is responsible and to which it will report. Moreover—

A Local Temperance Committee will be maintained by each congregation, to which it is responsible and to which it will report.

Let us remind ourselves that since we have been put to the front, in this fight against the monster evil of intemperance by our beloved Fraternity, it becomes us to quit ourselves like men and to go to work and be true to the important trust placed in our hands and care.

We desire to urge you to secure a copy of each of the Temperance Bulletins (three in number) already issued. They will be sent to you for the asking by the Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Ill. These Bulletins appear from time to time in the Missionary Visitor. Do not fail to get this excellent periodical (free to ministers for the asking) and always look for something helpful in temperance work.

As the General Committee is urging all the Districts to organize, through whose committees the General Committee will work, so each District Committee will urge every congregation to appoint or elect a Local Committee, through which committees the District Committee will work.

All members of Local Committees and all Sunday-school superintendents may also secure, without charge, the Bulletins referred to above. Urge your Committee to do so, and for reasons given above, urge each to become a regular reader of the Visitor.

It will be your duty also, as a committee (and as individuals), as far as possible, to supply and acquaint yourselves not only with the Temperance Bulletins but with all the literature recommended by the General Committee. (See notices and advertisements in Bulletins.) Urge the Local Committee to do the same and to spread this literature in a large way in their respective congregations and communities.

As the General Committee will arrange to have this great theme represented on the program at each Annual Conference, so your District Committee is urged to aim to have some phase of the temperance question presented at each and every Ministerial Meeting and District Sunday-school Convention or Bible Institute.

The goal to be reached is the elimination of the unrighteous liquor traffic by preaching the Gospel, by the conversion of souls to Christ, and by the enactment and enforcement of local option or prohibitory laws in the several States and in the Nation. It is plain to see that good results may be expected only to the extent that thorough work is planned for and carried into effect in the local congregation. It will be your duty to urge and help the Local Committee to create sentiment against this great evil. Temperance Meetings must be held within all our borders. A temperance sermon is to be preached in each churchhouse in every congregation once each year. An offering is to be called for at all District and Local Temperance Meetings, and when the annual temperance sermon is preached. All of these offerings, together with the quarterly offerings from all of our Sunday-schools, are to be sent to Eld. P. J. Blough, Treasurer, Hooversville, Pa. (See A. M. Minutes referred to above.) These offerings should be both regular and liberal, for in addition to the ordinary expenses it is the desire of the General Committee, when called upon, to arrange with any District Committee to send, without expense on their part, a temperance evangelist into their District for a series of helpful meetings. We trust that you will take pleasure in seeing that the above provisions of Annual Conference are carried into effect, and that aggressive work is being done in all parts of your District.

Important! Please consider EACH PARAGRAPH of this letter as highly important. But, desiring that all the District Committees learn at an early date of the merits of two small but excellent temperance books, we are sending a copy of each, so far as we have names and addresses, to all the secretaries of the several Districts. Let other Districts report and they will be favored likewise. The books are as follows:

1. "Prohibition, Is It Right?" See prices on cover. Send all orders to Brethren Publishing House.

2. "Winona Temperance Addresses." This book sold at first for 50c per copy. It may now be had for 20c. When ordering for our ministers, please so state, charging them, and sending us only 10c per copy. Send all orders for this book to secretary of the General Committee. The supply is limited.

As each District Committee will expect to keep in touch with their Local Committees and know what they are doing, so the General Committee earnestly desires and expects their secretary to receive a report from the secretaries of all the District Committees at least annually, on or before the first day of May. The General Committee will be pleased to hear promptly and at frequent intervals of the progress made, of the obstacles encountered and of victories won. Send, also, at any time, such suggestions as may be deemed beneficial to the General Committee.

And now, may the benediction of the love and grace and wisdom of God be upon us to the end that we shall be willing, joyful and fruitful workers in every field where he would have us labor. Let us pray each morning, "God bless me and make me a blessing today." Let us, with consecrated hearts, make a real, a united, a consecrated effort to drive from our fair land the monster evil of intemperance and thereby arrest the ruin, the wreckage and the tears that are caused by the unrighteous traffic in alcoholic liquors.

We are faithfully,

Your brethren and servants,

THE GENERAL TEMPERANCE COMMITTEE.

A Happy Medium.

BY JAMES M. NEFF.

THE subject is suggested by our present location. In the higher altitudes above us the winters are cold, with much snow and ice. In the valley below,—out, away from the hills,—it is colder in winter and warmer in summer than here, and the frequency with which the winter fogs drift in and hang there, as well as occasional high winds, make the valley climate less desirable for delicate people. Close in under the hills, in the valley below us, there is sufficient protection from frosts to make it a great orange country. The Tule River, upon which we are located, rises in the mountains above us and winds its way down among the hills into the great valley below, furnishing water for the irrigation of many of the orange groves along its course. These orange groves,—many of them snuggled in among the hills,—extend up the river as far as our location, but we are practically at the upper end of the orange district. And beginning here, and extending far up into the mountains, is the apple country, and there are loads and loads of the finest belle flowers, ramboes, wine saps, pearmains, etc., brought down these mountain roads and taken to market in the valley below. In the hot months of summer thousands of people go to the resorts, some to the higher altitudes above us, some to the coast below us, leaving us here between the hills, occupying the happy medium.

As to agricultural lands, we are not as well off here as they are in the valley below, but we are better off than they are in the steep, precipitous heights above. We have more rocks and hills than they have below, but not as many as they have above. Ours is not so good, in this respect, as the best, nor so bad as the worse, so, from this viewpoint again, we occupy "the happy medium."

And all this suggests to my mind what a fine thing it is to occupy the happy medium in our church life. Some church members are so easy-going and indifferent that they care little as to how the church work goes, or whether it goes at all. Others are so enthusiastic that they want to see everything go, go now, and go according to their own particular notions; and there are congregations where the church finds it necessary to devote so much time and effort to looking after and keeping sweet these two classes of members, that there is little left to devote to sinners. As a rule, the members that are most useful to the church and can always be counted on, are those who occupy a happy medium.

But by this I do not mean that the church's dependence is upon her lukewarm members, or that there is any particular danger of our becoming too enthusiastic in the defense of right. However, in our relation to the views and preferences of other good people, to have our zeal tempered with a humble unselfishness and respect for others, is a most beautiful grace. In the intricate and complicated relations of life it requires much wisdom always to do the best thing. You will find apple orchards on the one hand and orange groves on the other to entice you, but he who is able to maintain his position in a happy medium, between the extremes he meets in life, is usually the happy man.

"Ye Are My Witnesses."

BY A. I. MOW.

"Ye are witnesses." "He left not himself without witnesses." "Of the men therefore that have companied with us all the time, that the Lord Jesus went in and went out among us, beginning from the baptism of John, unto the day that he was received up from us, of these must one become a witness with us of his resurrection."

Do not miss the point in this,—that the witness is qualified by actual observation and contact. The church has suffered much from men presuming to testify who had not the experimental knowledge. Recruiting the ministry consists of two phases: (1) Calling; (2) Training.

This is apparent in the method pursued by the great Master. He carefully selected and appointed his twelve. Then began the training. He kept them constantly under his teaching, showing, directing. Three years of faithful study, observation and practice, not in the seclusure of college walls, nor even in the temple, but out on the field, made them what they were. They battled with the actually existing problem, and strove to solve it,—master it,—where it existed. Thus they became intensely practical, and spent little time on useless things. Christ sent them to try; let them return and report; instructed them; sent them again.

Then he sent seventy others. They followed his directions,—returned, reported. The tour was a success. He encouraged them, instructed them more. They were his ministers.

A thousand recruits are in the ranks today. They are untrained. They know it. They do not think that the abstract Holy Spirit will now use them as mills through which to grind out messages. They are asking for some one to help them prepare.

With more than thirty years of entreaty, observation, struggle and failure, I have nearly succeeded in seeing the situation. We need a course which has to do directly with our work: (1) Some systematic knowledge of the Bible. (2) Some history of religious affairs. (3) How to read and speak entertainingly. (4) How to organize and build a discourse. (5) Something of church management.

These features are provided for in the colleges and Bible schools, and many are availing themselves of these great blessings. God bless them!

But the majority of us can not go to school. I wish to make a suggestion to one class,—those who want the help they can not get under existing conditions, and who will grasp the opportunity when it presents itself.

My suggestion is that the general Brotherhood create a central ministerial college, to be conducted on the correspondence plan. This can be conducted almost without expense to the ministers. Thus they can take their lessons at home and put them into practice where their work is needed.

This plan can and should be thoroughly organized, and kept separate from existing schools. They have their work. The organization can be made in this simple way: (1) Let Annual Meeting elect a president or general superintendent, with provision for additional faculty or assistants as time and labor may demand. (2) Make each of the following committees constituent parts of the college, to serve (not saying here what I think each might do) as would seem most consistent: (a) The General Educational Board; (b) The Gish Fund Book Committee; (c) The MESSENGER Advisory Committee.

The President should have his office in the Brethren Publishing House, and space should be given him in either the MESSENGER or the Missionary Visitor to communicate the work to the students.

All parties taking the course regularly should enroll. Then they can be addressed by name or number.

This will be a permanent source of help, and can be indefinitely extended. It will reach every minister. It will be most economical. It permits the minister to stay with his family and church. He preaches right on,—each time better.

THE ROUND TABLE

The "Stars and Stripes."

BY G. E. YODER.

A POST-CARD addressed to another party was dropped into our mail box, possibly through a mistake. On it was pictured a woman, whose beauty only the artists can picture. In her hand was held our banner, the Stars and Stripes, which floated o'er her head; above which appeared the following:

"Oh, emblem that has ne'er been furled,
Oh thee no tyrant gloats.
Wave on, the one flag of the world
That still unbeaten floats."

The emblem of liberty has doubtless made a great record in some things, of which American citizens boast; but do you know that it is a fact, in the face of the above, that our glorious flag, the "Stars and Stripes," has been trampled in the mire many times more than we think? Can we say, "On thee no tyrant gloats"? Ah, that cruel tyrant, intemperance, has furled that banner for a million men, and sent them to drunkards' graves, and there are still thousands whom the tyrant is leading to the same end. "Tyrant Tobacco" has made fully as many slaves. "Tyrant Fashion" has enslaved possibly a larger number, in making their lives miserable, their bodies unhealthy, and robbed the soul of its Christian graces. Tyrant "Organized Secrecy" has not and does not hesitate to tear this banner in twain.

Ah, yes, that beautiful, pure, noble, sincere, trusting, loving expression on the face of the woman on the card seems to say: "I am under the banner of Christian liberty, which will also protect me from the evil." But listen! Do you know that there are thousands of America's beautiful women who are COMPELLED to live a life that is worse than death; the sin of which is black as hell itself, the pain and misery and disease of which is beyond our comprehension? An awful, wretched, shameful fact it is! Surely the banner of King Emmanuel should be raised against such a ghastly evil, and every Christian should face the enemy in a struggle that will cease only in a victory for the right.

These are a few of the tyrants that are ruling the lives of multitudes in America. We should praise the Lord for the Christian liberty we are enjoying in our native land, but let us PRAY the Lord for strength to dethrone the ungodly tyrants.

Memorial Anniversary of Alexander Mack.

BY J. H. MILLER.

IN reading over the articles, written by the different brethren in MESSENGER No. 7, I was much impressed. The brethren did well. I was made to wonder how a grave it so noted a man could be lost for so many years. It is strange that his own people lost track of his grave. Then, how strange it is that his Bible should have been lost for so many years, and at last was found again. It does seem that the Lord had directed these things to be so. I would much love to see the Bible from which Alexander Mack preached so faithfully for years. I well remember of hearing Eld. Henry Kurtz preach. I attended the funeral of Eld. Philip Rothenberger, and also preached his funeral. He was born in Germany, and did his preaching in the German language. I well remember of a Mack neighborhood ("Mock," as the German people called it). A brother, George Mock, told me that they were descendants of Alex. Mack, and formerly from Pennsylvania.

I am pleased to learn that Mack was not the founder of a new sect, but a reformer. Through the Dark Ages Jesus had a remnant who were faithful, and obeyed him. Jesus said unto the disciples: "Ye are the salt of the earth." That salt had not lost its savor, hence, a reformation merely was needed to bring the Christian back to his former love with God. In the days of Noah it took eight persons to save the world; so it took eight persons in these latter days to save the church and put her on her feet to worship the God of heaven, in Mack's day. A reformation was necessary in Joshua's day, and later on in the days of Samuel and Elijah. John the Baptist was a forerunner. Jesus was a Savior to save his people. I would suggest that the articles written in the GOSPEL MESSENGER be collected, and as many more as would be of interest, and then printed in pamphlet form, so that we could place them in our libraries, to be kept for all time to come.

Written and Unwritten Law.

BY JAS. A. SELL.

IT is an oft-repeated saying that if we live up to nature's laws we will grow healthy and strong, or that, if we violate nature's laws, we must suffer the penalty. But it so happens that nature's laws are not written, and they seem to be so intricate and obscure, that those who undertake to interpret them differ widely in their interpretations. We are left in doubt as to whether we are obeying or disobeying, and we are suffering pains and penalties right along. If obedience to physical law would keep us always well, and prolong our days, it would seem as if there was a lack somewhere, in not having the laws written.

But how about spiritual law? Man has a spiritual nature, as well as a physical, and his highest and sweetest enjoyments and interests are depending upon his obedience to its laws. And here he is not left to grope in darkness and uncertainty, for the laws are written. Many, however, are not concerned as to the demands of spiritual law, and are not anxious to obey when they do know. But the dignity and authority of the law will be vindicated somewhere, sometime.

"There is no respect of persons with God." "As many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by law; for not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified."

A Test for an Angel.

BY GEO. F. CHEMBERLEN.

YOUNG ladies, attention, please! I have been young, but I never was a lady. Just why this was, I don't know. But I do know if there is anything I had rather be than myself, it would be to be a lady,—a real comely expression of what God meant by womanhood.

However, I know something of the perplexities you encounter. Here is one of them: You have a very near friend who is not a member of the church. He likes you pretty well. Your modest manners are pleasing to him, but he does not like your prayer veil. Sometimes he openly objects to it. Do you know what I would do if I were you?

Well, sometime when he called I would get my Bible and sit down close,—comfortably close,—to him, and then, with the best intonation I could command, I would read to him a part of the eleventh chapter of First Corinthians. And then I would turn to him, and putting my finger close,—uncomfortably close,—to his nose, I would say: "You object to my veil. My Savior asks me to wear it because of the angels. Now I have tested you out well and I know that you are no angel, or you wouldn't ask me not to wear it."

Unless he possessed more "brass" than I ever had he will wilt.

How Many Apostles?

BY R. A. REDMAN.

IN GOSPEL MESSENGER of Feb. 4 it is stated that Matthias was not an apostle. I find in Acts 1:26 that he was numbered with the eleven apostles, and in Acts 2:14 I find Peter "standing up with the eleven"; hence, I conclude that Matthias was one of the twelve who received the Holy Spirit baptism at Pentecost. I find further in 1 Cor. 15:5-8 that Paul recognized Matthias as one of the twelve apostles. It was further stated "that if we acknowledge Matthias to be an apostle, wisdom and consistency would require us to accept the doctrine of the perpetuation of the twelve apostles in the church." I do not think so.

One-Third Right: Two-Thirds Wrong.

BY W. ANNON.

MORE than forty years ago there was a discussion between two preachers of different persuasions on what it takes to constitute Christian baptism. One was a pedobaptist, the other a Baptist. They discussed the question for three days. At the end of the third day they were about to conclude the discussion,—the Baptist having made it very warm for his opponent. The argument was strongly on his side. Thereupon his pedobaptist friend said, in his closing remarks: "If there are any Tunkers here, they have my opponent for sure, for the apostolic mode of baptism was trine immersion, and I have the books here to prove it. If I were an immersionist, that is what I would be." The Baptist, in his reply, said: "If that be the case, then I am one-third right, while my opponent is two-thirds wrong."

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' TOPIC

Fruits Crowning Long Preparation.

Gen. 41: 1-16.

For Sunday Evening, March 12, 1911.

I. Joseph As an Interpreter.—(1) (a) Pharaoh dreams (V. 1); (b) The dreams (Vs. 2-8); (c) Joseph is called out of prison (Vs. 9-13); (d) He interprets; (e) The interpretation (Vs. 25-37).

II. Joseph Is Delivered and Exalted.—(Vs. 38-46).

III. Joseph's Great Work.—(Vs. 46-49). (1) His statesmanship (a) Saved the people from destruction by famine. (b) It extended the influence and foreign trade of Egypt. (c) It consolidated the state into a nation. (2) We see here (a) not a contradiction of Christ's command, "Take no thought [anxiety] for the morrow," but an illustration of it; (b) To worry about the future is one thing; to provide for it is another; (c) The surest way not to worry about the future is to provide for it; and the surest way not to provide for it is to worry about it.

IV. Joseph's Success.—This consisted not in horses and chariots, and in royal robe, but—(1) In his fitness to serve God and man. (2) In his helping so many people. "Thou shalt be a blessing" (Gen. 12: 2). (3) In proclaiming the true God to an idolatrous people (Matt. 5: 16; 1 Peter 2: 12). (4) In the blessing brought upon his father's family (Ex. 20: 12; Lev. 19: 32; 1 Peter 5: 5). (5) In the honor and position which came to him (Prov. 22: 29).

Note.—To us, the years in which we are living are those of plenty,—of abundance of spiritual instruction. But the years of dearth will come. Blessed is the man who makes use of the present opportunities—who now lays up for himself a treasure in heaven.

PRAYER MEETING

In the World,—Not of It.

1 John 2: 15-17.

For Week Beginning March 12, 1911.

1. The Unworldly Life is Fortified Against Unholy Alliances.—The greatest heroes of earth are those who gain victories in the moral world over sin and temptation on the battle-fields of their own hearts, and over the wrong and crime which are destroying their country. They have resisted the three-fold temptation of the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life. They live in a strong tower of resistance (2 Peter 1: 8-11).

2. The Unworldly Life Places God's Honor First.—None of the Bible heroes sought honor for themselves. As 'pilgrims and strangers" they passed through this world, doing all things to the honor and glory of God (Heb. 11: 13-16).

3. The Unworldly Life Is a Power for Good, Both Social and Civil.—Large visions of noble and uplifting attainments can not originate in worldly and sensual souls. There must be the broad outlook and the far sweep of the world field, that can be attained only by the fully consecrated soul, not contaminated by the world's allurements (1 Tim. 4: 16).

4. The Unworldly Life Is One of Unsullied Beauty of Character.—Abstaining from all that savors of the lusts and desires peculiar to the world, brings out a character of heavenly beauty. As we look at the life of an Elijah, a Daniel, a Paul, we see the splendor of a fully-devoted life. Such a character,—much like that of the Master,—unconsciously attracts (2 Cor. 3: 18).

5. The Unworldly Life Is Crowned with Heaven's Approval and Final Acceptance.—Abraham was called the "Father of the Faithful" because he willingly turned away from the world's pleasures to serve the Lord loyally and unflinchingly. A glorious life will result in a glorious reward (Rev. 2: 10).

HOME AND FAMILY

My Evening Prayer.

If I have wounded any soul today,
If I have caused one foot to go astray,
If I have walked in my own willful way—
Good Lord, forgive.

If I have uttered idle words or vain,
If I have turned aside from want or pain,
Lest I myself should suffer through the strain—
Good Lord, forgive.

If I have craved for joys that are not mine,
If I have let my wayward heart repine,
Dwelling on things of earth, not things divine—
Good Lord, forgive.

If I have been perverse, or hard, or cold,
If I have longed for shelter in thy fold
When Thou hast given me some part to hold—
Good Lord, forgive.

Forgive the sins I have confessed to Thee,
Forgive the secret sins I do not see,
That which I knew not, Father, teach Thou me—
Amen.

They Shall Inherit the Earth.

BY ELIZABETH D. ROSENBERGER.

"That Miss Callahan's got no more spirit than a lamb. The way she puts up with things jest about riles me. What's the use of a woman jest takin' everything and never speakin' her piece I'd like to know?"

And looking at Mrs. Johnson who had for years spoken her mind on all subjects,—those of general as well as special interest, some of which she understood and others which were as the Rubaiyat,—it was a question worth looking into. Why should Mrs. Callahan, living in a house full of people, some of whom were uncongenial, slave and work from one year to another, and yet keep so aggressively cheerful all the while? It was this radiant cheeriness of spirit that riled Mrs. Johnson. "La, no, you'd never git Miss Callahan to complain; she's like a lamb with coyotes howling around her!" which statement must be accepted as a figure of speech. Mrs. Johnson found it hard to see any silver lining to her dark clouds and Mrs. Callahan scarcely ever discovered any clouds. Strange, wasn't it? Both were regular church attendants at the same church. But Mrs. Callahan always spoke of the help she received from the sermons, while Mrs. Johnson usually was worked up over something that had not gone right,—some part of the service was usually a failure, in her estimation.

But why continue this comparison? If there is one text in the sermon on the mount especially designed for the home and home people it is "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." This is the logic of love, and the art of it can be learned. Much trouble in homes is born of empty and vacant minds. People often quarrel for variety of emotion. If they had something worthy to think about and do, they would not be so likely to quarrel. Many misunderstandings arise because we do not really understand each other. And if we would understand the others, we must be humble and meek; we must acknowledge that our own view of life is not comprehensive and we cannot measure others by their conformity to our own standards. Our horizon line is not necessarily the limit of vision for our sister. When we are meek enough to admit this, we have gained an insight into the affairs of our fellows; we have come to that place where there will be no quarrel,—only mutual understanding and sympathy. But so long as we set up our own judgment as supreme, and are unwilling to look at things from the standpoint of the other party, we shall not agree, and it is likely we shall do more harm than good in talking things over. Meekness, gentleness, tenderness,—are we in danger of overlooking these quiet, modest virtues in the daily struggle for supremacy?

A mother of ability has many things to consider in her daily work. She should have the hide of a rhinoceros, mentally speaking, of course; then the sharp arrows of fault-finding will glance off without causing any family disturbance. She should have the patience of Job, and then the noise and shortcomings of the children will not make her irritable and angry. It is a great thing, when difference of opinion arises in the family, if the ideas of each one can be fairly discussed without temper or personal bias. When this is the case, the difference will result in closer union of heart and purpose. But when one or other of the family becomes sullen and refuses to listen to reason, he may get his own way but he is the injured party thereby. The habit of winning one's own way by a display of temper is soon acquired and hardly forgotten; it makes for a permanent defect in character.

And yet, "Blessed are the meek," is not a popular text in these days. Everywhere young people are taught and assured that self-assertion is the key to success. And boys and girls are ready to battle for their rights, and argue that what they have is their own without compromise.. They want their rights. Do they get them by this method? Yes, but they get no more. No one likes to give the "cloak" also, after being worried and badgered into giving the "coat." We recall an instance of one family in which most of the children held stoutly to the idea that by demanding their rights they could get up a rapid speed limit on the highway to success. Abner was the one exception; he remained at home, when the other children went to college. He kept on farming when the others all went to the city or other places, to make their fortunes. He cared for father and mother, and often sent money to help the struggling ones who were away. And the outcome of it all was that he prospered and enjoyed more real happiness than any of the others. He had the largest bank account in after years, and the others, who had experienced some qualms of conscience on account of their deserting Abner and leaving him with the old place, whether he wanted to remain or not, were puzzled over his luck. You have all seen the one who insists upon his rights. As a rule he gets what he fights for, and not an iota more. He rouses a spirit of antagonism and dislike which gravitates against him, and people give him only his claim,—not even an inch is allowed him for good measure.

But how about the meek who do not say anything about their rights? Are they left to suffer? Very seldom. Jesus said, "They shall inherit the earth," and his promise is sure. We naturally give to the unselfish, who are clamoring for their own; we gladly give them all we can.

"Blessed are the meek" who do not take things by force, for they shall have peace. The one who insists upon his claims, and resists those who oppose him, has a disagreeable task. Tolstoi taught that resistance always breeds more resistance, force always breeds more force; each side insists on the last stroke. And, think a moment, has it not been the martyrs who would not resist their tormentors, who have left us this glorious heritage of religious liberty? Jesus might have called upon legions of angels to rescue him from the mob; or he might have taken the sword of Peter and hewed his way out of the garden, but we would have had no Christianity. Live in this text for awhile, "Blessed are the meek," and put more time into seeing that others are happy; it is the short cut to getting more than you ever dreamed of possessing.

SISTERS' AID SOCIETIES

MYERSDALE, PA.—Our Sisters' Mission Circle met the last Saturday in December and reorganized for the coming year. The following officers were elected: Sister Sue E. Just, president; Sister Mollie Opel, vice-president; Sister Ida Fike, secretary-treasurer. During the year we had eleven meetings. We have twenty active members, with an average attendance of eight. The total amount of cash sales received for the year aggregates $164.18; money paid out, $151.25. We had eight members enrolled at our organization; present number enrolled, twenty-seven; held thirty meetings, with an average attendance of twelve; finished five comforts, one quilt and sixty-three aprons. We paid out for material and sewing machine, $12.36; amount received for work done, $33.15; collections and donations received, $18.97, leaving a total of $40.12. Less amount paid out, this leaves a balance in the treasury of $6.94.—Emma Saylor, Treasurer, Raisin, Cal., Feb. 22.

HUNTINGTON, IND.—Our Sisters' Aid Society met Feb. 16. The following officers were elected: Sister Priebley, president; Sister Bailey and Tuttle, vice-presidents; Sister Powerhaugh, superintendent; the writer, secretary-treasurer. During the year we held twenty-three meetings, with an average attendance of eight. ENGLISH PRAIRIE, IND.—Our Aid Society met the first Wednesday in January and elected officers for 1911. Sister Pearl Adler was re-elected president; Sister Mary Rowe, secretary; Sister Addie Adley, treasurer. During the year 1910 twenty-five members were enrolled, with an average attendance of about twenty-three. Fourteen meetings were held during the year. We met wherever called, the first Wednesday in each month, to do all kinds of sewing. We had on hand, at the end of 1909, $12.91; money received during the year, $41.48; money paid out, $43.36; money on hand at the end of the year, $19.58. We hope that these meetings may be the means of lifting some one to a higher life, and that we, as members, may do more for the great cause.—Mrs. Samuel Carper, Peru, Ind., Feb. 16.

WOODLAND, MICH.—Our Aid Society closed another year's work Dec. 31. During the year twelve meetings were held, with an average attendance of fifteen. The time was spent in quilting nine quilts, knotting eleven comforts, piecing quilts, sewing carpet rags and making other needful articles. The amount of money in the treasury at the beginning of the year 1910 was $4.43; received by new dues, donations and for work done, $54.33; paid out for mission work and church furnishings, $53.76; paid for carpet rags, $1.00, leaving a balance of $4.00 in the treasury. The officers for the year are as follows: Sister Ella Bocker, president; Sister Ella Townsend, secretary; Sister Gertrude England, treasurer; Sister Mary Fisher, superintendent.—Martha Smith, Woodland, Mich., Feb. 17.

BALTIMORE, MD.—During the year ending Dec. 31, 1910, the Sisters' Aid Society of the Woodberry church held forty-five meetings, with an average attendance of five. Our officers for the year 1911 are as follows: Sister Maudella Eaton, president; Sister Martha Hoff, treasurer; Sister Ella Eaton, secretary. Our work consisted principally of making aprons, bonnets, dust caps, piecing and quilting quilts, etc. We received, including the amount on hand from 1909, $16.78. We also received boxes of clothing from Mill Creek, Va., Pipe Creek, Md., and Sams Creek Md. Sisters M. Roop, J. Hoop and Mrs. Bowers, of New Windsor, Md., also sent us a box of clothing. We appreciate any clothing sent to us, as it is a great help to us. We donated $1.50 toward paying the church debt; $3 to the Washington church, toward establishing a Sunday-school room; and $15.60 to the poor. We also donated many articles of clothing to the poor. The amount in the treasury at present is $12.21.—Bertha E. Hafer, Secretary, Upper Heights, Baltimore, Md., Feb. 13.

EAST THORNAPPLE, MICH.—Our Aid Society met Jan. 28, and reorganized for the year 1911, with Sister Cora Neff as president; Sister Rosabelle Smith, vice-president; Sister Ora Mote, secretary-treasurer. During the year 1910 we held fourteen meetings, with an average attendance of fourteen. Our total collections were $37.28; amount received for things sold, $13.50; amount from 1909, $1.23; making a total of $53.43; expenses, $28.83. Amount in the treasury for 1911 is $24.70. During the year we received eighty-five and one-half pounds of carpet rags, quilted six quilts, tied seven comforters, made 175 garments, and did some piecing besides. Clothing and money were sent as follows: One box of clothing to the Kansas City Mission, valued at $13.25; one box of clothing to the Northern Mission in Chicago, valued at $18; one box of clothing and provisions to Mrs. Baker, Temple, Texas, valued at $10; one clothing basket of provisions sent to Bro. George Culler and wife, for the Mission in Grand Rapids, valued at $4; total, $45.25. We now have fifty-seven members enrolled.—Mabel E. Neff, R. D. 43, Clarksville, Mich., Feb. 15.

CERRO GORDO, ILL.—Our society met in regular session Jan. 5. We elected officers for a year. Sister Cora Shively is president; Sister Rosie Wickelhaus, vice-president; Sister Alice Wallick, treasurer; the writer, secretary. We also have three standing committees, visiting, buying and looking committees. Sister Lizzie Henricks and Sister Alice Wallick are the buying committee; Sisters Martha Lear, Mary Christner and Emma Petersen, visiting committee; Sisters Emma Bonnebaugh, Alice Hoffacre, Emma Peterson and Ellen Heckman, soliciting committee. We are planning to support an orphan and a native worker, in India, this year. During the year 1910 we held thirty-one meetings, with an average attendance of eight. The total amount of collections taken at the regular sessions amounted to $9.42; extra donations, $1.41; for work done and articles sold, $20.25; total receipts, $32.21; expenditures for the year, $26.21. We made seventy-three yards of carpet, eight comforts and quilted three quilts. We sent to the Chicago Rescue Mission $25; for the support of an orphan in India, $10; sent new clothing to St. Joseph Mission in Missouri, valued at $23.45; clothing sent to the Hustings Street Mission, valued at $58.35; clothing and money sent to the Ogden Mission in Chicago, valued at $36.65; total amount of donations, $154.45; total value of articles in treasury, 27 cents.—Nettie Leedy, Cerro Gordo, Ill., Feb. 2.

LEAMERSVILLE, PA.—The Sisters' Mission Band of this place met Jan. 7, and reorganized for 1911. The election of officers for the ensuing year was as follows: Sister Sarah Sell, president; Sister Florence Bechtel, vice-president; Sister Barbara Benton, superintendent; Sister Anna Benton, secretary; Sister Pearl Bell, assistant secretary; Sister Sarah Sell, treasurer. We also have an advisory committee, consisting of six sisters. During the past year twenty-eight members were enrolled, with an average attendance of eight. Our work consisted of making bonnets, aprons, comforts, cushions, etc., and sending boxes to the Mission Home, and in thankfulness to our Lord for health, strength and the blessed privilege of meeting with his children, we conduct a devotional service at these meetings, consisting of Scripture reading and prayer. We furnished our new meetinghouse with pews, chairs, carpet, pulpit, lamps, etc. Money received during the year 1910 for dues and goods sold amounted to $58.35; paid out for goods for the use of the band, $34.94. At present there is $40.74 in the treasury. We hope to do more for other causes in the Lord's vineyard in the future. The interest seems even greater since we are blessed with a comfortable, convenient place in which to conduct the work. May our dear sisters everywhere be inspired to do more and better service for the cause of our blessed Master.—Florina Snowberger, East Freedom, Pa., Feb. 18.

ARTICLES intended for the Easter issue should be on our desk by April 1.

On page 132 the Temperance Committee has something to say that should interest all of our readers.

BRO. SAMUEL EDGECOMB wishes us to announce the change of his address from Eva, Okla., to Kerman, Cal.

BRO. C. W. GUTHRIE, of Chicago, has recovered sufficiently to be about some. He was in our services last Sunday morning.

BRO. J. EDSON ULERY held revival services at Buck Creek, Ind., and thirteen were added to the church by confession and baptism.

BRO. C. D. BONSACK is now with us in evangelistic work. He began last Sunday morning and is doing some excellent preaching.

WE are receiving some good outlines of Mack Memorial addresses delivered Feb. 19. Later we may publish a few of these outlines.

BRO. EZRA FLORY still continues his meetings at Lanark. Five have signified their purpose to accept Christ and live a consecrated life.

THE revival in the White church, Colfax, Ind., conducted by Bro. Michael Flory, resulted in ten persons putting on Christ in baptism. One was restored to fellowship.

MAY 3 is the date announced for the District Meeting of Southern Pennsylvania, to be held at the Black Rock house in the Upper Codorus congregation. The elders will meet and organize the day before.

BRO. J. L. MAHON delivered twenty-five gospel addresses at the Vernon house, Somerset congregation, Ind., and seven persons accepted Christ, were baptized and added to the church. One returned to the fold.

THE Brethren in Eastern Maryland will hold their District Meeting in the Grossnickle house, Middletown Valley congregation April 18. The elders and delegates are requested to meet the day previous at 2 P. M.

BRETHREN William Reed and H. M. Griffith did some good evangelistic work at Brummetts Creek, N. C., in January. Fourteen confessed Christ and were baptized, while one awaits the rite. Two were restored to fellowship.

BRO. J. HENRY SHOWALTER, of West Milton, Ohio, is at Elgin this week, working on the new song book. The other two members of the Song Book Committee are Bro. I. B. Trout and Galen B. Royer, with Bro. Trout as Chairman.

BRO. HENRY TROUP, a faithful minister of the Indian Creek church, Iowa, died at his home, near Maxwell, Feb. 14. He was born in Welland County, Canada, but spent the active part of his life in the bounds of the congregation that called him to the work in which he so faithfully continued to the end of his days. He had not yet reached the seventy-second year of his earthly pilgrimage when called from labor to reward.

BRO. WILLIAM LAMPIN is still at work in Southern California. When last heard from, he was engaged in a series of meetings in Lordsburg.

BRO. D. K. CLAPPER, of Meyersdale, Pa., R. D. 1, says that in connection with his pastoral work, this year, he can also do some evangelistic work. Those interested should communicate with him at an early date.

THE District Meeting of Northwestern Ohio, to be held in the Silver Creek church, near Pioneer, Williams Co., is announced for April 21. The elders' meeting, as well as the Missionary Meeting, will be held the day before.

THE District Meeting for Southern California and Arizona is to convene in the Covina church, March 23, and the Ministerial Meeting the day before. The elders are instructed to meet in the afternoon of March 21, at the same place.

LOOKING over the Minutes of the late District Conference of Texas and Louisiana, we fail to find mention of even one query that was before the meeting for consideration. The time was taken up in making reports and considering matters pertaining to mission and Sunday-school work.

BRO. CHAS. W. EISENBISE, who left Jerusalem Jan. 30, reached New York Feb. 20. From Bremen he experienced a rough sea voyage, and is glad for a return to his native land. He says that his trip through the Bible lands was attended with many hardships, and yet it was a profitable one. During March he may be addressed at Morrill, Kans.

BRO. O. L. SHAW closed his splendid revival work at Mount Morris last Sunday evening. There were fourteen baptized, and one is to be baptized later. Bro. Shaw is said to be not only a spiritual preacher, but he is a close, logical reasoner, and those coming to the church under his preaching, will come because they are converted as well as convicted.

FOR the information of those going South, we are asked to call attention to the fact, that there is an organized church in Manvel, Tex., with Bro. M. H. Peters as pastor, and that regular services are held each Lord's Day. Manvel, located on the G. C. & S. T. Railroad, is twenty miles south of Houston and thirty-six miles northwest of Galveston.

BRO. M. W. EMMERT, Dean of the Bible Department, Mount Morris College, has published a diagram of Paul's letter to the Galatians, with some introductory and explanatory notes. The diagram is a simple one and should prove helpful to the Bible student who wishes a better understanding of what Paul meant to teach in the letter under consideration.

WE have a good letter from Bro. D. F. Eby East Akron, Ohio, who Feb. 13 passed the eighty-third milestone of his earthly pilgrimage. While he feels well, hears well, and has good eyesight, he is quite feeble in body and moves around with difficulty. He realizes that he is not to remain here much longer. There were some good times in Lanark, Ill., thirty years ago, when Bro. Eby, assisted by several other fine singers, used to lead the song services. On one occasion Bro. D. P. Saylor, after listening to one of their best songs, made a little sensation, by speaking right out in meeting, and saying in his characteristic way: "Brethren, that was well done."

SISTER BLANCHE LENTZ, who has been in editorial charge of the Inglenook for several years, has closed her connection with that journal and gone to Lafayette, Ohio, to look after her aged father. We all regretted to have Sister Lentz leave us. She had been in the House a number of years, was looked upon as an efficient worker in a number of departments, and regarded as one of our most valuable and faithful church and Sunday-school workers. We certainly would have been pleased to have her remain, but she felt that it was her duty, as a Christian woman, to give her father the care and attention that he needs and craves in his old age. We trust that her sojourn in Ohio will prove pleasant, and that our readers may have the pleasure of hearing from her occasionally.

BRO. STEPHEN A. WALKER, of Tiffin, Ohio, passed from earthly scenes Feb. 8, at the advanced age of eighty-five years. He was a faithful, active and able minister of the Gospel, and devoted many years of his long life to the Lord's work. He stood well in his State, as well as in the Brotherhood, and frequently represented his District on the Standing Committee.

THE Business Department is asking us to say that the third edition of "Our Saturday Night" is now exhausted, and that the fourth edition is in the hands of our printers, and it may be a few weeks before the orders that are accumulating can be filled. In the meantime those desiring a copy will do well to place their orders at an early date. The mere fact that four editions of the book have to be published, before it is six months old, shows how the work is being received by the public.

WE are in receipt of the Minutes of the District Meeting of Western Colorado and Utah, and notice the following paper for the Annual Meeting:

"Since all that the holy kiss stands for is expressed at the time of feet-washing, and since we have neither precept nor example in the Scriptures for observing it between the supper and the communion; therefore, we ask the Annual Meeting, through District Meeting, to grant the privilege of omitting the salutation between the supper and the communion, when it can be done in union and harmony. Passed to Annual Meeting."

ONCE a year our agent at Batavia, Ill., Bro. S. E. Netzley, comes to the House to settle up accounts. It is his rule to call on every family of members in his congregation and have them renew their subscription for the MESSENGER. Then he goes among those not members, and receives fully as many more subscriptions. So we can always count on twice as many papers at Batavia as there are families of members. If we had this kind of an agent in every congregation, the MESSENGER list would soon be doubled.

WE have received notice of the death of Sister Elizabeth Bonebrake Oller, widow of Bro. Jacob F. Oller of Waynesboro, widely and favorably known in the Brotherhood. Sister Oller passed away on Sunday, Feb. 19, after an illness of some months. Four years ago she became totally blind, but never lost her sweet and loving Christian disposition. She was in the world to make others happy, and, so far as her influence extended, she left the world a good deal better than she found it. Hers was a most charming home, and she will long be remembered as an ideal homemaker.

BRO. D. B. GIBSON, of Girard, Ill., writes us occasionally. In his late letter he tells us that he has been permitted to spend seventy-five years in his earthly pilgrimage, that he has been preaching for forty-two years, and thirty-four years of this time have been spent in the eldership. We presume he has preached in fully one-third of the churches in Illinois, to say nothing of the churches served in other States, and has baptized about 1,200 persons. He has done much traveling and preaching, wholly at his own expense, but the most active period of his life has closed. While he still does considerable preaching in his own community, he can not travel and preach as he used to when he was a younger and stronger man.

ON account of his failing health, Bro. J. T. Myers, of Philadelphia, has found it necessary to resign pastoral charge of the Geiger Memorial church, at Twenty-sixth Street and Lehigh Avenue. He will be succeeded by Bro. A. J. Culler, who begins work Sept. 1. Bro. Myers has been engaged in church work in the City of Brotherly Love for about thirty years, and it is to be exceedingly regretted that he must at this time retire from active pulpit labors. He has no special plans for the future, aside from looking after the churches that he, as elder, still has in charge, and resting for one year on a little farm that he owns, not far from Philadelphia. He thinks that after a rest of twelve months he ought to be able for ten more years' work in the Master's vineyard. He also has a desire to do some traveling in the Brotherhood, there being many churches that he would be pleased to visit before going hence.

Bro. William Lehman, of Pontiac, Ill., called at the office, some days ago, and supplied himself with a large number of tracts for distribution in his city. He is no minister, but he is a most earnest believer in the principles of the Brethren church, and has taught his neighbors to respect these principles, and the people that accept them. He is sowing much good seed in his part of the State.

Not long since a well-meaning brother, whose feelings had become wonderfully stirred, said that he did not see how he could work with Bro. B——, and then proceeded to give his reasons. He was told that if he would proceed according to 1 Cor. 13 he would experience very little difficulty in working with Bro. B——, or any other member of the household of faith. This was a new idea to him, and now he proposes to try 1 Cor. 13, instead of Matt. 18, on the brother with whom he has been having strained relations.

On the back of his letter paper, Bro. C. S. Hoff, of Oakley, Kans., has a very complete outline of the faith and practice of the Brethren church. Such an outline will enable a stranger to get a very good idea of the principles for which we, as a people, stand. In a letter to us Bro. Hoff says that he is delighted with the Mack Memorial issue. It enables him to understand, better than ever before, what a noble Christian man Alexander Mack was, and what a wonderful work he did in helping to organize a church, that, from the start, contained all of the New Testament institutions.

Serving on Standing Committees.

We invite special attention to the following, passed by the Annual Meeting of 1910:

6. Since Art. 2, 1907, Page 15, "Classified Minutes" (Appendix) has failed to provide sufficient funds to meet expenses of committees appointed by Annual Meeting, thus embarrassing the Annual Meeting Treasurer, and members of such committees, will not this Annual Meeting, through the appointment of a committee, provide such funds as are necessary, and submit their report at a later session at this meeting?

The Report as Adopted.

1. The Annual Meeting Treasurer in connection with his Annual Report shall publish:

(a) The estimated amount needed for the ensuing year's expenses.

(b) The apportionment by Districts based on the most reliable membership basis at his command.

2. The respective Districts shall apportion the amount to the congregations as the District deems best and shall require of each delegate the payment of the apportionment for his congregation before he can sit as delegate of District Meeting, unless a satisfactory explanation be given.

3. A delegate to Standing Committee can not serve if his District is delinquent unless he gives a satisfactory explanation to the Standing Committee for its delinquency.

While the decision applies to delegates of District Meetings, as well as to members of the Standing Committee, we wish to notice section third only as it relates to elders representing State Districts.

It will be observed that it is made the duty of the Annual Meeting Treasurer to publish, in connection with his Annual Report, the estimated amount of money needed for the ensuing year's expenses, with an apportionment by Districts, based on the membership basis. It will be further observed that an elder can not serve on the Standing Committee if his District is delinquent. Since the decision went into effect as soon as the Minutes were printed, it will be understood that the Standing Committee of 1911 will have to be tested by the rule adopted.

This simply means that the elders of delinquent Districts can not be accepted on the Standing Committee unless they give a satisfactory explanation to the Committee itself. Just what should constitute a satisfactory explanation is a problem with which we shall not attempt to deal just now. We should naturally suppose, however, that if a District should refuse to pay up her quota, after being apprised of the decision, as published above, that the representative from that District would not be entitled to a seat on the Standing Committee.

We also state that if the Districts do not pay up any better this year than they did last year, there will be a very small Committee, indeed, to pass on the explanations of the elders representing delinquent Districts. In fact, there were not a half dozen Districts that could have represented, under this ruling, at the Winona Conference. The satisfactory explanation may have a good deal to do with the enforcing of the rule for the first year, but, candidly, we ought not to have occasion to explain away an Annual Meeting decision.

In order to make their seat on the Standing Committee sure, we would advise each member of that body to see to it that his District is not reported delinquent. Bro. C. M. Wenger, 1207 Miami Street, South Bend, Ind., is Treasurer, and the right kind of a check from the respective Treasurer of each District will enable him to balance his accounts, so as to insure a full representation on the Standing Committee, and wholly obviate the necessity of any explanation.

Putting the Emphasis at the Right Place.

In Two Parts.—Part Two.

In Part One we saw, to some extent, upon what commandments and teachings Jesus placed special emphasis. Now let us look, for a moment, at some of the sins upon which special emphasis is laid.

Again it is to be observed that they, like the commandments, are not classified under an established scale. Some sins are mentioned as being greater than other sins, while in other cases a number of sins are grouped together as a class of gross sins. As sins are thus grouped together, the inference is that they are equally, or nearly equally, evil in the sight of God.

One sin,—the sin against the Holy Ghost,—is in a class by itself. It is the sin for which no pardon is to be found in this world or in the world to come. All other sins are pardonable on condition of penitence that leads to the new life. But the condition of penitence, which makes all other sins pardonable, is impossible in the case of sin against the Holy Ghost; for when the sinner rejects the Spirit, with blasphemy, the Spirit ceases to strive further, the influence that brings penitence is withdrawn, and there is nothing to disturb further the peace of the sinner. In this case repentance is impossible and sin unpardonable. The sinner is left to himself, and to his awful doom. Special emphasis, therefore, is laid on the sin of stifling the influence of the Spirit.

May we not reason that the violation of the first commandment is the greatest of all sins? Sin against the Holy Ghost is unpardonable, not because it overreaches the power of grace to forgive sin, but because it renders the sinner impenitent, the only condition, so far as the sinner is concerned, upon which sin is forgiven. Not to love God is to break the greatest commandment in the world. Is not the gravity of sin measured by the law it violates? If the greatest law in the world is violated, is not that violation the greatest sin in the world? Who will say Nay? This sin strikes dead the highest condition of the heart, and it at once becomes the fruitful source of all other sins. If a man turns incendiary, a burglar, a whoremonger, a murderer, or, for that matter, sins against the Holy Ghost, it is, fundamentally speaking, because he loves not God. He has broken the greatest commandment in the world, and is now tuned and primed for any other outrage against God and man. And so special emphasis is laid on this sin by teaching that man's first and greatest duty is to love God.

The most comprehensive group of sins, as the works of the flesh, is in Gal. 5: 19-21. They are these: Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like. It is then added that they that do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God.

Notice, the aim here is to give some of the works of the flesh. A long list is given, but not all, for the list is closed by saying, "And such like." Then it is broadly stated that they that do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Simply naming these things, "and such like," as the works of the flesh, and without instructing the church, in this connection, to impose certain penalties upon such evildoers, it is presumed that these sins are placed under sufficient condemnation by the law that forbids such transgressors an inheritance in the kingdom of God.

In 1 Cor. 5: 11 the conditions are different. The class of sins is less general, the sins the grossest, and special instruction is given the church in such cases. It reads this way: "But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such an one no not to eat."

Of the six sins named, fornication is declared to be different from every other sin. "Every sin that a man doeth is without the body; but he that committeth fornication sinneth against his own body" (1 Cor. 6: 18). And covetousness is declared to be idolatry (Col. 3: 5). But these six sins are coördinate in the text, each standing in the same relation to the penalty named. The church was commanded not to keep company, nor to eat, with a member of the church guilty of fornication, or covetousness, or idolatry, or railing, or drunkenness, or extortion. Not that the individual must be guilty of all these; any one is sufficient ground. Notice, the parts are connected by "or," not "and." This looks severe, but so the Lord places the emphasis of judgment upon impenitent sin.

Our church fathers understood "not to eat" in this passage as applying to the common meal, and not to the Lord's table only. And those guilty were held in avoidance. This meant not only excommunication; it meant not to keep company and not to eat at the common meal with such. Upon this passage the avoidance act was based. (See Revised Minutes of Annual Meeting, pages 29-31.)

Further citations might be made with profit, showing how sin is emphasized, if space were at hand.

We emphasize sin, too, but we have our way of doing it. We condemn others severely for things of which we feel free. For instance, one who has no pride in dress, but has much pride in his home and business success, condemns another who has pride in dress. He does not consider that he is as guilty as the one he condemns, for pride is pride wherever found; it is a sin, to be condemned in all things. The covetous man, like the scribes and Pharisees, is most insistent on things ritualistic and formal, while he himself is an idolater, guilty of the greatest crime against God. It is often the case that the covetous and extortioner are the first to raise their voice against minor offenses, while they themselves are fit subjects not only for expulsion, but to be put out of the company of the saints and to be barred from their tables. They crush their hirelings, they oppress the poor, they devour the homes of widows and orphans, they even lie to the assessor when giving in their property for taxation under affirmation but they do insist that the traditions of the fathers must be kept. Garnished and whited sepulchres are they, in which are stifled the wail of the oppressed. Hypocrites are they, professing a form of Godliness, but denying the power thereof.

The day of judgment will reveal it. It is high time we are opening our eyes. Sin is sin, and let it be condemned. But let us not wink at the big sins, and spend our time in condemning the smaller ones merely. Let us learn to get the emphasis at the right place. And, moreover, let us learn a little consistency. First of all, let the leaders be clean. Then things will go better.

Glimpses of Travel.

As you go farther out, you come to a straggling forest of pine, palmetto, sand ledges, and lakes. Occasionally you see a hut, surrounded by a garden plot, containing some vegetables, an old shift of a sable and, perhaps, a chicken pen. In these homes are found the poor "whites." We are told they know but little about modern civilization, and what is going on and being done in the outside world, many of them being unable to read or write. They have no literature and, of course, no Bibles and no religion, so that country life in this Southland, as we dream of it, has no existence.

Some effort is now being made to better the condition of these people through mission effort. And if they can succeed in getting education, the Bible and religion in, and whiskey and drunkenness out, they will very soon hear of and accept the new South with all that it means.

Still further south we have the Everglades where dwells now, by choice, a tribe of the Seminole Indians. These people were gradually driven in among these lakes and swamps, through the greed of what are known down here as the "northern land-sharks." But the Government, years ago, we are told, took the matter in hand, and by contract gave these Indians certain rights which gave them possession of the Glade land, and now it can not be taken from them. This they have lately learned, and they are now standing up for their rights. This is especially true since large corporations are making efforts to drain extensive portions of the swamp lands, thus adapting it to cultivation, and then offering it to northern "tenderfeet" for farms and city sites at fabulous prices. Hereby they may get rich and grow fat, providing Mr. Indian does not come along and say: "You get out of this. This land belongs to me, and you can not have it until you get it from me."

It seems all right that these vast wastes of lakes and swamps should be converted into gardens, orange groves, towns and cities. But it is all wrong to rob these poor Indians of all the possessions they now have, without making reasonable provisions for their present and future good. The whiskey trusts are supplying them with the vile stuff that further demoralizes and curses them. Why should not the church of Jesus Christ exceed in zeal these inhuman extortioners, by sending to the Indians the Gospel of salvation, and thus raise them up to a standard that will make of them fellow-citizens in Christ Jesus, and thus prepare them to share in the blessings that modern improvements may be able to do for their country? Modern progress and the Christian church have a large and open field in this beautiful Southland, and we hope that it may soon be more fully occupied than it now is. But more of this later on.

But you may ask: What about these southern resorts and those who go there? As to the places there are quite a number, all claiming special advantages. All, no doubt, have some of these advantages, but no southern State has more of them than Florida, because of the very excellent, warm and healthful climate during the winter months. Jacksonville, St. Augustine, Gainesville, Orlando, Tampa, and St. Petersburg are among the most notable towns and cities, known as winter resorts for northern people. And in any of them, no doubt, will be found pleasant homes for those who have the time, disposition and money to escape the rigors of the northern winters. St. Petersburg being surrounded by water on three sides, and favored with a continual sea breeze, claims to have advantages that no others have for those who are suffering from the infirmities of old age, throat troubles and indigestion. The climate is exceedingly mild and the breezes soft and life-giving. It makes you feel like opening your mouth and pumping your lungs full of—well, of life-giving and life-sustaining air. To the aged ones the place is especially enjoyable, and of this class the city seems to be filled.

And this brings us to our next thought: What kind and class of people do we find here? First, they are, as a rule, past the middle age, up to the quite aged ones. It has never been our privilege to be in a city of so many aged people. On the streets, in the churches, and wherever people congregate, hoary heads seem to hold the fort. And, as a result, quietness, courtesy, peace and good will are in evidence. Of course, with the aged ones often come the sons, daughters, and grandchildren,—just enough of the young life to give cheer, jovialty and freshness. The tourists are not especially of the rich class, neither are they of the poor, but of such as are well-to-do, who have accumulated enough of this world's goods to retire from the active duties and cares of life,—at least for a season. Thus they can afford to enjoy some of the comforts that the good Lord has vouchsafed, even in this life, to those who, by hard labor, Christian economy and honest dealings have been able to lay aside the necessary means to sustain them when they are no more able to provide for themselves the necessaries of life.

It is a place for physical rest and upbuilding, even in old age. Such men as Eld. Andrew Spanogle, who is in his eighty-eighth year, find new vigor and fresher blood by spending a few months each year in this warm, sea-breezy and health-giving city. At our boarding place we meet, each day, an aged minister and his wife who have, respectively, reached their eighty-seventh and eighty-second year marks. And we are sure, from what we have seen, that there are many here who have passed their fourscore year period. We feel quite sure that it is better for the aged, the infirm and the generally indisposed to come to this or other southern winter resorts, and feed on this life-giving air, than to try to build themselves up, and lengthen their days, by swallowing daily doses of the largely-advertised nostrums, patent medicines, etc. God's pure air is the best medicine that the world has to give.

Annual Meeting Queries.

In the list of the Annual Meeting queries, published a few weeks ago, the one for Oklahoma, Panhandle of Texas and New Mexico was unintentionally omitted. Very few of the District Meeting Minutes, coming to our desk, have the papers intended for Annual Conference marked, and while we keep a careful lookout for Conference papers, still there is a possibility of overlooking some of them. Should there be others that have escaped our notice, we shall be pleased to have them pointed out. Below will be found the omitted paper:

Oklahoma, Pan Handle of Texas and New Mexico.

The Paradise Prairie church asks District Meeting of Oklahoma, Panhandle of Texas and New Mexico, of 1910, to request Annual Meeting of 1911 to reconsider Article 3 of 1910 (Saving Homeless Children), and in its place substitute the following plan:

1. Let Annual Meeting appoint a Board of Directors, composed of three Brethren who are interested and have had experience in saving homeless children.

2. This Board shall draw up articles of incorporation and shall take out a charter. They shall also frame a constitution and by-laws to govern the general child-saving work of the Brotherhood.

3. This Board shall be empowered to secure a medium of reaching the people, at least once a month, to encourage the saving of homeless children. Districts which have not already done so, shall be urged to take up the work.

4. The method of caring for these children shall be the one which Annual Meeting authorized in 1812, and has endorsed time and again since then, namely, placing them into carefully-selected families.

5. Districts which have already established Orphans' Homes are to be encouraged to place normal children into good families, thus gradually changing their institution into a receiving home.

6. Said Board to serve three years, except the ones first appointed, who shall serve one one year, one two years and one three years.

Answer: This District Meeting so requests, and sends this to Annual Meeting of 1911.

Exempted From Military Duty.

In answer to those who wish to know whether members of the Church of the Brethren are exempt from military duty, in case of war, we state that in an "Act to Promote the Efficiency of the Military," passed by Congress, and approved Jan. 21, 1903, will be found the following exemption clause:

Sec. 2.—That the Vice-President of the United States, the officers, judicial and executive, of the Government of the United States, the members and officers of each House of Congress, regular in the military or naval service of the United States, all custom-house officers, with their clerks, postmasters and persons employed by the United States in the transmission of the mail, ferrymen employed at any ferry on a post road, artificers and workmen employed in the armories and arsenals of the United States, pilots, mariners actually employed in the sea service of any citizen or merchant within the United States, and all persons who are exempted by the laws of the respective States or Territories shall be exempted from militia duty, without regard to age: Provided that nothing in this Act shall be construed to require or compel any member of any well-recognized religious sect or organization, at present organized and existing, whose creed forbids its members to participate in war in any form, and whose religious convictions are against war or participation therein, in accordance with the creed of said religious organization, to serve in the militia or any other armed or volunteer force under the jurisdiction and authority of the United States.

This act exempts from military services members of the Brethren church, and other well-recognized religious sects or organizations opposed to war at the time the bill was passed. It was very kind in the Government to make such favorable provisions in behalf of nonresistant people, and since we have thus been favored we should show our appreciation by our law-abiding conduct.

Producing Laughter.

We hear of a preacher who goes from one church to another delivering lectures just to make people laugh. It takes him only a few minutes to turn any house of prayer into a house of mirth. He has many things to say about laughter, some of them sensible, and some of them foolish. His idea is to make sunshine, but it is well to remember that "all sunshine makes the desert." The man who spends all his time, in the pulpit and out of it, producing laughter, may belong to a church, may have "Rev." attached to his name, but he does not impress people as having the Spirit of Christ. He may fill the meetinghouse with a jolly, laughing crowd, but he converts no one, and makes it only the more difficult for the spiritually-minded evangelist to accomplish anything in the communities where the laughing preacher has lectured. Laughter is all right in its place. We may possibly need more of it, but, candidly, the house of God, set apart for prayer, should not be turned over to a so-called preacher who is engaged in laughter making as a business. Devout men and women can let their light shine best by absenting themselves from such performances.

Advancing Ministers.

Some of the churches are very slow about advancing preachers to the second degree of the ministry. They will permit faithful, earnest and efficient men to engage in preaching the Gospel for years without taking any steps with a view of enlarging their scope of usefulness. In fact, some excellent ministers have been permitted to gain quite a reputation in evangelistic work before they were advanced. A policy of this kind is not right. It is not fair. Neither is it good for the cause the preacher represents, or the preacher himself. As soon as a minister shows by the life he lives, and his manner of preaching that he has the ability to preach the Word, and can be trusted with the Lord's work, he should be moved up, whether he has been in the ministry for years or not. Some men demonstrate their fitness to preach the Gospel in less than a year, while for others it may require a longer period. But in no instance should the Lord's work be hindered by holding one of his faithful and efficient servants back.

Not Willing to Retire.

This thing of some energetic ministers refusing to be entered on the retired list simply because they have been so fortunate as to keep in good health, and five to a good age, reminds us of what Peter Cartwright said when his people proposed to place him, in his old days, on the superannuated list, with support. He said that when he commenced preaching he made a contract with the devil,—to the effect that, whenever the devil would quit, he would, and that he proposed to live up to his part of the contract. We do not know how many of our aged ministers are a party to this kind of a contract, but we do know that some of them have no notion of closing their labors as long as there are sinners to be saved.

Winona Temperance Addresses.

The General Temperance Committee has secured all the remaining copies of the last issue of the book containing addresses from thirteen of the world's greatest temperance speakers. These addresses were delivered at a great temperance convention at Winona Lake, Ind. The book was made to sell at 50 cents, and many paid that price. The committee will fill orders for this valuable book for 20 cents each. Ministers may secure it for 10 cents. Send all orders to W. M. Howe, 1012 Bedford Street, Johnstown, Pa.

FINE WORK.

There is some splendid work being done by the District Temperance Committee in Middle Iowa. Our brother, Dr. S. B. Miller, Chairman of the Committee, proposes during the year to visit every congregation and speak in every meetinghouse in the District in the interest of temperance. The committee have had five hundred booklets ("At the Mercy of the State") sent free of charge to every home in the District. Let the Committees from other Districts report what they are doing. W. M. JASONVILLE, INDIANA.

Bro. L. T. Holsinger, of Rossville, Ind., commenced a series of meetings for us Jan. 30, 1911, and continued until Feb. 2. Owing to illness he was not able to preach for us any more until Feb. 13, but was compelled to close the meetings on the same night on account of a serious throat trouble. He had intended to hold the meetings for about three weeks. We trust the good words spoken did much good, even though the services were soon stopped. They started many persons to thinking of their eternal welfare. Bro. Holsinger is so well able to preach and defend the Gospel that we were very anxious to continue the meeting, but the Good Lord knows what is best for us. Our dear brother made an heroic sacrifice for us while he was here. He is working so hard in the promotion of the Lord's kingdom everywhere, that he should be loyally supported and defended everywhere.

Jasonville, Ind., Feb. 20. Stella Harris.

HUNTINGTON, INDIANA.

Bro. D. C. Flory, of Waynesboro, Va., arrived in our town, Jan. 21, and the next day commenced a series of revival meetings. The meetings were held in the Huntington City Mission. While there were only few additions, yet the members were greatly encouraged, as Bro. Flory was filled with the Word, and gave it to the people with power. Many were almost persuaded. On the afternoon of the 12th, just before Bro. Flory delivered his last sermon, a brother, seventy years of age, was led to the pool where baptism was administered. Both saint and sinner wept for joy to see the old grandfather made happy. One young brother, eleven years old, and two sisters twelve years old (all Sunday-school scholars), were also immersed. One brother, about thirty-five years of age, came forward but has not been baptized yet.

The gospel seed was sown in its purity, and we believe it will come forth in due season. We ask an interest in the prayers of the entire Brotherhood, as we are a band of only 115 members in a city of 13,000 souls. Many of the citizens are good people, but careless and unconcerned, —lovers of pleasure and the world.

Bro. Flory was with us three weeks, and preached twenty-six sermons. His wife was with us two weeks. Both left for their home on Monday, Feb. 13. John B. Bailey.

DENVER, COLORADO.

Feb. 10 ends our first three months' work in the Denver Mission, which has been very pleasant. Many times have we feasted together spiritually, at the Lord's table. During these three months I have preached fifty-two sermons, attended twenty Sunday-school sessions, twenty-five prayer meetings, sixteen Christian Workers' Meetings, and conducted sixty-eight prayer services in the various homes and in sickrooms. Three have been baptized, one reclaimed, and seven have been received by letter. I attended one love feast, one council meeting, and anointed four.

There has been much sickness this winter, it being an exceptionally open winter, causing much la grippe and pneumonia. All are now convalescent. Sister Ella Shrove and Bro. H. White, who have been lingering near death's door for some time, are much improved, and are able to sit up some.

Our Sunday-schools at the church and at the West Side Mission are progressing nicely under the leadership of Brethren C. C. Rust and Swallows, respectively.

On Sunday the mission band on the West Side was organized, with Sisters Lena Wolf and Emery as presidents. This little band has an average attendance, at Sunday-school, of about thirty-five. They give a missionary program each first Sunday of the month, at which time they also take up a collection to help defray the expenses of needy ones, etc.

We have prayer meetings every Thursday evening. We are now studying the Book of Revelation. Bro. S. P. Berkebile is our instructor, and all who attend are getting much good from the study.

Last, but not least, we must not forget to mention our Christian Workers' Band. Our young people have become alive to their present opportunities in this auxiliary to the church. Its interests and attendance are growing, and the time allotted to the work, each Sunday evening, is too short. The session must be brought to a close before we are through with the lesson assigned. Let us help the young members more, for they are the church of tomorrow!

UNION CHURCH, INDIANA.

Last evening closed a very successful singing class at the church, conducted by Sister Cora M. Staley, of Nappanee, Ind. The one commendable feature of the two weeks' work was that every scholar was regular in attendance from start to finish. Sister Staley is a fine instructor, and takes great interest in the young and timid beginners. In the midst of our class the Sunday-school convention was held at the church also, and in the evening of the same day the graduating exercises of the teacher-training class, consisting of ten graduates, took place. Bro. Otho Winger, of North Manchester College, Ind., gave the class address, which was filled with inspiration from the beginning. On this occasion Sister Staley did good service in preparing special songs. The following Sunday Bro. Winger preached for us again. As a whole, we have had two weeks of very profitable and instructive service together. Yesterday, after the Sunday-school, one decided to live for Christ and was baptized.

Plymouth, Ind., Feb. 20. A. Laura Appleman.

BRIDGEWATER, VIRGINIA.

Our congregation met in council Feb. 11, with Eld. H. G. Miller as moderator. Eld. A. S. Thomas was with us and opened the meeting. Considerable business came before the meeting. Four letters of membership were received since our last report, and eleven more were granted. A committee was appointed from our congregation to work with a committee from the Cook's Creek congregation, in building a new churchhouse in the West Virginia mission field, which belongs jointly to the two congregations. W. H. Zigler has been secured to work for three months during the summer at a West Virginia mission point, belonging jointly to the Bridgewater and Beaver Creek congregations." An iron fence is to be placed around the cemetery as soon as the weather permits. Owing to the unfavorable weather in December, our series of meetings was deferred until next August. Eld. D. C. Flory will conduct the meetings for us at that time. Bro. M. A. Good, of our congregation, and O. S. Miller, representing the Sunday-school, delegates to the State Anti-Saloon League, to be held in Newport News, Va. One paper was sent to the District Meeting. Our love feast will be held May 6, 1911, at 4 P. M. Ida Frey.

Bridgewater, Va., Feb. 14.

GUTHRIE, OKLAHOMA.

The District Mission Board met in regular session, in the meetinghouse of the Guthrie congregation, Feb. 11, at 1: 30 P. M. On account of a train wreck, one member of the Board did not get there in time for the meeting. Much business came before the Board, but was disposed of in a Christlike spirit.

Bro. J. C. Nininger reported good success in the Guthrie Mission, and with the Sunday-schools of the District. The congregations at Clovis, New Mexico, reported the work as prospering since the Board located Bro. C. H. Brown and family there. The call from Prairie Lake congregation, to locate a minister there, was considered, but the Board found that they were not financially able to do so. They referred the request to Bro. J. L. Teeter, McWillie, Okla., to visit them twice each month and give them three meetings each trip. This can be done at a small expense, and will be continued until the next District Meeting, if it is satisfactory to the congregation.

The call from the Miami congregation, Texas, was considered; but we can not respond to their request, as we do not have the money. The call from the Mount Hope congregation, to send some one to conduct a series of meetings, was agreed to on condition that they help to a certain extent. The call from J. H. Cox, for help to hold a series of meetings in the Stillwater congregation, this spring, was granted. A call from isolated points in the Canadian country, on the north, the Board will put a young man there during a part of the summer season, if proper arrangements can be made.

Plans were arranged to keep our District Sunday-school Secretary very busy during the remainder of the year. We are very sorry that Eld. S. Edgecomb moved to California, and can no longer serve the Board as Foreman, which he has done faithfully for a number of years. Bro. J. R. Pitzer, Cordell, Okla., was selected by the Board in Bro. Edgecomb's place, as a member of the Board, until the next District Meeting. Bro. J. H. Cox was elected Foreman of the Board until the next District Meeting.

Since there are nearly all new members on the Board, they decided to retain the writer as a member and clerk of the Board until the next District Meeting. Hence, all business intended for the Board should be sent to the writer, who will take the same interest in the work he always has. May the Lord bless the work, is our prayer!

A FAITHFUL WORKER.

I wish to say something regarding the work of our dear Brother Sell, of Fredonia, Kansas. While he is at the age of seventy, he is still very active in the work of his Master. During the last year he organized a Sunday-school, here in Altoona, and besides his work at home he preaches four sermons in Alteona each month; also two each month at the Kelley schoolhouse, three and one-half miles west of Altoona. In the summer, when the weather was favorable, he filled another appointment at the Clark schoolhouse, twice a month. Besides these regular appointments he held a series of meetings, here in Altoona, and during the year baptized eight precious souls. He has just closed a series of meetings at the Kelley schoolhouse with good interest, and at present has another call for meetings at another schoolhouse. For all this work he receives but very little pay in a financial way, but he is happy in the work of the Master.

INTEMPERANCE AND SOME OF ITS EVILS.

The word "intemperance" is one full of meaning for every man, woman and child. How sad to think that but few homes are free from the use of intoxicating drinks, in some of its evil forms! It is true, some say that a drink or two never hurts any one, but was it not the first glass that started every drunkard toward a drunkard's grave? While it is true that some men can take a social glass and never think of being overcome, others never stop after the first drink until they have lost all control of mind and body.

Could I but draw the picture of a man going home, overcome by liquor, it would be a scene of sorrow. The thoughts of such a picture would cause mothers to weep bitter tears, were they to see a husband or son come home in his drunken condition.

Intemperance not only destroys health and happiness, but inflicts ruin upon the innocent and helpless, for it invades the family and social circle, and spreads woe and sorrow all around. It destroys down youth in all its vigor, manhood in its strength, and old age in its weakness. It bereaves the doting mother, extinguishes natural affections, erases conjugal love, blots out filial attachments, blights parental hopes, brings down mourning age in sorrow to the grave. It produces weakness, not strength; sickness, not health; death, not life.

Drunkenness makes wives widows, children orphans, fathers friendless, and all at last beggars. It covers the land with idleness, poverty, misery, crimes and vices. It crowds the penitentiaries, and furnishes the victims for the scaffold. It is the life blood of the gambler, the prop of the highwayman. It countenances the liar and respects the thief. It violates obligations, reverences fraud, hates love, scorns virtue, and slanders innocent children. It helps the husband to kill his wife, and aids the child to grind the parricidal ax. It burns man, consumes woman, detests life, curses God, and despises heaven. It lowers the legislator and dishonors the statesman. It brings shame, not honor; despair, not hope; misery, not happiness.

Intemperance kills peace, ruins morals, blights confidence, slays reputations, and wrecks immortal honor. It curses the world, and laughs at the ruin it has inflicted upon the human race.

I know a young man,—a noble youth,—from whose heart flowed a loving fount of pure and holy feelings, which spread joy all around and cheered all with whom he came in contact, while warm and generous hearts crowded about him in happiness. The eyes of women brightened at his approach, and wealth and honor smiled to welcome him into their circle.

His days sped on, and, like the sparkle of a rippling brook, his life moved joyously onward. Woman's love and manhood's eulogy sung his praises.

He wooed and won a being of perfect charms, fair, delicate and pure. She bestowed her heart's young love upon him. As time rolled on, clouds arose to dim the pathway of his happiness. The love of intoxicants crept into his heart. The pure and holy feelings that God had implanted in his soul became polluted by the influence of the fatal social cup. The warm and generous aspirations of his soul became frozen and callous within him. The tears of the wretched, afflicted wife found no response within his bosom. The pure fount of universal love within his heart, that once gushed forth at the moanings of misery, was now poisoned by the defiling cup. The rank weeds of intemperance had choked out the noble aspirations of his soul.

Soon the dark shades of poverty hovered over his habitation. The burning hand of disease dimmed the brightness of his eyes. The friends, who had basked in the sunshine of his prosperity, fled when the wintry winds of adversity howled around him, and death hovered close.

Pause, gentle reader. Go to the quiet cemetery and ask who rests there. Here you find the mouldering remains of a drunkard,—one who possessed a heart overflowing with the rich blessings of human kindness. Here is one whose boyhood was hallowed by high and noble aspirations, the hours of whose manhood were unclouded by care and unstained by crime. He first saw the smile of joy sparkling in the social glass. He did not see, however, the demon of destruction lurking at the bottom of the goblet. With eager hand he raised the poison glass to his lips and he was ruined.

Liquor blights the noblest energies of the soul. It wrecks and withers forever the happiness of the domestic fireside. It makes man a drone in the busy hive of society, and a source of unhappiness to all around him. It transforms a gifted man into a brute, and causes him to forfeit the affections of a loving wife,—one whom God has made inseparable from himself, and who should look up to him for support, comfort and protection. It causes him to disregard the kind admonitions of a merciful Savior.

How many earthly Edens have been made desolate by liquor! How many starved and naked orphans have been cast upon the cold charity of an unfriendly world! How many graves have been filled with confiding and broken-hearted wives! What sad wrecks have been made of men of brilliant talents and splendid genius!

Would to God there was one universal rally for temperance to which all mankind would respond! The cause of Christ would be advanced, and broken-hearted wives would shout praises to heaven for the success of the temperance cause. The lost would be reclaimed and bleeding hearts healed!

Of all foes of the working class intemperance is the deadliest. Nothing has done more to keep down the workers, to destroy their self-respect, to rob them of their just influence in the community, and to render profitless the means of improvements within their reach. They should, therefore, oppose the drink evil in every way, as they regard their honor, and as they value their place in society.

The most degraded and the most wretched of human beings, is the man who has so long been a slave to liquor that he curses it, and yet clings to it; that he pursues it because he feels an evil spirit driving him on toward it; but, reaching it, knows that it will gnaw his heart and make him roll himself in the dust with anguish and despair, and yet he says, "One glass more and I am done."

"YE ARE MY WITNESSES."

We already have a fine start in the library of the Gish Fund books. The little additional expense to the "House" can, perhaps, be met as an incidental expense. You see that, with the exception of the president, we can put together the things we already have, and which are paid for, and realize the exact thing we want,—a practical "Ministerial College."

This way will be as near the Lord's way as the church can come. It has in it safety, uniformity and power. The Lord is in it.

My dear brethren, this is but a condensed outline of the suggestion. Think over it! Pray for it! God will bless it.

An Experience with a Typewriter.

BY C. ALBERT HOFFMAN.

ONE key of the typewriter had been so badly bent that it could not be used, nor would it permit others near it to work. I bent it back, so that the other keys worked all right, but I could not get the misplaced one properly in place. It went this way for some time. Of course it could not be used. It was the colon that was out of order. Whenever I wanted to use it, I had to take my pen and make one. Finally I concluded it ought to be put into its proper place, so I took it to a workman who, I thought, could adjust it. It required much tedious labor to accomplish it. Only a little could be done at a time. It was necessary to try it and see what next should be done. This took both time and patience. It was also necessary to exercise care for fear of breaking it. Finally it was gotten into line the same as the others. This brought a feeling of satisfaction and joy to the workman. Somehow we are always made to feel good after we have accomplished some tedious or difficult task. How joyous the feeling of that student who succeeds in solving the problem that has been baffling him!

I wonder if our lives are not like that one key on the typewriter. Sin causes them to be out of line with God. He determines to make use of us in his kingdom. He reaches down in mercy and bends us so that we are no longer a hindrance to those who are striving to serve him, but we also serve him. Oh, how much bending it sometimes takes! How often we must be tried and put to some hard tests before all of our pet notions and fancies are done away with, and God's will becomes ours. But praise the Lord, he does have the power, and really does take us out of the hands of Satan, and establishes us and guards us from the evil one. Does it cause joy in heaven to have a soul made fit for service in saving souls on earth and, after this life is over, to be fitted to praise the Lord of lords in heaven forever and ever? Surely it does, even as it caused joy to the workman when he had gotten the typewriter key back into line.

On the High Sea.

BY AUGUST BECK.

SOME thirty-nine years ago an American ship, Daniel Barnes by name, left New York harbor for the East Indian Islands. She carried a large and strangely mixed crew. The countries represented were Finland, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Holland, Portugal, Ireland, England and America. Some of them were old salts, whose whole life had been divided between the sailor's boarding house, the saloon and the ocean. All they had was the clothes they wore; all they looked forward to, after each finished trip, was the rum bottle. Our captain's name was Stover. He had reached the age of seventy-two, but, having always been a strict temperance man, he looked but sixty. He intended this to be his last voyage and had taken his wife and little child, Maria, with him. (Mrs. Stover was his second wife.)

Both the captain and his wife were earnest Christians, who had resolved to do what they could towards converting the sailors; therefore, on the first fine day, the spacious room in the after-cabin was prepared for a meeting. Mrs. Stover sat down at the organ, Moody and Sankey's hymn books were distributed on the seats, and I, being the cabin boy, was sent forward to invite all and everyone to come. Only four out of the twenty went down. "We are going just for the fun of the thing," they said, as they departed under a shower of hooting from the rest. So our first meeting was held. Mrs. Stover sang and played, the Captain read one of Moody's sermons, spoke a few earnest words about life in general, showed how foolish it was to waste and destroy our mind and body in riotous living, how utterly dissatisfied we, through such living, become with ourselves and the world in general. He showed how our conscience tells us we are doing wrong, but still we lack moral strength to throw off the yoke of sin, so we live on, sinning and hardening our hearts against all good feelings, getting daily more depraved, more bitter and more miserable until the pitiful state of our inner self and our wrecked body has stamped its mark on our conscience to such a degree that people who see us turn and shudder.

"How much better, boys," the Captain continued, "to live right, to abstain from all that which destroys mind and body, to be kind and upright to all. If we do this, we will reap the reward even in this world, and we will become contented, healthy and well thought of by everybody."

The four sailors, as they returned to their comrades, had no funny tales to relate. They had heard words of good common sense, spoken by a man who undoubtedly knew what he was talking about, and who meant them well.

At the next meeting several others came down, and so it went on until the greater part of the crew had resolved to live a different life. Among these was an old Portuguese, Francis by name. One day, when at the prayer meeting, it was his turn to give testimony. Captain Stover asked, "And, now, Francis, what have you got to say for yourself?" Old Francis could not speak English very well, but, looking up with a happy smile, he replied, "I am so happy; everything comes so easy to my mind."

One day a Russian Fin and a young Englishman stood "laying plaiting" at the main mast. The former had become a Christian, but the latter only made fun of religion. To tease the Russian Fin, the young fellow said, "I should like to get the address to hell. Please let me have it." "You should not speak that way; you may get punished for it," warned the Fin, but the thoughtless youth only laughed. A few minutes later the bell rang for dinner. The weather being fine, both watches messed together, so all but the wheelsman and the young Englishman had left the deck. The latter had been ordered by the mate up on the foreyard to fix a loose block.

Suddenly the wheelman heard a splash. He looked up and saw the foreyard empty. "A man overboard!" sounded the dreadful cry. In an instant every one was on deck. The ship put back and a boat was lowered, but, although the four sailors in the boat rowed all over for a quarter of an hour, nothing was ever seen of the unhappy man. Very likely he was torn to pieces and eaten by the sharks as soon as he struck the water.

In the meanwhile Mrs. Stover stood on the after deck, peering out towards the boat, which was half a mile astern. "Oh, Lord save that man, save that man," she cried, wringing her hands, while little Maria clung to her dress and wept bitterly. Finally the boat returned, and we took up our course with sad hearts. This incident left a deep impression on all, but especially on the unconverted. Not five minutes after asking for the address to hell, this unhappy man disappeared forever. Whither had he gone? Where was his soul?

He Is Ever Near.

BY OMA KARN.

"Lord, behold he whom thou lovest is sick."

WHAT deep emotion must have moved the tender, compassionate heart of our Savior, when this message was received from the anxious sisters at Bethany. From the great mountain altar, to which he had climbed in order to be alone with his Father, with what anxious concern he must have looked down upon the laboring disciples as they were being tossed here and there upon tempestuous Galilee. In that critical time, when the bloody sword of the headsman was hanging over Peter's head, with what solicitude his watchful eye must have hovered over the faithful apostle as he lay there, bound and guarded, in the dungeon of the Roman prison.

How strange and unexplainable this apparent indifference on the part of One to whom they had looked for help, must have seemed! How faith must have struggled with reason, as time passed and still he came not! How often that pitiful, faithless question, Why? must have knocked for admittance at the door of their minds. In trouble, in danger, in prison, and still the Lord delays his coming.

Like experiences come into the life of every child of his. Times when we stand face to face with the great sorrow of bereavement; when, day after day, we toil in pain and perplexity upon some troubled sea of life; when we lie bound and helpless by circumstances over which we can exercise no control. In these dark hours, what comfort and strength is found in the knowledge that this same tender, watchful, compassionate love, is keeping guard over us. At the proper moment he appeared and the sorrowing sisters found that their brief loss was but the introduction to great joy.

In the extremity of their danger, the terror-stricken disciples see him approaching upon the stormy waves, and the forces of nature are made to obey his mighty power. Ere the morning of execution has dawned the angel is sent speeding to Peter's cell, and the great apostle goes forth a free man. He caused them to pass through some hard and perplexing experiences, but they were experiences that ended gloriously. God has a purpose in every dark and unexplainable hour through which we are called to pass. Each one brings to us some new knowledge of our Lord. "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee," is his promise. Things may look dark, and he may seem to be far away from us but

"He is ever near
Never, never fear."

Christ is never nearer than during these troubled hours. At the right moment he will appear to fulfill his inviolable promise.

Notes From Our Correspondents

As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country

ARKANSAS.

Black Fish.—Bro. T. L. Woodiel came to this place Feb. 18 and preached two soul-cheering sermons. We were very much pleased to hear his sermons, as he is an earnest minister. This was the first preaching we had at Black Fish. We would be glad to have Bro. Woodiel preach for us a year, as the people here need help very much.—A. A. Hobbs, Widener, Ark., Feb. 24.

Ellis Chapel.—Bro. Lee Woodard began preaching at this place the first of last year and, with a few exceptions, preached once a month during the year. He also gave us a week's meeting in September. The people of this community are favorably impressed with Bro. Woodard's efforts, and I am sure much good has been accomplished by his being among us. Since presenting the doctrine of the Brethren, he has put many to searching their Bibles.—Mrs. Bell Ellis, Hamlin, Ark., Feb. 22.

CALIFORNIA.

Chico.—We were much pleased and encouraged at the unexpected visit of Bro. W. H. Pullen, of Oregon, and Bro. A. F. Fillmore, of Oklahoma. Bro. Pullen preached for us one morning and evening, and his discourses were much appreciated. The first of the week they looked over our part of the country, and concluded that it is a good place for the Brethren to locate. Bro. Pullen says he is sure they would make no mistake in coming here. Bro. Forney has the benefit of the meeting with the exception of furnishing them, and we will soon be using the large room for services. We are always glad to welcome any of the Brethren, and would be more than glad to have them stay with us as we are much in need of workers, especially in the Sunday-school work.—Bertha G. Miller, Chico, Cal., Feb. 19.

Long Beach.—We certainly have good reasons for rejoicing because of the many spiritual feasts we have enjoyed this winter. A number of brethren have broken unto us the Bread of Life, first Bro. J. B. Shively, of Lanark, Ill. (who is living here temporarily), gave us two excellent sermons. We have quite a number of members here who wish to enjoy our winter climate, hence are all anxious to help in in our church work. While some are locating among us, we certainly feel the need of more consecrated workers in the Master's cause. We have an excellent winter, with an abundance of rain. We have a beautiful nature spot here, and the tourists have visited our growing city than during any previous year. We hope and pray that many more of our members may locate here permanently.—J. M. Snively, Long Beach, Cal., Feb. 19.

COLORADO.

First Grand Valley.—Bro. A. C. Root and wife began revival services in the church Feb. 5. Good, growing good interest. The crowds are large. Brother and Sister Root are able and earnest workers. Prayer service is held each afternoon in the homes of the members. Much good and much good may be accomplished.—D. M. Click, Grand Junction, Colo., Feb. 22.

FLORIDA.

Zephyrhill.—Today our Sunday-school numbered ninety-two, and the collection was $3. Our deacon, Bro. Art Rosenberger, from Glade, Pa., who located at Zephyrhill, is taking a very active part in Sunday-school work, and is fearless in proclaiming the doctrine, as understood by the Brethren. We are very much pleased with our new location, and the climate is the very best. There are not so many insects here as further south. We have a people here who are from all parts of the Union, and many are the requests for some of our preachers to come and hold some meetings. The Colony Company is ready to give us a church site as soon as we are ready to use it. I find a number of people here who have heard the Brethren preach years ago, and we hold me in the Sunday-school class that to hear one of our brethren preach would be like a message from home. If we can not some good, representative preacher of the Brethren church come down to help feed these precious people? It is a wonderful how those old gray-headed people attend and take part in the Sunday-school. As we come in contact with these frontier places, we wonder why our people are so slow to try to gather in these unfortunate people.—Isaac Cripe, Zephyrhill, Fla., Feb. 22.

ILLINOIS.

Corro Gordo.—We just closed a very interesting and instructive series of meetings. On the evening of Feb. 1 Bro. Salem Berry, of Colorado, came to us and preached each evening until Feb. 20. The attendance was good, considering the out were very good. As a result of these efforts four were baptized, and the church encouraged and built up in the Master's cause.—Iva M. Heckman, Corro Gordo, Ill., Feb. 23.

Polo reports that it is quarrying coal, and that it is well with our elder, Bro. John Heckman, presiding. Some special business came before the meeting. We decided to hold our love feast Saturday evening, May 13, at 6 P. M. Next series of membership were granted. We elected our Christian Workers' officers and Bro. J. F. "World-wide" missionary solicitor.—Martha Gilbert, Polo, Ill., Feb. 23.

INDIANA.

Buck Creek.—With the assistance of Bro. J. Edson Ulery, of Onekama, Mich., we began a series of meetings at this place Feb. 5. The meetings continued until the 19th. We much regretted to see the meetings close at this time as much interest was shown, and the meetings were well attended, although the weather was very bad. The church received an encouragement to the saints, and a strong warning to sinners, as we have those who are afraid to obey the Lord. Thirteen were received by baptism. All of them are Sunday-school scholars. Our Sunday-school is growing in interest and attendance.—Phebe E. Teeter, R. D. 2, Mooreland, Ind., Feb. 22.

Camden.—Our church met in council Feb. 18. Our elder, Bro. D. M. Byerly, presided. Bro. H. L. Hatcher, of Portland, Ind., was with us and assisted in the meeting. Three letters of membership were granted. Bro. Byerly was chosen as our elder for two years. Brethren John Taylor and Miller were elected to the deacon's office. Bro. D. M. Byerly was elected delegate to the District Meeting, with Bro. Will Winget, alternate. Our Christian Workers' Meeting was organized, with Bro. John Taylor as president; Sister Eula Winget, secretary. —Eva Whitacre, R. D. 1, Portland, Ind., Feb. 21.

Nettle Creek.—We met in council Feb. 11. Considerable business came before the meeting. Several committees made their reports. We appointed our spring love feast for May 6, at 5 P. M., and our fall love feast Oct. 7, at 10 A. M. We elected Bro. Jesse Hunter, minister, and granted one letter.—Thos. W. Miller, New Lisbon, Ind., Feb. 20.

Second South Bend church met in special council Feb. 5, for the purpose of ordaining one of our ministers, Bro. J. Grater; also to elect two deacons. The lot fell on Brethren Jesse Hoffman and Bro. Wm. Hoffman, the latter installed. Brethren Eli Roose and Eli Heestand had charge of the work. —Bessie V. Hoffman, 203 South William St., South Bend, Ind., Feb. 20.

Somerset.—Bro. J. L. Mahon, of Van Buren, Ind., began our series of meetings at the Vernon house Jan. 31, and closed on until Feb. 20. He preached twenty-five sermons with great power. Many interest and the audiences were good throughout. Seven souls were made to accept Christ and were baptized. Seven were reclaimed. Bro. Mahon was a welcome visitor. The rest of them came from the Sunday-school. Others are near the threshold of the kingdom. Members were greatly fed. Many lasting impressions were made. The meetings closed with a full house.—Anna Mahon, Somerset, Ind., Feb. 20.

White.—A series of meetings in the White church, Corfax, Ind., conducted by Bro. Michael Flory, closed Feb. 19. Ten were baptized, and one was reclaimed.—Eliza P. Dunbar, Bowers, Ind., Feb. 20.

IOWA.

Curlew.—We are glad to report that our pastor, Bro. G. H. Brallier, has returned from Chicago, where he had been attending Bethany Bible Institute. He is much better equipped than ever. Bro. Brallier, by his self-sacrificing and consecrated efforts, is doing much good among the people. Sister Sadie Miller was with us two evenings last week, and spoke to the people with power, which was much to be felt. Also there were a number of the members sick at that time, still they were remembered in the Lord's house. Our sister was being dressed in Indian garb made the lecture real interest.—Grace Crosser, Curlew, Iowa, Feb. 22.

Pleasant Prairie church convened in council Feb. 9, at the home of Bro. Fred Earl. The meeting was presided over by our elder, Bro. Jacob Hoover, assisted by Brethren Wm. Hoffman, Eld. Tobias Myers, of Philadelphia, Pa., was also present. Encouraging reports were received and the spirit of the meeting and disposed of. We expect to have a series of meetings at this place, commencing the second Sunday in May. Preaching can be secured. Our Sunday-school will be organized about April 1.—Eld. A. B. Hixson, Fairview, Iowa, Feb. 21.

South Uttumwa.—Our hearts were made glad again, last Sunday night, when two young men and one young woman were baptized by Bro. Jesse Hoffman, of Ottumwa, making four others near the kingdom. The outlook for the future is bright. We have had a very pleasant year, and a good one this winter, through the kindness of the brethren and sisters. I know the Lord has blessed Bro. Jesse in his labors. (Matt. 25: 34). There have been many of the men out of work this winter, so the offerings would have suffered.—Geo. W. Burgin, 107 South Moore St., Ottumwa, Iowa, Feb. 22.

KANSAS.

McPherson.—Our church met in council Feb. 20, at 7:30 P. M., with Bro. Jacob Hoover, assisted by our pastor, Bro. J. J. Yoder, opened the meeting. Four letters were granted, and five were granted. We decided to elect ministers at our next regular meeting. Bro. MARYLAND.

All delegates are hereby notified to be present. Ministerial meeting at the last District Meeting. The elders meet May 2, at 10 A. M. Bro. Jacob Hoover, moderator.—Jacob Hoover, Dist. Sec. A change has been made by request of the Marsh Creek congregation.—E. S. Miller, Literberg, Md., Feb. 26.

MICHIGAN

Fressoil.—Our Sunday-school work is moving along fine. We have $20 in the Sunday-school treasury. One dear sister, Mrs. Mary Hamilton, died Sunday morning, at her home by an enraged father, because she united with the church. She was buried Monday. Funeral services were conducted. We took a sleigh ride to the home of a Swedish family, where religious services were held. Bro. Ulery preached a short sermon. After the sermon we were requested to say something in the English language. I told them that I was not in the ministry, but my husband was, so something and I responded to the call. I addressed the little audience for a little while in the best way I could, and I felt the Spirit resting on the stand. I picked it up, turned its leaves and called the attention of the people to the fact that the Swedish Bible contains the same Gospel that the English Bible does, and that our Swedish Christian Bible and the one all the people would practice what the Bibles teach, in all the commandments of the Lord, and live holy lives. While the meetings closed we received an urgent request for us to come several miles south of this place and hold services in a private home. We will gladly go there sometime soon, but the next future we will hold meetings at this place. We expect to organize our Sunday-school in April. In the near future, and then we hope to be in shape to do more effective work for the Master.—Daisy Hamilton, R. D. 1, Fremont, Mich., Feb. 20.

Hardwood Lake.—Feb. 6 Eld. J. P. Bowman, of Fountain City, Tenn., was here and bought land. He also preached for us, which was much appreciated. Bro. Bowman will move here in September.—We will then have thirty-six members, with one elder and one minister in the second degree. We expect to organize a Sunday-school in April. We try to make fifty. As soon as our elder gets here we expect to organize a church and commence to build a house of worship, which we are much in need of. We expect to have a street preacher here in the late part of Michigan in the near future. The Brethren were unknown here until a few years ago. Land is still reasonably cheap, and it is good farming land at that.—E. B. Welch, Hardwood Lake, Mich., Feb. 14.

Marion.—Last Sunday evening Eld. Aaron Moss, of Huntington, Ind., gave us a soul-cheering sermon. He took his departure for Peru, Ind., where he will spend a few months in the forenson. For the last fourteen months Bro. Moss' health has been very poor, but we are glad to be able to preach, but we are glad to see him go forth in the Master's service, as he is doing good work. Our Sunday-school is moving along very nicely. Although we have had much snow in Northern Michigan this winter, our attendance has been very good, especially among the children. We have from twenty to thirty scholars in our primary department each Sunday.—Rosa Weller, Copemish, Mich., Feb. 22.

NEBRASKA.

Highline church met in council Feb. 4, with our elder, Bro. Mishler, in charge. We expect to have our love feast sometime during the Brethren's meeting, as to begin sometime next month, to be conducted by Bro. A. C. Rock. We have the encouraging prospect of a better meeting house in the future. Mishler preached three helpful sermons while with us.—Katie E. Hoffert, Highline, Nebr., Feb. 6.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Brunswick Creek.—Eld. W. A. Reed, from Polk County, N. C., came to this place Jan. 20 and remained until the 29th. He preached eight sermons. Fourteen were baptized, one awaits the rite, and two were reclaimed. We feel greatly strengthened by Bro. Reed's visit. A new prayer meeting and Sunday-school at this place.—M. E. Griffith, Peppers, N. C., Feb. 20.

I will have a number of "Individual Queries" at the meeting, 1910, "All elders are to ascertain how many queries are to be sent in by the congregations." Delegates were elected to District Meeting and Annual Meeting were elected. As Bro. Reesbarger is soon to move to Kansas, the church has tendered the eldership of our church. Some of the members have subscribed for the gravel roads next spring, the proceeds of which amounted to $44.33 for the Rocky Ridge congregation. Big Cabin.—As we have just moved to this part of Oklahoma, and there are very few of our members here,—only two brethren and their wives, besides myself,—we would be glad to hear from some brethren who are in the market, to locate among us, to help build up a church. I feel that there is a good field here for a church. There is a live at Big Cabin Creek, about four and one-half miles east of Big Cabin, and about the same from Big Cabin. Lovejoy.—Feb. 11 we rejoiced because our dear Bro. James D. Hall and wife, of Waynesboro, Pa., came to this appointment and help in the work of the Master. He brought his mape along and taught the bible geography in connection with splendid sermons, which were very instructive. He preached ten sermons, besides several private services in the homes of those who were sick. We had several church services. Sister Sell did her part well in leading the song service, and gave us several good solos besides. Trent, Joseph C., son of Jacob and Frances Trent, born in Rockingham County, Va., Feb. 12, 1839, died at his home in Wheeling, Ind., Jan. 23, 1911, aged 71 years, 11 months and 11 days. He was married to Mary Ellen Kinsey in 1863, and together they lived happily for nearly fifty-nine years. This union was blest with six children, five of whom are living. In religious belief Mr. Trent was a Cumberland Presbyterian, and until a portion of this and the Old School Presbyterian church was attempted, he was an active, ruling elder in the reformed church. He was a man of more than ordinary attainments, having been a teacher in the country schools for twelve years, a master mechanic, and a Sunday-school superintendent and teacher for many years. Funeral services, by previous arrangements, were conducted by the writer in his own church, being assisted by Eld. Jacob Hoke, W. Clark, and a Methodist minister, Rev. Peterson, of Alexandria, Ind., who was a life-long friend of the deceased. Interment in the U. B. Cemetery, north of Wheeling.—A. G. Crosswhite, Flora, Ind.

Troup, Eld. Henry, born in Welland County, Can., Nov. 12, 1839, died at his home in Maxwell, Iowa, Feb. 11, 1911, aged 71 years, 3 months and 3 days. He was married in 1868 to Ann Rebecca Nailey. To this union were born six sons and one daughter. His wife and all the children except two, one of them except one son were present at the funeral. He was a member of the Brethren church for forty-five years, and a minister for thirty-five years. At the age of thirteen he moved with his parents to Indiana, at that time the wilderness he came to Iowa. In 1868 he purchased the farm home near Maxwell, where the active parts of life was spent, and the official duties of the ministry performed. In the Indian Creek church, near Maxwell, he was elected as deacon, and then to the ministry. He was afflicted for the past fifteen years with cancer, which finally caused his death. Services by Bro. Moses Deardorff, of Yale, Iowa. Text, 1 Thess. 4: 13-18. Interment in the Brethren cemetery on his own farm. —Rebecca Englehi, Maxwell, Iowa.

Weaver, B. Moses, born in Juniata County, Pa., April 22, 1836, died Feb. 8, 1911, in the bounds of the Pleasant View congregation, Ind., aged 74 years, 9 months and 16 days. In his youth he moved to St. Joseph County, Ind., where he was united in marriage to Lydia Miller Feb. 19, 1857. To this union were born two sons and three daughters, who, with their mother, survive him. He also leaves two brothers and two sisters. He was a member of the Mennonite church near Nappanee, Ind., for about forty-five years, from which place he only recently moved. Services at Pleasant Valley, Ind., by the undersigned and Martin Ramer (of the Mennonite church), near Nappanee, Ind.—John L. Mishler, Middlebury, Ind.

Weidman, Mrs. Anna, died Feb. 3, 1911, at the home of Bro. A. J. Soldomridge, 801 Columbia Avenue, Lancaster, Pa., aged 79 years. She had been in failing health for a long time. Her death was hastened by a fall a few weeks ago. Services at the above-named place by Mr. Hinkle, of Easton, Pa., and the writer. Text, Job 5: 26. Interment in Greenwood cemetery. —H. B. Yoder, 343 Charlotte Street, Lancaster, Pa.

Widder, Bro. Joseph, born in Cumberland County, Pa., Feb. 4, 1833, died Feb. 19, 1911, aged 78 years and 6 days. He resided on his birthplace until late spring when he moved to Huntsdale, Pa. He was united in marriage to Elizabeth Master. To this union were born four children, two of whom survived by his wife and children. He was a consistent member and was interested in the welfare of the church. Services by Eld. Samuel M. Stouffer, assisted by Bro. John Miller. Interment in the Huntsdale cemetery.—A. A. Evans, R. D. 8, Carlisle, Pa.

Wise, Bro. Daniel, son of Peter V. and Susan Wise, born Feb. 3, 1827, at Harrisburg, Pa., died Feb. 9, 1911, near Bridgerstown, Ind. He was brought by his parents to Indiana when he was a child. March 21, 1850, he was married to Susan Shultz. To this union eight children were born. Three preceded him to the spirit world. His wife died April 16, 1906. About forty-two years ago he united with the Church of the Brethren, in which he labored faithfully for a number of years. During his recent illness he became much concerned about himself, and seems to have made his peace with God. He always lived the plain, humble life. Services at the Bethel church by Eld. Abram Bowman, assisted by Elders L. W. Teeter and D. E. Bowman. Text, Eccles. 12: 1. Interment in the cemetery near by.—Chas. W. Miller, New Lisbon, Ind.

Yant, Bro. Daniel, born in Stark County, Ohio, March 30, 1837, died in the Hospital in Boise City, Idaho, Jan. 26, 1911, aged 83 years, 9 months and 27 days. Bro. Yant was married to Naomi Hudson Jan. 13, 1853. To them were born eight children. Three of them have preceded him to the heavenly home. Two daughters and three sons are living. His wife died in June, 1903. He united with the Brethren church in 1864 and lived a faithful member until death. During his last painful sickness with great Christian fortitude. Funeral at Nampa, his home, by the writer, from Job 5: 26.—J. H. Graybill, Boise, Idaho.

A Twentieth Century Allegory.

Mr. World and Miss Church-Member

By Rev. W. S. Harris.

It is a forcible allegory, somewhat after the style of Pilgrim's Progress, but in no sense an imitation of it. Fathers and mothers, it is the book that you should get for your son and daughter, and read a little more real it yourself. You will be stronger for the church after having read it. It illustrates vividly how Satan fights church member, step by step, from the pure Gospel, till finally he is lost forever.

Illustrated by 18 full-page drawings, the work of Paul J. Krafft.

Notes from Our Correspondents.

believe many lasting impressions were made.—Clarence E. Long, Mechanicsburg, Pa., Feb. 25.

Manor.—Our church met in council Feb. 11, with Bro. Albert Hollinger presiding. Our aged elder, Bro. C. L. Frouts, being sick with la grippe, was not able to be present. Much business came before the meeting. One letter of membership was received, and offe was granted. We will hold our love feast May 6 and 7, at 2 P. M. We decided to hold four series of meetings in the congregation.—Ida M. Lightner, Quitysburg, Pa., Feb. 20.

Notice.—The District Meeting of Southern Pennsylvania will be held in the Upper Codorus congregation, near Black Rock house, May 3. The elders' meeting and the organization will be May 2.—P. D. Anthony, Waynesboro, Pa., Feb. 21.

Plum Creek.—Our church met in council Feb. 11, Bro. Replogle presided. Our officers for the new year were elected. Bro. Murray Ankeny is our choir leader. Chas. Irvin, treasurer; Bro. H. S. Replogle, correspondent; Bro. J. F. Kimmel, superintendent of the Sunday-school at 2 P. M. Our Messenger agent, and also our delegate to District Meeting. Our spring revival and love feast will be during the latter half of June.—H. S. Replogle, R. D. 1, Shelocta, Pa., Feb. 13.

Spring Creek.—Our series of meetings, conducted at the Spring Creek house by Eld. Galen B. Royer, closed on Sunday. He preached thirteen sermons. The church has been built up in the most holy faith. The meetings were inspiring, as well as the two experience meetings.—Mrs. Harrison Gleb, Palmyra, Pa., Feb. 21.

West Conestoga.—We closed a series of metings in the Lititz house on the 19th. Bro. H. K. Ober, of Elizabethtown, preached sermons for us, and also Bro. Geo. Wenger, of Ephrata, continued the meetings. One young lady was made willing to follow the Master.—H. N. Hess, Lititz, Pa., Feb. 24.

West Johnstown.—Eld. J. J. Shaffer came to our congregation on Sunday, Feb. 5, and began evangelistic services in our D. shurchhouse. He continued until Feb. 16, when he was compelled to close the meetings on account of illness. Though short from a very strong start at the very beginning, he preached some excellent sermons. Two were baptized and much good seed was sown.—Bro. Shaffer is an earnest worker, and we were so sorry to see the meetings close just as the harvest time. Our prayer and hope now is to continue the meetings, but he took sick himself the following evening. We are planning for a Bible Institute in our congregation, with Brother J. M. and Sister Blough in charge, if they can be with us early in the summer.—J. H. Cassady, Fourth Street, Johnstown, Pa., Feb. 25.

VIRGINIA.

Antioch.—Bro. H. J. Woodie came to this place and began a series of meetings Feb. 13, continuing until Feb. 19. The attendance at these meetings was good. Bro. Woodie presented the Word of Life unto us in much power. His manner of presenting the truth strengthened the members spiritually. One decided to unite with us, and we believe that others were made to realize their unsaved condition.—Martha Mitchell, Wirta, Va., Feb. 26.

Meadow.—Jan. 29 the members from Midland, Nokesville and Fairfax met with us in a joint Christian Workers' Meeting. It was an inspiring meeting, which, we believe, will give new life to the work. We have taken at least one step forward, so far, this year. Our Sunday-school, which heretofore was kept up only nine months in the year, will be reversed. We praise the Lord that this is possible.—Alice C. Blough, Manassas, Va., Feb. 22.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Valley River.—The District Mission Board met in this congregation, Clarksburg, W. Va., Feb. 15. We have arranged to open up some new points. If we can secure a house, we will open in Clarksburg, and also in Weston. The next District Meeting made the Sunday-school work a part of the mission work, and placed it under the charge of the Board. We have arranged to do more and better work than during any year previous.—C. A. Ogden, Thornton, W. Va., Feb. 22.

NOTES NOT CLASSIFIED.

Brookville.—Our church met in council Feb. 22. Ten letters were granted. Bro. Joseph Robbins was advanced to the second degree of the ministry. Bro. Jesse Gump was elected as delegate to Annual Meeting. Brethren A. E. Hay and Levi Zumbrun were elected as delegates to District Meeting.—Mrs. Ezra Kimmel, R. D. 3, Brookville, Ohio, Feb. 24.

Pleasant Hill church met in council Feb. 11 for elder. Bro. Jesse Gump, presided. We organized our Sunday-school with Sister Jennie Gump as superintendent. We also decided to hold a series of meetings, beginning March 4, with Bro. G. L. Studebaker in charge. The date of our love feast was set for June 10.—Elsie E. Jackson, Leotta, Ind., Feb. 18.

Denair.—Last Sunday Bro. C. M. Suter, of Franklin Grove, Ill., preached for us. Bro. Seibert, of Empire, Cal., and Brother and Sister Daniel Heckman, of Illinois, were also with us. Brother and Sister Heckman are visiting some of the town for a while. Several brethren were here last week, looking at the country. Our Sunday-school is doing nicely. We are still looking for a minister to locate here.—Effie C. Mahoney, Denair, Cal., Feb. 22.

Chippewa Creek church met in quarterly council at 2 P. M., Feb 23. Our elder, S. M. Smith, not being able to be with us, Bro. Frederick, our former elder, took charge of the meeting. There was not much business. We decided to hold our love feast June 17, at 10 A. M.—Laura R. Kepner, R. D. 1, Rittman, Wayne, Ohio, Feb. 28.

Nobleville.—Our church convened in council Feb. 25, at 7:30 P. M. Our elder, Bro. William Burcham, presided. Brethren Eli Smeltzer and James Hill, of the Arcadia church, were with us, and assisted us in our work. Bro. William Burcham was elected elder for another year; Bro. David Baltzell, clerk; and Bro. Hollinger, presiding elder. The church at this place is not very large, but we feel that God's blessings are upon us. Fellow visiting brethren gave us some encouraging and helpful talks.—E. E. Stern, 212 East Grant Street, Noblesville, Ind., Feb. 27.

Garrett.—Bro. Jesse Ober, of Willis Rodabaugh, of Frederic, Iowa, pleasantly surprised us by stepping into our services. He gave us a fine gospel address, taking his text from 1 Kings 19: 13, latter clause. Our attendance has fallen off considerably the past few days on account of the rain. But with the opening of spring we are expecting an increase of attendance and interest. We have been holding in the ministry and communities, where only a few are indifferent. It is needed in your school. It will work in every community, whether city or country, where one or more persons are out of the Sunday school.—Mrs. Ida Ober, Garrett, Ind., Feb. 27.

Bethel.—Eld. David Metzler, of Nappanee, Ind., came to us Feb. 8, and conducted a series of very spiritual meetings at the Milford house, which closed Feb. 24. He labored very earnestly among us, as a result the members were much encouraged and built up spiritually. Two were received into the church by baptism, and others are very near the kingdom.—Ella Arnold, Milford, Ind., Feb. 26.

Mount Morris.—We have just had a three weeks' series of meetings, conducted by Bro. Olin Shaw, of Dixon, Ill. This attracted large audiences from the start. He came unto us the "Bread of Life" with much power and wisdom. Fourteen accepted Christ and were baptized, and others made to confess their sins and come into the fold. His practical, wholesome manner of presenting the truth did much toward the spiritual upbuilding of the members here.—Ella Brunskill, Mount Morris, Ill., Feb. 27.

FRUITDALE, ALABAMA.

Our church met Feb. 11, at 2 P. M., for the purpose of holding a council meeting. Bro. Grim Wolfe was elected to the ministry, and Bro. Paul Prahl was elected to the office of deacon. Both were installed into office. Two letters, recommending Bro. Kinsey and wife, were received. After these services were over, the brethren prepared for a love feast, which was much enjoyed by those present. Bro. S. G. Nickey closed his meetings on the evening of Feb. 17. There were no accessions, although our brother labored very earnestly. The members were much built up.

In my article in the issue of Feb. 18 I spoke of Bro. Wine going to the State Line Mission to baptize one, but a surprise was in store for him, as he baptized four while there, making fourteen that have united since Bro. Nickey is with us. Four of these left their membership at Fruitdale, while the other ten will hold their membership at the Wayne Mission. Brethren Nickey and Wine went to the Wayne Mission today, to baptize two of the ten that could not be baptized before. They are also expecting others to unite with the fold, while they are there this time. We feel greatly encouraged that the work has been so successful, as we see it, and feel that there should be more effort put forth. We also feel as though others could see our need and assist us as Bro. Nickey has.—Fruitdale, Ala., Feb. 18. Francis M. White.

TO THE ELDERS.

The General Temperance Committee desires to lay it upon the hearts of the leading elders in each District to see that the Minutes of Annual Conference for 1908 and 1909, concerning Temperance Committees be regarded at their next District Meeting. Ten Districts have so far failed even to appoint a committee. Each year, most likely, the committee will need some revision. Moreover the District Temperance Committee should be required to report annually to the delegates at the District Meeting. Send the names of your elected District Committees to the secretary of the General Temperance Committee, W. M. Howe, 1012 Bedford St., Johnstown, Pa.

Minutes of Annual Meeting from 1778-1909

This voume contains every known minute of the proceedings of the general conferences held by the Church of the Brethren to the Year of our Lord 1909. Many interesting things relative to the problems of church government and decisions upon methods of solving them, nowhere else published, are here recorded. The Minutes also record for the reader the firm stand the Brethren maintained through the years in reference to their opposition to war, intemperance, secretism, worldliness, etc. They also show the change and growth of sentiment in relation to the educational, missionary, and Sunday-school movement in the Brotherhood, and how these departments of work have grown. Taking it all in all, it is one of the books which has a right to a place in the library of every Brethren home. This is a $2.50 book, but in order to bring it within the reach of all the price is placed at $1.50, which is just the cost of manufacturing and postage.

DAYBREAK IN THE DARK CONTINENT

By Wilson S. Taylor.

For centuries Africa has been groping along in spiritual darkness. Is there any hope for the break of day? Read the book. It will tell you of much that has been done, of present conditions and of future prospects. Bishop Hartzell, the writer of the introduction, says,

"The author is exceptionally well qualified to write on Africa. His extensive, intensive, previous and subsequent researches, he spent a year as my traveling companion, diligently studying at first hand (on both coasts and in widely separated sections) the continent and its people."

The book contains a number of illustrations showing the methods of life and the changes that have been wrought by the introduction of Christianity; also several maps which are of great value in helping to make the contents intelligible.

THE GOSPEL MESSENGER

Vol. 50. (Old Series Vol. 66.) Elgin, Ill., March 11, 1911. No. 10.

AROUND THE WORLD

"Boy Scouts" Denounced.

We have, in past issues, referred to the objectionable features connected with this movement, and the recent action of the Illinois Mine Workers, at their meeting in Springfield, Ill., calls renewed attention to the fact that the whole aim and purpose of the "Boy Scouts" is but "a scheme to force an era of un-American militarism upon the nation." Other bodies of thoughtful men are taking the same view of the question, and that being the case, it would seem to be high time for the churches of our land to cease commending an organization that is manifestly prejudicial to the best interests of either church or state. The whole aim of the "Scouts" is contrary to the nonresistant principles of the loving Christ.

Cave-Dwellers in Roumania.

Strange as it may appear, there are still 54,000 cave-dwellings in the part of Eastern Europe referred to by our heading. More than a quarter of a million peasants live in circumstances almost as primitive as those of the ancient cave-dwellers of the stone age. The old-time implements of agriculture are still in evidence in this remote region, and the manners and customs of ages long in the past are still being observed. There seems to be, among these people, a determined purpose to shut out all real improvement. It is conservatism carried to a point where it shuts out all possibility of advancement. They stand greatly in need of civilizing agencies, but still more so in need of Christianity. That alone can give them what they most need.

A Forcible Lesson.

The recent death of a prisoner in the jail at Montreal, Canada, beset by the horrors of delirium tremens, was, by its attending circumstances, a practical object lesson on the ravages of the drink curse. Only because of a naturally rugged constitution was he enabled to reach the age of three score and ten, but what a life! Forty years, in the aggregate, were spent in various jails and prisons. The rest of his time was given to debauchery and lounging around bar-rooms and low groggeries. The bar paid for the privilege of making him a drunkard; the country paid the inevitable penalty of folly by maintaining policemen, courts and jails, to dispose of the legitimate product of its licensed saloons. And yet there are thousands of people who affirm that it is "good business" to legalize the traffic which does all this and more.

Closing the Mails on Sunday.
